This Nation was shocked and saddened to learn last December 16 that Bob Vance had been killed by a mail bomb delivered to his home in Birmingham. His wife was badly injured by this crime that to this date has not been solved. This was the first in a series of malicious and cowardly mail bombings that maimed and killed public figures whose only crime was passionate dedication to their jobs.

Judge Vance was appointed in 1978 to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit. He was highly regarded by his peers and by the people of Alabama. It is appropriate to name the Federal building for Judge Robert Vance to honor his contributions to the American judicial system. It is also important to preserve his place in history in this manner so that we will never forget that Americans still die defending the values they cherish and to insure that vestiges of prejudice in our society will not be tolerated.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill to honor a man who gave his life for the ideals he promoted on the Federal bench.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ERDREICH], the author of the bill.

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me. I appreciate the chairman's expeditious movement of this bill through his committee, and thank the gentleman from California [Mr. Bosco], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI], for their assistance in moving this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, my bill, H.R. 3961, would honor the late Judge Robert S. Vance, an outstanding citizen and most distinguished U.S. circuit court judge who resided in my district in Birmingham, AL. He was killed on December 16, 1989 when a bomb concealed in a package that was mailed to his home exploded.

Judge Vance was appointed to serve as a member of the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in 1977 from which his Eleventh circuit court later evolved. He maintained his Birmingham office in the Federal building for most of his judicial career.

The Federal building, which is a near-replica of the post office in Washington, DC, and on the National Register of Historic Places, is currently undergoing a year-long renovation, and will house the Bankruptcy Court, military recruiting offices, the General Services Administration, and congressional offices.

I believe it is fitting that we in Birmingham, the State of Alabama, and the Nation honor this man whose judicial skill was matched only by his high standards as a man, by the redesignation of the Federal building as the "Judge Robert S. Vance Federal Building and Courthouse" when the renovated building is unveiled later this year.

My bill has received the endorsement of the city of Birmingham and the Birmingham Bar Association, as well as Judge Vance's fellow judges in active and senior service of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Judicial Circuit.

As we see democracy sweep away totalitarian regimes around the world, we are constantly reminded how we, as individuals participants in this great democracy of ours, put the words of our democratic ideals into reality. President Havel of Czechoslavakia said it eloquently in his address to Congress on February 21, 1990:

> When Thomas Jefferson wrote that, "Governments are instituted among Men deriving their just Powers from the Consent of the Governed," it was a simple and important act of the human spirit. What gave meaning to that act, however, was the fact that the author backed it up with his life. It was not just his words, it was his deeds as well.

Bob Vance, with his deeds and his life, gave meaning to our democracy, where men govern their fellow men under a system of laws.

We in Congress can honor this great man and make a statement to the Nation about this act of violence against Judge Vance and our system of government. I urge my colleagues in the House to support me in this effort.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the chairman for bringing this important piece of legislation. I would just like to say, as a former sheriff, this is appropriate and I think everybody is proud to vote for this measure today.

But I would like to say something: I think just naming a building for this courageous judge who was willing to be progressive in an area where it paid, and he paid dearly with his life for his fairness; I believe naming the building is not enough.

We lose, and we have murdered in America, one policeman every second day. We have had three judges assassinated in the last 5 years. We had an American President, a Senator seeking the Presidency and a very powerful international leader of consequence assassinated.

What is Congress doing about it?

What is dangerous about the case with Judge Vance is that somebody, if he does not like the decisions of the court, they kill the judge. Does this ring a bell? That was happening in Columbia; prosecutors being shot and killed, judges being shot and killed. Everybody said, "Hey, what is the use of it? Why take a position?", down there. It leads to anarchy.

I have taken this time because I think America and our Congress should pass a law to remember Judge Vance. I am not going to deal with the issues of States' rights today, but I think any public official dispatching their duties who is assassinated should be protected under a Federal statute or law.

Any informant or witness in a trial, any police officer, judge or prosecutor.

I think that is where we should be, ladies and gentleman.

So we come here every so often and we name a building after someone, but we are going to be continuing to name buildings after judges, prosecutors who are shot down by people who do not like their decisions.

I think Congress has a right and a duty today to try to protect those Americans who are attempting to mete out justice according to the Constitution of our country.

I am very proud today, from the law enforcement community, to pay my respects with my vote here today on this particular piece of legislation. I hope Congress will look at safeguards protecting our courts, the witnesses, our policemen, and public officials who can become in fact targets of disgruntled Americans.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3961, a bill to redesignate the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, as the Robert S. Vance Federal Building. The cowardly act which ended Judge Robert Vance's earthly life, did not diminish the memory of his spirit, nor the quality of the justice which he brought to his fellow men over his long and distinguished career of service as a judge, as chairman of the Democratic Party in Alabama, and as a son, father, and husband.

Judge Vance led the Alabama Democratic Party with reason, courage, and intelligence through a troubled time. With the power of reason, he integrated the party against the voices of the past. With the power of reason, he helped people to see that justice for all is not served when justice is denied to any individual. The power of Judge Vance's clear reasoning remains, and will always remain stronger than the violence and hate which he fought against. Wherever justice is served, Judge Vance's spirit will be present, and so it is fitting that this courthouse be named for Robert S. Vance, a man who devoted his life to securing the rights of us all under the U.S. Constitution.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill.

By any measure, Judge Vance is worthy of having the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, named in his honor. But it is an action we should not have to be taking today. By rights, Judge Vance should have had many more years of service to the people of Alabama still ahead of him.

An act of cowardice has denied this to him.

Whether this was an act of retaliation for some imagined grievance or merely a random and irrational act, it was nevertheless an act of terrorism. It is a reminder to all, whether we serve the public interest or are victims of a wanton act, that there are those who hold human life in such low regard. Acts of terrorism cannot be tolerated. Humanity suffers when terrorists strike and is diminished when they are not brought to justice.

Judge Robert Vance was a man of integrity and of intellect who in no way deserved his fate. The American judicial system and the people of Alabama have been well and faithfully served over this man's lifetime. The honor we extend today is insufficient to this good man's service to all of us, and I urge adoption of this bill.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to a former judge, our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, in the normal course of events, when we act to name a public building or structure after an individual, we do so as a memorial as a recognition of a full and well-lived life reflecting the highest ideals of public service and contributions to the betterment of one's community. By attaching their name to a structure, we seek to keep alive their memory and example.

What should be a joyful occasion. This act of commemoration has, in the case of my fellow member of the Alabama Bar, Judge Robert S. Vance, become a sad and solemn act. Judge Vance was murdered. He was murdered because he served our Nation and upheld our Constitution. As a judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th circuit, Robert Vance was the highest ranking Federal judge to be assassinated. The assassin who ended Robert Vance's life chose a cowardly and deceptive means to attack this honorable public servant. It was shortly before Christmas when Judge Vance and his wife received a package delivered to their home, bearing the return address of one of his fellow judges. As he stood in their kitchen, unwrapping this apparent gift from a friend, Judge Vance's body was ripped apart by a bomb, a bomb which included not only an explosive, but nails intended to further maim any who were within its range. Indeed, Helen Vance was, herself, severely injured in the blast. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is continuing its hunt for the bomber, and we in the Congress must see that the FBI continues to make this matter its highest priority, for it is clear that the bomber, in killing Judge Vance, intended to strike directly at the administration of justice in this country.

Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I spoke of how the naming of a public structure after a noble public servant should be a joyful act. I have no doubt that had Judge Vance's life and career not been so tragically cut short, we would still wish to venerate his memory. Though Bob Vance was estremely active in State and National Democratic Party politics once he was appointed to the Federal bench, there was never any question that his decisions were in any way partisan. Perhaps the greatest tribute to his judicial and judicious temperament came from the chief judge of the 11th circuit, Gerald Tjoflat, who said of Robert Vance, "He was a judge's judge."

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues in the Alabama delegation, my fellow members of the Alabama State Bar, and at the request of the members of the Federal bench in the 11th circuit, I ask that this House approve the designation of the Federal Building in Birmingham as the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building."

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I might note that the first position Judge Vance ever held in the Federal Government was as a page in this House. It is fitting that, as a final act commemorating his public service, this House approve the legislation now before it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BROWDER], a former member of our Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Mr. BROWDER. Mr. Speaker, Bob Vance began his career of public service as a page in this House, as my colleagues has just noted. He served the public throughout, and with his life. I can think of no better epitaph. So why, if there is no finer epitaph, are we prepared to vote today? Our action is not to write last words but to remark upon the life of a man devoted to justice.

A coward's bomb ended his life. It took from Americans a man of unquestioned integrity. It robbed Americans of an able jurist. It killed a friend. That coward's bomb mocks Americans. It mocks the rule of law. It echoes in empty rooms as long as we forget the justice it martyred. It cowers Members if we do not stamp out its noise by honoring the service of Judge Vance.

The Robert S. Vance Federal Building will not be a memorial. It will be a symbol. Memorials mark the end of things. Let our actions today remind Americans that violence cannot set aside justice. Fear cannot deter truth. Mr. Speaker, I ask for this House to support adoption of H.R. 3961 to honor the ideals of justice and service represented in the life of Judge Robert Smith Vance.

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, in this limited forum, it is impossible for me to adequately describe the tremendous contribution Judge Robert S. Vance made to Alabama during his lifetime or to measure, in any way, the magnitude of the loss our State has suffered because of his tragic death.

When an insidious package bomb exploded at the Vance home this past Christmas season, our Nation lost more than a brilliant and fair-minded Federal judge in the 11th Circuit Court. We lost a person of great courage and rare insight; a character and spirit of such strength that he was capable of bringing out the best in people even in the worst of times.

I am here today to support the redesignation of the Federal building in Birmingham, where Judge Vance served during most of his judicial career. H.R. 3961, a bill introduced by my colleague, Representative BEN ERDREICH, would rename the building the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building."

I had known Judge Vance for many years and I believe this is an apt memorial for a man who fought for equal justice and strove consistently to uphold the integrity of our laws.

In addition to his remarkable work as a trial lawyer and a judge, Vance played a key role in Alabama politics as a voice of reason during a period of upheaval.

By the early 1960's, when Vance was becoming involved in politics, a searing split had begun to develop in the Alabama Democratic Party. The growing influence of segregationists in the controlling committee of the State party caused infighting that was tearing the party apart and alienating it from the National Democratic Party.

At this point, Robert Vance stepped in and supplied the leadership and conviction needed to keep the party together and move it forward.

He stood firmly for justice and equality and had the courage to hold his ground during an era of great confusion about civil rights issues and resistance to change.

He also pushed for election law reform, for tougher financial disclosure laws, and for progressive changes in the nominations of Presidental delegates. He served as a delegate himself in the riot-torn National Democratic convention in 1968 and served again at the conventions in 1972 and 1976.

It is a sad fact that we cannot redeem what we have lost with the death of Judge Robert S. Vance. We can, however, pay tribute and express our gratitude for his life and accomplishments.

The redesignation of the Federal building in Birmingham is a fitting honor to Judge Vance and will help ensure that his service will always be remembered.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, today I stand in the Halls of Congress, in the "people's Chamber," to express my support for H.R. 3961, a bill to rename a U.S. Courthouse in Birmingham, AL, after Judge Robert Vance, who was killed when a bomb mailed to him exploded on December 16, 1989.

Judge Vance's superb judicial career was tragically cut short by a cowardly act of terrorism. I believe that this legislation would create an appropriate memorial to a distinguished career of service to the people of the United States and the State of Alabama.

Judge Vance began his service at an early age as a page in this body. During the Korean conflict, he was on active duty with the Army as a judge advocate, and he subsequently retired from the Army Reserve as a lieutenant colonel. When the Korean conflict ended, he returned to Alabama and practiced law, with distinction, in Birmingham until January 3, 1978, when he assumed the office of Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. On October 1, 1981, as a result of the division of the Fifth Circuit, he became a member of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit.

Mr. Speaker, Judge Vance's contributions to the Federal bench, and thus to the cause of justice, were many. He was a man of great courage; a scholar blessed with common sense. He was a judge's judge. The renaming of this courthouse in his honor will serve as an inspiration for all who strive for equal justice under law.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to lend my voice in support of my colleague from Alabama's bill to redesignate the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, the Robert S. Vance Federal Building in honor of Judge Robert S. Vance who was tragically murdered on December 16, 1989.

His death was the most recent in what has become a peculiar and futile phenomenon of attempting to destroy greatness.

I never met Judge Vance. That was my loss. I have read and heard of Judge Vance's significant actions during the beginning of the civil rights movement.

As a trial lawyer in Birmingham, AL, Vance was a realistic and pragmatic man. By the early sixties, he understood that the reign of segregation was nearing its end on the national political scene. The long subjugated and submerged civil rights proponents had begun to mobilize in a mass movement to obtain basic human rights. However, the segregationists forces were gaining impetus in Alabama and other States of the Deep South. Their reemergence and successful pursuit of their political agenda would mean the demise of the nascent civil rights movement.

In an effort to reap political gain from this backlash movement of segregationists, the State Democratic Party began to move away from the national party in an attempt to gain favor with the burgeoning segregationist forces. This policy of defiant resistance, was about to cause confusion and derision in the southern Democratic stronghold. It was at that time that Vance ascended to the chairmanship of the Alabama State Democratic Party. Vance wanted to forge a platform and an atmosphere which would allow the State party to remain in step with the national Democratic party. Although there were powerful contradictory forces, during his tenure Vance was able to keep the State party in line with the national party. Vance held the chairmanship of the party for 11 years. He initiated the political wrangling necessary to fully integrate the all-white Democratic Party. One of his first public efforts was to cause the removal of the rooster—a longtime symbol of white supremacy—from the party's election ballots and campaign paraphernalia. Although a small step, this was not insignificant. The removal of the rooster held symbolic importance for blacks and whites. For blacks, the demise of the rooster renewed hope for the dawning of a new day. For whites, the message was clear that change would come quietly and peacefully if it were not opposed.

In essence, Judge Vance was a valiant man. He tried to achieve change without fanfare or self-aggrandizement. This Federal building should be named to honor a man who believed and acted to bring about quiet but forceful change to benefit all people.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3961, which would redesignate the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, as the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building."

This bill honors my late friend Bob Vance who was tragically murdered last year when a mail bomb exploded at his home. The attack on Judge Vance was a shocking act of terrorism which struck us close to home. Our Nation and our State lost a very fine man and a very fine judge.

I think it is very fitting that the Federal building in Birmingham, where Judge Vance maintained an office, should be named in his memory and to his honor.

I knew Bob Vance for many, many years. I valued his friendship and his wise counsel. He was a brilliant thinker and a man of integrity. He was plain-spoken and he had a great sense of humor. He was a very fine judge, not only because he knew the law, but also because he had common sense and he was fair.

Bob Vance's contributions to Alabama and his service on the U.S. Court of Appeals will always be remembered. Naming the Federal building for him will be a lasting tribute.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise in support of H.R. 3961, a bill to designate the U.S. Courthouse in Birmingham, AL, after Judge Robert Vance. It is certainly fitting that we honor a man whose intelligence and thoughtfulness on the bench was an inspiration to his colleagues.

Robert Vance's political career began early as he served as a congressional page in the House. Later Vance went on to serve as Alabama State Democratic Chairman for 11 years. During his tenure, the Democratic Party pushed for campaign reform and later adopted a rule requiring its candidates to disclose their finances before the party primary elections.

In recognition of his commitment to the Democratic Party and his skills as a lawyer, President Carter appointed Robert Vance to serve as a member of the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Vance was later assigned to the Eleventh U.S. Circuit Court.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to be able to recognize Robert Vance today. His belief in the Democratic system and contribution to the cause of justice were admired by many. I do not believe that there is a single person that does not hold him in the highest esteem. Designation of the U.S. Courthouse in Birmingham as the Robert Smith Vance United States Courthouse will serve as an inspiration to all of us who strive for the truth.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, today, the House will consider legislation to redesignate the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building." I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this bill.

The deplorable act of violence that took the life of Judge Vance was an affront to our sensibilities and to our system of justice. Whether motivated by racism, revenge, or just plain unadulterated hatred, the murder of Judge Vance is to be condemned.

Judge Vance dedicated his life's work to the pursuit of justice in the Federal judicial system, and it is fitting that the newly renovated Federal building should be named after him. The Robert S. Vance Federal Building will stand as a reminder to us all that we must continue to pursue truth and justice in our society, and in our system of government.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague from Alabama for introducing this legislation, to rename the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, after Federal Judge Robert Vance.

Judge Vance had a long and distinguished political career in Alabama, and his contributions involved reasoned judgment and support for civil rights at a time when the Southern States were facing enormous racial turmoil.

In 1977, he was appointed by President Jimmy Carter to serve on the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, and he was later assigned to the Eleventh U.S. Circuit, based in Atlanta.

His service in the judiciary was marked by distinction, and his death was an unfortunate and violent end to a man who had dedicated himself to calming political waters. As a tribute to his service as a Federal judge and political leader, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this bill.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3961, legislation under consideration today to honor Judge Robert Smith Vance, a distinguished member of the Eleventh U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, who was killed on December 16, 1989, when a bomb mailed to his home exploded.

H.R. 3961 honors Judge Vance by redesignating the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, where Judge Vance maintained an office for most of his judicial career, as the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building." A dedicated member of the Eleventh Circuit Court, Judge Vance had a long and distinguished career as an attorney and judge. This legislation serves as a tribute to his contributions to the Federal bench and serves as an inspiration for all who strive for equal justice.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives is called upon frequently to consider legislation to name Federal facilities after prominent Americans. Often, I am aware of such proceedings but feel little need to participate in the consideration of these worthwhile measures.

Today, however, as we consider H.R. 3961, which will rename the U.S. Courthouse in Birmingham, AL, after Judge Robert S. Vance, I believe it is important for me to show my support publicly for this measure and my deepest regards for the life of this man.

Although I did not know Judge Vance personally, as some of you did, I was well aware of his outstanding service as Democratic Party Chairman for the State of Alabama and Federal appeals court judge.

As you have heard today, Judge Vance was a voice of calm and reason during a turbulent time in the history of Alabama State politics. He was also a champion of election law reform and equal rights for all Americans.

The irrational and abhorrent act that ended the life of this outstanding American must not go unpunished. Steps must be taken to prevent such a tragedy from ever occurring again.

In the meantime, it is only just that the U.S. courthouse in Birmingham be renamed the Robert Smith Vance United States Courthouse. It will stand as a fitting memorial for the principles and actions of a great man.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of H.R. 3961 I am proud to join its sponsor, my friend and colleague BEN ERDREICH of Birmingham, in paying tribute to a dedicated Federal judge, the late Robert S. Vance.

Last December a cowardly, terrorist act deprived our Nation of one of its most distinguished appellate court judges, Robert S. Vance. Unfortunately, we will never be able to repair the damage that bomb has done, either to the judicial system or to Judge Vance's family. Nonetheless, our action today sends a message to terrorists everywhere that their acts of violence are counterproductive, and serve only to redouble our resolve to press forward for the causes and ideals that Judge Vance believed in, and embodied.

As a former House page myself I take great pride in noting that Judge Vance's long and distinguished career in public service began as a page in this House. After service in the Army as a judge advocate during the Korean war, he practiced law and was active in Democratic Party affairs in Birmingham, including three distinguished terms as State party chairman.

Throughout the tumultuous years of the 1960's and 1970's in Alabama, Bob Vance was a leader in efforts to move the party forward, to integrate its affairs, and to make it once again the party of all the people. In accomplishing this goal he frequently went up against, and beat, a formidable foe, Gov. George Wallace. He was also an early advocate of State election law reform and State campaign finance disclosure.

Appointed to the fifth circuit court of appeals by President Jimmy Carter in 1977, Judge Vance was later assigned to the eleventh circuit in Atlanta when the fifth circuit was divided into two parts. As a judge he continued to be a force for integration, serving as the presiding member of a three-judge panel which ruled in favor of further desegregation of Alabama's system of higher education. While we regret he is no longer with us, we can be reassured by the fact that his judicial legacy will live on for many years.

Mr. Speaker, his colleagues on the 11th circuit have called Judge Vance, "a man of great courage, a scholar blessed with common sense," "a judge's judge," and a man whose "contributions to the federal bench, and thus to the cause of justice, were many."

The judges of the 11th circuit have unanimously asked us to rename the U.S. Courthouse at 1800 Fifth Avenue North in Birmingham, AL, where Judge Smith maintained an office for most of his judicial career, as the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building." By passing Congressman ERDREICH'S bill, H.R. 3961, we will be taking a first, important step, in achieving this goal and in commemorating Judge Vance's service to our Nation.

I join all my colleagues in sending my best wishes and deepest sympathies to Judge Vance's widow, who was also injured in the bomb blast which claimed his life, and to his children.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my strong support for this bill which would name a Federal building in Birmingham, AL, in honor of the late Judge Robert S. Vance.

Last December, Judge Vance was killed, and his wife seriously injured, when a mail bomb exploded in their Birmingham home.

Like some other Members, I had met with Judge Vance just a few weeks before his death when he visited my office in his capacity as chairman of the Space and Facilities Committee of the Judicial Conference. During our conversation, I was taken by his warm Southern manner and his obvious dedication to his work.

We often fail to recognize that our Federal judges may serve at great personal risk. Although it has not yet been determined who was responsible for this violent act, it is believed that Judge Vance may have become a target as a result of rulings on civil rights cases.

Mr. Speaker, as a lasting tribute to the memory of Judge Vance, it is appropriate that the building where he spent most of his judicial career be designated as the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building and United States Courthouse."

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3961. This bill will name the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, after the late Judge Robert Vance. I can think of no one more deserving of such an honor than Judge Vance. During his career as an attorney, Democratic Party official, and as a Federal judge, Judge Vance dedicated himself to building the New South. He represented the best of southern leadership and tradition.

It was his stewardship of the Alabama Democratic Party that helped ease Alabama's transition from an era of exclusion to one of interracial political cooperation. He brought people together instead of driving them apart. He was a healer.

Judge Vance sought to build a new society. He had the courage to move beyond the fear and pain of the past. He had the determination to move toward the future and confront the challenges of a free society.

Judge Vance was a good and decent man. He should be remembered as an individual who did not fear change. He welcomed it and made it easier for all of us. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues again to support this legislation. It is only fitting that we do so.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to voice my support of H.R. 3961, to redesignate the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building" in honor of U.S. Circuit Judge Robert S. Vance.

Judge Vance was killed by a letter bomb at his Mountain Brook, AL, home last December. Only 58 years of age, Judge Vance's distinguished career was tragically ended by the terrorist attack.

Judge Vance spent 12 years serving on the U.S. Circuit Court bench and was a leading member of the Democratic Party in Alabama for over 30 years. Advancing Democratic ideals, Judge Vance's reputation for integrity and the highest ethical behavior was unsurpassed. His outstanding leadership with the State Democratic Executive Committee led to his appointment to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by President Jimmy Carter in 1977. Vance was later assigned to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court in Atlanta, where he served until his death.

I am sure all of my colleagues join me in honoring the late Judge Robert S. Vance. I thank my colleague, Congressman BEN ERDREICH for introducing this important legislation. By redesignating the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, we will immortalize the memory and the spirit of Robert S. Vance.

Mr. THOMAS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3961. I do so for several reasons. It is only fitting that we in Congress support legislation that would endow Federal buildings with lasting significance. In my view, today represents one of those occasions when we can achieve that objective. The Federal building located at 1800 5th Avenue, North, in Birmingham, AL, should have the honor of bearing the name of Judge Robert S. Vance.

In my view, Judge Vance represented all that is right with the Federal process and this Nation's institutions. Judge Vance is remembered as one who stood up for his convictions, when others backed down because of convenience. He leaves with us the legacy and vision of a country born of diversity, yet made great in its unity and collective strength.

I support H.R. 3961 because we, like Judge Vance, must stand for what is right. Congress can and should take the steps necessary not only to remember Judge Vance, but to aline ourselves behind the causes that he gave his life to and gave his life for.

Last, Mr. Speaker, I support H.R. 3961 because of what it means for the Birmingham community and the State of Alabama. My own congressional district was affected by the same racial violence that took the life of Judge Vance.

Some hours after Judge Vance was assassinated, Savannah City Alderman Robbie Robinson was murdered by a similar mail bomb. All evidence indicates that the bombs were sent by the same individual or group.

As a private attorney, as an elected official, and as a civic-minded citizen, Mr. Robinson was dedicated to equal rights and equal justice under the law. Thanks to men and women like him, the evil force that took his life cannot take away the commitment of this Nation to racial justice.

Judge Vance and Mr. Robinson were people committed to rebuilding our communities, restoring harmony, and securing for ourselves, our National and our children, a future that is untarnished by racial intolerance. H.R. 3961 represents a physical symbol of that future.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill. I also urge my colleagues to rededicate themselves to the principles that these two great Americans upheld.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my strong support for H.R. 3961, legislation to rename a Federal courthouse in Birmingham, AL, for U.S. Federal Judge Robert Smith Vance. I commend my colleagues from Alabama, Representative BEN ERDREICH, for introducing this bill which I had the honor of cosponsoring.

Judge Robert Vance was killed because he was a leader—outspoken in the struggle to ensure freedom and equality for all Americans. Although some of us here today never had the privilege of meeting Judge Vance, his long and varied career is a testament to his many contributions to humanity.

At a time of terrible turbulence in Alabama, Judge Vance was a voice of sanity who served as chairman of the State Democratic Party for 11 years. His compassion was only equaled by his political savvy and he steered the party on a course to greater racial sensitivity. Beyond this role as a political leader, friend, and adversary alike admired Judge Vance's intellect and expertise as a trial attorney.

Robert Vance's career as a Federal judge began with his appointment to the Federal bench in 1977 by President Jimmy Carter. Alabama Governor Guy Hunt called Robert Vance "one of the leading judges in the country." His death leaves the people of Alabama and all Americans with a tremendous loss.

It is my hope that the person or persons responsible for Judge Vance's death are soon brought to justice. The American judicial system must be safe from this type of terrorism.

On behalf of my wife, Nancy, and myself, I would like to extend our heartfelt condolences to Judge Vance's family. I urge all of my colleagues to join in support of this legislation—a fitting tribute to a great American.

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in support of H.R. 3961, a bill to rename a Federal building in Birmingham, AL, after slain Federal circuit court Judge Robert Vance. Last December 16 a bomb mailed to Judge Vance's home exploded and killed a man with distinguished service to the people of the United States and the State of Alabama. As a former prosecutor, I know that it is not always easy to uphold the law due to the obstacles that impede our way. Nevertheless, Judge Vance faithfully assumed this responsibility and even gave his life to serve our Nation's judicial system.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support this tribute of Judge Robert S. Vance, who was tragically killed by a bomb which had been mailed to his home on December 18, 1989.

Robert Vance began his service here in the House of Representatives as a page, where his interest in the Government grew, and his commitment to the public good became his cause of justice.

Judge Vance was the student body president at my alma mater, the University of Alabama, where he earned his bachelor of science degee in 1950.

In 1955, he returned to Washington, DC, to complete his law degree at George Washington University.

Judge Vance went on to serve in the U.S. Army during the Korean conflict, retiring from the Army Reserve as a lieutenant colonel.

Robert Vance returned to the Government in 1978 when President Carter nominated him for appointment to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, a position I had previously held from 1959 to 1963.

It is both sad and ironic that Judge Vance survived the Korean conflict, left a lucrative private law practice to return to public service, only to give his life at home in a time of peace.

His life and work should not have been in vain, and the designation of the courthouse will serve as a symbol of his beliefs and ideals—that justice is the guardian of liberty.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3961, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include therein extraneous material on H.R. 3961. as amended, the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

REAUTHORIZING THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK COMMISSION

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3545) to amend the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Development Act to make certain changes relating to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historical Park Commission.

H.R. 3545

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK COMMISSION

(a) VACANCY.—Section 6(c) of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Development Act (16 U.S.C. 410y-4(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "A member may serve after the expiration of his term until his successor has taken office.".

(b) TERMINATION.—Section 6(g) of such Act (16 U.S.C. 410y-4(g)) is amended by striking "twenty" and inserting "thirty".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include therein extraneous material on H.R. 3545, the bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3545 introduced by our colleague on the subcommittee Congresswoman BEVERLY BYRON, reauthorizes the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historical Park Commission for 10 more years until 2001. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, running nearly 185 miles from Georgetown to Cumberland, MD, was originally built to link the Nation's Capital with the west. In 1971, the canal, long abandoned, became the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historical Park. The park preserves part of our past as well as providing a recreational area for hiking, canoeing, camping, and bicycling close to the Nation's Capital. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historical Park Commission was created at the same time as the park. In the 20 years since, the Commission has provided valuable advice to the National Park Service and has served to link together the various groups concerned about the park. The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs favorably reported H.R. 3545 without any changes.

Mr. Speaker, the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historical Park Commission serves a useful function and should be reauthorized. I endorse this legislation and recommend its enactment.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3545, an act to extend the C&O Canal National Historical Park Commission. This bill would make two changes to existing law to allow the existing Commission to continue past its scheduled expiration.

During the subcommittee hearing on this measure, we received testimony regarding the importance of this Commission in serving as a sounding board for management decisions which affect many persons and communities along the 184-mile-long park. Indeed, establishment of these advisory commissions seems to have become standard operating procedure for many of the new areas authorized by this body. Thus, an extension for this time-tested Commission for an additional 10 years as proposed is both appropriate and desirable.

I would like to recognize the efforts of Mrs. BYRON for her continued interest in management issues of the C&O Canal and express my appreciation to the subcommittee chairman for finding room in the busy schedule for bringing this issue forward in a timely manner.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BYRON].

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, let me say that for the past 11 years I have had the honor and privilege of representing the Sixth Congressional District in the U.S. Congress, and one of the most distinctive features of this district is the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historic Park.

The C&O Canal is a unique American cultural resource. In its infancy it was the child of George Washington, who persisted in seeking a waterway to the west to encourage early American commerce. As early as 1774, he formed a company to improve navigation on the Potomac River. The canal enjoyed substantial commerce in the mid-1800's, but never quite became a financial success.

Today, this thin, 184½-mile ribbon of canal and its towpath are protected as a national park. The park plays host to over 2 million visitors each year. Every section of the canal is unique. Just last Saturday, we had celebrated the 36th reunion hike of Justice Douglas. This hike in some years is in gorgeous weather, some years in not such nice weather. Last Saturday over 100 hikers, in very poor weather appeared, the youngest being 4-month-old Brendon Ayer.

It is a lifeline to this Washington area for those individuals that wish to go out and hike and bike and have an opportunity to get back with nature. The work of the Commission is what has made it possible.

I want to thank the chairman once again for his timely fashion in moving this piece of legislation forward.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3545.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PARKS CENTENNIAL ACT OF 1990

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3811) to recognize the centennials of national parks and monuments, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3811

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Parks Centennial Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. PARK CENTENNIAL COMMISSIONS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Director of the National Park Service, shall appoint a Centennial Commission for each unit of the national park system (hereafter in this Act referred to as "park unit") established less than 97 years before the enactment of this Act. Each Centennial Commission shall be appointed 3 years before the 100th anniversary of the establishment of the park unit concerned. Each Centennial Commission shall plan appropriate activities to recognize and celebrate the 100th anniversary of the establishment of the park unit for which it was appointed.

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—Each Centennial Commission shall be composed of the following members appointed by the Secretary to serve for terms of 4 years:

(1) One member from recommendations made by the Governor of each affected State in which any portion of the park unit is located.

(2) One member from recommendations made by each unit of local government in which any portion of the park unit is located.

(3) Two members from among those individuals who have made outstanding contributions to the welfare of the park or have special expertise on the park unit and its resources.

(4) One member to represent the National Park Service, who shall serve as the Commission chair.

(c) MEETINGS.—Each Centennial Commission shall meet on a regular basis. Notice of meetings and agenda shall be published in local newspapers which have a distribution which generally covers the area.

(d) EXPENSES.—Members of each Centennial Commission shall serve without compensation as such, but the Secretary shall pay expenses reasonably incurred in carrying out their responsibilities on vouchers signed by the chair.

(e) ADVISORY COMMITTEE ACT.—Section 14(a)(2) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) shall not apply with respect to any Centennial Commission appointed under this Act.

SEC. 3. PARK CENTENNIALS.

Not later than six months preceding the beginning of a calendar year, the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Director of the National Park Service, shall prepare and transmit to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate a list of the park units celebrating their centennials within the next five years.

SEC. 4. ADMINISTRATIVE HISTORY.

The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Director of the National Park Service, shall prepare a thorough and comprehensive administrative history of each unit of the national park system five years before that unit celebrates its centennial.

SEC. 5. CENTENNIAL HISTORY.

In order to carry out the purposes of this act, at least 3 years before the centennial of each park unit referred to in section 2, the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Director of the National Park Service, shall, by contract or cooperative agreement, arrange for the preparation of a centennial history of the park unit. The Secretary shall also, by contract or cooperative agreement, arrange for the preparation of a centennial history of Yellowstone National Park, established in 1872, and Yosemite and Sequoia National Parks, California, established in 1890. Each centennial history shall be reviewed by the Director, in consultation with appropriate experts. Upon the Director's recommendation the centennial history shall be published and made available for sale to the public at the park unit concerned and in other appropriate locations. To the extent proceeds from the sales of any such history exceed the cost of preparing and publishing the history, notwithstanding section 3302 of title 31 of the United States Code or any other provision of law, such excess proceeds may be retained and expended for purposes of providing facilities and services consistent with the purposes for which the park unit was established.

SEC. 6. CENTENNIAL EVENTS.

The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Director of the National Park Service, is authorized to accept and use donations of money, property, personal services, or facilities for the purpose of a centennial event for that park unit in accordance with applicable laws, regulations, and policies. The Secretary shall submit a detailed report to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate on the actual sources and disbursements of such donations of money and property.

SEC. 7. PRESIDENTIAL PROCLAMATIONS.

The President, on the 100th anniversary of each park unit, shall issue a proclamation acknowledging the centennial year of the park unit so affected.

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Is a second demanded?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the measure before us.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in the next few years, various units of the National Park System will celebrate their centennials—Yellowstone, Hot Springs and Casa Grande and Ford's Theatre already have. This year, 1990, Sequoia, Kings Canyon, Rock Creek, Chickamauga-Chattanooga, and Antietam will also be a century old.

H.R. 3811, a bill introduced by our colleague, Congressman CHIP PASHAYAN, directs the celebrations of national park centennials. All parks, large and small, should use their centennials to analyze their past and prepare for their future in a constructive fashion. H.R. 3811 directs the National Park Service to establish centennial commissions for each park and monument approaching their 100-year birthday, authorizes acceptance of donations for centennial events, and directs that a centennial history will be prepared for each centennial unit.

The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs adopted an amendment in the nature of a substitute which made several changes to H.R. 3811 as introduced. The bill now applies to all units of the National Park System rather than just to parks and monuments. This recognizes that many other units, such as national historic sites, national battlefield parks, and national seashores exist. The bill as amended makes technical changes to the advisory commission, directs the reporting of park units having centennials in the next 5 years, requires the timely preparation of administrative histories, and directs the National Park Service to accept donations in accord with existing law, regulation, and policy. It directs the preparation of the centennial histories by contract or cooperative agreement and directs the National Park Service Director to review the centennial histories before their publication. These changes refine the bill rather than change it substantially.

Mr. Speaker, I endorse this legislation and recommend its enactment.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3811, an act to recognize the centennials of units of the National Park System. This measure which has been developed by my colleague, Mr. PASHAYAN, and I commend him for it, would provide special attention for an important American institution, our national parks. Specifically, it would establish a process for recognition of the centennials at all units of the National Park System.

One of the important features of the bill is the positive requirement for preparing the administrative history of national park units. While NPS already has an administrative policy directing preparation of this document, only 46 units currently have adequate histories. It is important these histories become a higher priority within the Agency and that managers and staffs of each unit fully understand the legislative and administrative background which led to the establishment of a particular area. This knowledge is often critical to the overall success of the park area.

Additionally, the bill would establish an advisory commission to include local persons, who would assist in planning centennial activities. It is important that local persons be incorporated in the centenial celebration, because adjacent parks are often a very important element in their lifestyle. Indeed, all of the major national parks which have celebrated their centennials in recent years—Yellowstone, Sequoia/Kings Canyon, and Yosemite—have established commissions which included local persons to help in planning for centennial activities.

Mr. Speaker, this is a noncontroversial bill, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the author of the legislation, the gentleman from California [Mr. PASHAYAN].

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, as the author of H.R. 3811, I of course support the bill now before us that recognizes the centennials of our national parks, and to thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on National Parks and Recreation, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO], for his work on behalf of this bill.

The legislation provides for the Secretary of the Interior to plan for the 100th anniversary of the individual components of the national parks.

Of the three oldest national parks, Yellowstone established on March 1, 1872, Sequoia on September 25, 1890, and Yosemite on October 1, 1890, there can be no centennial commissions. H.R. 3811 provides that the histories of those three jewels of the national parks will be done. Sequoia National Park, incidentally, is wholly within my 17th Congressional District in California.

The first park that will be able to utilize all the provisions of H.R. 3811 is Mount Rainer National Park in the State of Washington. Its centennial will be on March 2, 1999. The next 20 to 30 years provide an abundance of new units being added to the national parks in a vast number of States.

Each unit of the national parks, as is true for Yellowstone, Sequoia, and Yosemite, is deserving of a centennial history and Presidential proclamation. Local supporters of each of the parks will have the opportunity to serve on commissions established for the purpose of developing appropriate activities that will recognize and celebrate the 100th anniversary of the parks or monuments.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote for this measure as a minimum effort to recognize the centennials of literally hundreds of the units that make up the national parks.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3811, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to recognize the centennials of units of the national park system, and for other purposes.".

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate has been concluded on all motions to suspend the rules.

Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the Chair will now put the question on each motion to suspend the rules on which further proceedings were postponed earlier in the day in the order in which that motion was entertained.

Votes will be taken in the following order;

House Resolution 354, by the yeas and nays;

House Concurrent Resolution 290, by the yeas and nays; and

H.R. 3961, by the yeas and nays.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the first such vote in this series.

REGARDING HUMAN RIGHTS IN LIBERIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution, House Resolution 354.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 354, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 417, nays 0, not voting 16, as follows:

□ 1519

Messrs. KENNEDY, BEREUTER, EARLY, and Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended, and the concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title was amended so as to read: "Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress concerning Jerusalem and the peace process.".

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROBERT S. VANCE FEDERAL BUILDING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The pending business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill, H.R. 3961, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3961, as amended, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 417, nays 0, not voting 16, as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to redesignate the Federal building at 1800 5th Avenue, North in Birmingham, Alabama, as the 'Robert S. Vance Federal Building and United States Courthouse'."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to put in the RECORD a statement reflecting my vote on rollcall 77. I was unavoidably absent. If I were present, I would have voted no on rollcall 77.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on rollcalls 76, 77, and 78.

INFANT MORTALITY AWARENESS DAY

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 546) designating May 13, 1990, as "Infant Mortality Awareness Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCURDY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mrs MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS], who is the chief sponsor of House Joint Resolution 546, designating May 13, 1990, as Infant Mortality Awareness Day.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, as chief sponsor of House Joint Resolution 546, I am pleased to be given this opportunity to address the House.

House Joint Resolution 546 designates May 13, 1990 as Infant Mortality Awareness Day. This designation is part of my efforts to educate more Americans about our Nation's deplorable infant mortality rate. While other nations have made valiant efforts to improve their rates, the United States continues to fall farther behind. In the past two decades, our international ranking has fallen from 6th to 22d. Each death of a child represents not only a personal tragedy for a family, but also the loss of the potential achievement of that individual for our Nation.

In my home State, Alabama, we have one of the highest infant mortality rates in our country. In fact, during the past 5 years, the rate in Alabama has exceeded that of many Third World nations such as Jamaica. It is my hope that this measure will encourage more individuals in my State and elsewhere to dedicate more time to saving infants and their mothers. In a nation of such immense wealth, it is disturbing that so many babies continue to die needlessly.

I also want to take this opportunity to express my sincere gratitude to several Members of Congress who contributed to the success of this project. Chairman SAWYER of the Subcommittee on Census and Population was instrumental in obtaining expedited review of the legislation. Congressmen J. ROY ROWLAND and MICHAEL BILIRAKIS, cochairmen of the Task Force on Infant Mortality in the Sunbelt Caucus, dedicated personal time to this effort. With their help, the goal of more than 218 cosponsors was achieved within several legislative days. I would also like to thank the staff of the Sunbelt Caucus for their assistance.

It is my hope that passage of this measure will remind us all of what must be done to ensure the birth of healthy babies to healthy mothers. During this year's Mother's Day, I hope more people will be mindful of how important the birth of healthy babies should be to all of us.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, continuing with my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ROWLAND].

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the gentleman from Alabama for House Joint Resolution 546, Infant Mortality Awareness Day.

I think it is really a shame that the United States, which is one of the foremost countries in the world in medical science, has an infant mortality rate that is No. 20 among industrialized nations in the world. When we consider that we have the fantastic medical technology that we have, no country has any better quality neonatal intensive care units than we do here in the United States, and that we still rank No. 20 in infant mortality, it really points out to us that the problem is not a medical problem so much as it is a social problem.

It is so very important for women who are pregnant to understand the importance of good prenatal care, proper nutrition, not abusing themselves during that pregnancy. Of course, one of the problems we have is adolescent and teenage pregnancy, and we need to focus a lot of attention on that. And it is so very important not only for the Federal Government to be involved, but State and local government and the private sector also.

This is a problem that addresses itself to every area in our society, so I want to commend those who are focusing attention on this problem, because it is certainly something that we need to address. It will save a great deal of money. We know that for every dollar invested in providing prenatal care we save anywhere from $3 to $5 in not having to look out for those infants of low birth weight, and in neonatal intensive care units. Not only that, they are much more susceptible to respiratory diseases and central nervous system damage, many things that require a great deal of expense.

Again I commend everyone involved in this effort focusing attention on the terrible infant mortality problem we have in this country.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation of objection, I thank the gentleman from Georgia for his eloquent statement on behalf of this joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BILIRAKIS].

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentlewoman yielding.

Mr. Speaker, as cochairman of the Congressional Sunbelt Caucus Task Force on Infant Mortality, cochaired by Dr. ROWLAND who spoke just before me, I too am a proud cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 546 which designates May 13, 1990, as Infant Mortality Awareness Day.

This year Mother's Day will be celebrated on May 13, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that Mother's Day is a timely day to raise public awareness of the unacceptably high infant mortality rates in our country. On Mother's Day, children of all ages take the time to express gratitude to the person responsible for giving them the gift of life: their mother.

Unfortunately, there are thousands of babies who are unable to enjoy that gift of life. In my own State of Florida almost 2,000 children died before their first birthday in 1988. This means that in Florida there were 10½ infant deaths per 1,000 live births in 1988.

Recent statistics rank Florida 35 out of 50 States for infant mortality rates. I believe, Mr. Speaker, in many of these cases the children would be alive today if only their mothers had received immediate prenatal care as soon as they found out they were pregnant. Hopefully, Infant Mortality Awareness Day will remind future mothers of the importance of prenatal care. Perhaps this day will encourage prospective mothers to seek early and effective medical care since prenatal care is literally a matter of life and death.

Over the past 2 years, I along with Dr. ROWLAND have taken an active role in the infant mortality issue. The first step toward saving the lives of these children is providing essential information to Federal legislators. For this reason, I am arranging a Florida congressional delegation meeting to raise awareness of this problem in my home State of Florida, and I am hopeful that other States and their duly elected representatives will follow suit, and that by increasing our knowledge of infant mortality we will be able to bring back an important message to our districts, and that is that infant mortality can be prevented through prompt and adequate prenatal care.

I thank and commend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS] for introducing this piece of legislation.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, continuing with my reservation of objection, I am pleased to see so many of my distinguished colleagues who want to comment on this important resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Maryland for yielding, and also want to commend my colleague for this resolution.

The State of Illinois, unfortunately, has the distinction of being the State with the highest infant mortality rate of any northern State. Sadly enough, the United States is tied with No. 20, if I remember correctly, as the highest infant mortality nation among industrialized nations in the world.

I believe one gentleman mentioned earlier some of the things that we can do to deal with this very serious problem in the United States.

And I wanted to bring to the attention of the House and of those listening the fact that at the recent hearing in Detroit, MI, the Select Committee on Children brought up an interesting statistic. It was learned that some 10 percent of all infant deaths are related to smoking by the mother.

It was also learned and has been shown that 50 percent of the sudden infant death syndrome cases have been related to smoking.

I believe there are ways that we can deal with the high infant mortality rate. Prenatal care is certainly part of it, an amazingly important part of it. But also the information imparted to women during their pregnancy to avoid alcohol, to avoid tobacco, to avoid drugs. These things give their children a chance to live.

Of course that is our goal here.

I want to salute my colleagues for bringing this issue to the floor so that we can discuss it on a national basis. And I hope that we as a Congress move forward, even with the budget resolution which will be up this week, in addressing this serious problem.

Mrs. MORELLA. I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] for his comments. He has always been one we can look to see what we can do individually for health and welfare.

I want to thank the prime sponsor, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS] for this resolution because we do know, as is stated in the resolution, one out of three pregnant women do not get the appropriate early prenatal care in the United States, which has been one of the reasons why we have plummeted in terms of our recognition internationally.

It is also kind of a pitch for the WIC Program, women, infants and children, prenatal and postnatal supplemental feeding care, as to the things that we can do, the citizenry can do, to work toward the birth of healthy babies in our country.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, last month the Secretary of Health and Human Services, Dr. Louis Sullivan, released a report on the status of our health as a nation. "Health United States, 1989" serves as a barometer for how we are responding to the health care needs of our citizens.

The Secretary's news is alarming. In 1987, the infant mortality rate for the United States was 10.1. For every 1,000 children born in this country, 10 are dying. This ranks the United States 22d behind other industrialized nations of the world. To put it in perspective, Mr. Speaker, our national infant mortality rate is twice that of Japan, which is currently ranked first. In 1987, more than 38,000 infants in this country died before reaching their first birthday.

This is a complex, critical issue. While our medical technology allows us to rescue children that died mysteriously 10 years ago, other factors are being introduced into our society that jeopardize the healthy birth of infants. A 1989 survey conducted by the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families found 15 of 18 hospitals reporting 3 to 4 times as many drug-exposed births as in 1985.

Crack cocaine use by pregnant women in killing our children. According to the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality, those children born to women who use illegal drugs during pregnancy experience a greater likelihood of prematurity, low birthweight, and congenital defects. These innocent newborns may also suffer drug withdrawal symptoms, developmental and learning disabilities.

The Commission has targeted regions of the country as infant mortality disaster areas. One of these areas is the South. A child born in the South is less likely to see his or her first birthday than a child born in any other area of the country. It is for this reason that 20 members of the congressional Sun Belt caucus, which I serve as vice chairman, formed the Task Force on Infant Mortality. We are committed to pursuing solutions to this crisis.

For the past several months, the task force has met with authorities and individuals concerned with this issue. There is a consensus among the experts that knowledge and awareness is fundamental to bringing down regional and national infant mortality rates. I am a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 546, designating May 13, 1990 as "Infant Mortality Awareness Day." I feel that it is most fitting that this Mothers Day, Members of Congress have declared their commitment to making the birth of healthy babies to healthy mothers a national priority.

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to voice my strong support for House Joint Resolution 546, Infant Mortality Awareness Day. This resolution will help draw attention to our country's unacceptably high rate of infant mortality. As we examine this issue, I would like to remind my colleagues about a field hearing held in my district in Birmingham, AL, that addressed the high human and financial cost of inadequate prenatal care, and the steps that can be taken to significantly lower the infant mortality rate in the State of Alabama and the Nation as a whole.

The field hearing was held at the Jefferson County, AL, Health Department, which is surrounded by the University of Alabama at Birmingham's Medical Center, one of the greatest medical facilities in the world. The sponsor of House Joint Resolution 546, Alabama Representative CLAUDE HARRIS and I invited the House Select Committee on Hunger to hold the hearing in Birmingham, and we were joined on the congressional panel by our colleague MIKE ESPY, who is a member of the select committee. We heard from a distinguished panel of witnesses who presented their expert opinions and offered their suggestions on what can be done to improve infant survival rates.

It is shocking to learn that a child born in Japan, Finland, Hong Kong, Ireland, Australia, Canada, Singapore, or any of 12 other industrialized nations has a better chance of surviving his or her first year than does a child born in the United States.

Alabama's high infant mortality rate is directly linked to the high percentage of women who receive inadequate or no prenatal care. Every day millions of dollars are spent across our country to save babies born too small or too sick to have the healthy start they deserve in life. Thousands of infants die at birth, and those who do survive often suffer permanent disabilities.

America currently spends over $2 billion a year on health care for low birthweight babies during their first year of life, and the lifetime costs of caring for a low birthweight infant can reach some $400,000 per child. This cost, by the way, does not include the ongoing expenses that must be shouldered by every community due to unemployment, underemployment, or long-term care for the permanently disabled. Preventive steps, it is estimated, can save $3 for every $1 spent.

We in Alabama are making great strides in reducing the number of low birthweight babies, and Governor Hunt and the State legislature have targeted infant mortality as a top priority for Alabama. Jefferson County is the home of a world-class medical center at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. We have the State's most sophisticated and accessible health care services. Our county health department has seven health centers that provide information and referral services to women needing prenatal care. The department also provides pediatric care for infants and children in the community, and works closely with Cooper Green Hospital and U.A.B.'s medical facility. And, due to a recent Medicaid waiver, the department is now offering expanded social support and case management to those most in need.

Yet surprisingly, with all these services available, Jefferson County's infant mortality rate is still higher than that of Alabama as a whole. That is why I asked the Select Committee on Hunger to come to Birmingham to hear firsthand from our panel of maternal and child health experts on what can be done to assure that adequate prenatal care is affordable and available to all pregnant women. I hope this hearing has helped us make meaningful headway in developing new strategies to improve infant survival rates across the Nation.

I further believe that House Joint Resolution 546, introduced by my fellow Alabamian CLAUDE HARRIS, will help draw attention to the problem of infant mortality. I urge my colleagues in the House to support this resolution and to continue the steps being taken by Congress to assure that our Nation's youngest and most vulnerable citizens get off to a healthy start.

Mrs. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, today, I am pleased to join many of my colleagues as an original cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 546, legislation observing May 13, 1990, as Infant Mortality Awareness Day.

Statistics show that in 1987, the infant mortality rate in this country was 10.1 deaths for each 1,000 live births. This rate is higher than the rate of the 19 other industrialized nations.

My State of South Carolina has the third highest infant mortality rate in the Nation. As a member of the Congressional Sunbelt Caucus' Task Force on Infant Mortality, I feel that it is time to make this country aware of a problem that is reaching epidemic proportions.

One of the key factors in reducing this unfortunate dilemma is to provide adequate prenatal care. It has been estimated that if my State alone could reduce its percentage of low birth weight babies to just the national rate, it would save $12,744,576 of initial hospital costs.

I urge all Members of Congress to support House Joint Resolution 546 as a first step in recognizing the undeniable and urgent need to decrease infant mortality. Our Nation cannot afford to lose our precious infants as a result of inadequate prenatal care.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, at this point I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCURDY). Is there objection to the request to the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 546

Whereas more than 38,000 infants will die this year in the United States before their first birthday;

Whereas the international ranking of the United States in infant mortality has declined from 6th in the 1950s to 22nd in the 1980s;

Whereas proper prenatal care has been found to be the single greatest contributor to the birth of a healthy baby, but 1 in 3 pregnant women does not receive early and comprehensive prenatal care in the United States;

Whereas low birth weight has been found to be a significant determinant of infant mortality and 7 percent of all babies born in this country are born below a healthy birth weight; and

Whereas for every dollar spent on prenatal care for high risk mothers, there can be a savings of more than $3: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress of the United States finds that situation to be deplorable and designates May 13, 1990, as "Infant Mortality Awareness Day", and encourages the citizens of this country to work toward the birth of healthy babies to healthy mothers.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL ARBOR DAY

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 258) to authorize the President to proclaim the last Friday of April 1990 as "National Arbor Day," and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to point out that the prime sponsor of this resolution is the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the resolution was submitted for National Arbor Day. We just celebrated Earth Day on the 22d of this month. I think it is saying to us there should be Earth Day every day. We know that by planting a tree, the trees absorb carbon dioxide and therefore help make a cleaner environment.

Mr. Speaker, with that being said, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 258

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating the last Friday of April 1990 as "National Arbor Day" and calling upon the people of the United States to observe such a day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on House Joint Resolution 546 and Senate Joint Resolution 258, the joint resolutions just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

THE ROLLSTONE HOUSE, FITCHBURG, MA

(Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct pleasure for me to rise today to pay tribute to the city of Fitchburg, MA, which this morning received an award from the National Community Development Association [NCDA] for its outstanding use of community development block grant [CDBG] moneys. Indeed, we are honored to have the mayor of Fitchburg, Jeffery A. Bean, on Capitol Hill today.

The NCDA presents the Audrey Nelson Community Development Achievement Awards each year to those cities who creatively use CDBG moneys to successfully address the needs of families, neighborhoods, and homes. The NCDA, which represents close to 500 CDBG recipient communities nationwide, has chosen the Rollstone House of Fitchburg for its contributions to the low-income residents of this north-central Massachusetts city. The Rollstone House is a transitorial residence for pregnant and parenting adolescents between the ages of 14 and 20.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join with me today in recognizing Mayor Jeffrey Bean and Planning Director Timothy Stewart, as well as the executive director of Rollstone House, Lisa Davis Segura, for their outstanding contribution to those in need in the city of Fitchburg.

Rollstone House is a transitional residence for pregnant and parenting adolescents, aged 14 to 20, and their infants and toddlers who are from the central Massachusetts area. The house serves 12 adolescent mothers or mothers-to-be and their children at one time. The department of social services refers clients it feels will benefit from this service. The appropriateness of each placement is reviewed by the on-site services provider. The level of enthusiasm and motivation of each candidate in terms of her openness to learning and benefiting from what is offered is a crucial factor in the final selection of occupants. Experience has shown that an overwhelming majority of the teen mothers are no-income to extremely low-income persons. To make the transition into a self-sufficient independent life each occupant receives the following services: educational services, career counseling, child care services, parenting skills, budgeting, medical services, mental health services, transportation services, emotional counseling, in addition to housing services.

As previously discussed, this project aids not only area adolescent mothers; it also benefits their children and their entire nuclear family. Additionally, the reclamation of a historic Finnish building was important to the local Finnish community. The building's time capsule placed in the building in 1906 was removed as a part of the building's restoration. The contents from the time capsule as well as other artifacts will be permanently preserved in an exhibit created in the building.

Finally, the entire neighborhood has benefited from a $1 million restoration. Without the availability of CDBG dollars, and the strong support of the local, State, and Federal governments, this project could not have become a reality. Many lives which will become enriched through this project, would not have become so without this country's affordable housing agenda.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO COMBAT NUCLEAR PROLIFERATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I recently introduced two pieces of legislation, H.R. 4454 and H.R. 4455, that will help slow or stop nuclear proliferation.

The bills will simply deny all trade preferences—most-favored-nation [MFN] status, generalized system of preferences, Caribbean Basin Initiative, and free trade agreements—to countries that have not signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty [NPT] or the Limited Test Ban Treaty, the two basic documents currently in force to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons.

Article VI of the NPT calls on all signatories to "pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament * * *." In the past, it has been difficult for the superpowers to argue for nonproliferation and nuclear abstinence when they themselves have been wallowing in the arms race, piling up bombs like they were marbles for kids to play with. Now that the superpowers, at long last, have begun serious nuclear arms reduction talks, now that the cold war seems to be dissolving, we can, with a straight face, be more serious in seeking ways to prevent nuclear proliferation in the Third World countries.

Linking trade policy and foreign policy is not a revolutionary idea. For example, the Jackson-Vanik amendment, the antiterrorism amendment to the GSP, and Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986 each explicity tied trade concessions to foreign policy considerations. Making the link between trade policy and foreign policy should be a tool in ensuring nuclear weapons will not continue to proliferate.

Among those nations reported to have or be working on developing nuclear arsenals are India, Pakistan, Israel, Iraq, and South Africa; all these nations have not signed the NPT, and at least one has not signed the Limited Test Ban Treaty. Brazil and Argentina—two more nonsignatory nations—have production sites for nuclear weapons material, which increases the potential for weapons productions.

The nuclear club has grown from 1 member in 1945 to 9 in 1990, the number could even be 11. The recent example of Iraq seeking to smuggle nuclear weapons detonators points out how serious the problem is and how close the world is to nuclear war among ancient enemies in the world's trouble spots. New holocausts beyond all comprehension are within sight, unless the world community takes stronger action to stop nuclear proliferation.

While both these bills will not solve the problems of proliferation, they will provide incentives to sign the NPT and/or Limited Test Ban Treaty. The following is an article from the Washington Post of April 17 describing the dangers to the whole world from continued nuclear smuggling and the failure to take strong action on these blatant attempts to obtain nuclear weapons.

FIVE NATIONS' NUCLEAR PROGRAMS SAID TO GAIN FROM SMUGGLING; WEST GERMANY CALLED "WEAK LINK" OF SUPPLIES

Pakistan, India, Brazil, Argentina and Iraq have been able to build or expand nuclear weapons capabilities by smuggling materials from supplier countries, according to a private study released yesterday.

To counter these activities, the report by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace recomends that the United States and other suppliers threaten military and economic sanctions against countries engaging in such operations.

Titled "Nuclear Exports: The Challenge of Control," the report said West Germany has been the "weak link" in the international export system and must tighten export laws. India and Pakistan have relied on West German suppliers for their nuclear programs, the report said.

Shortly before the report was released, the new head of Brazil's nuclear energy commission, Jose Luis de Carvalho Santana, said Brazil will not build a nuclear bomb. But he declined to say whether it had technical ability to do so.

Argentina has repeatedly proclaimed the right to develop and explode a nuclear device even though experts say it seems far from being able to achieve that goal.

Three weeks ago, Iraq denied any intention of developing nuclear weapons and reaffirmed that denial Monday. It said devices described by U.S. prosecutors as nuclear warhead detonation capacitors allegedly being smuggled to Baghdad were to be used in a non-nuclear university laser project. In mid-March, British investigators arrested four people they claimed had tried to smuggle these devices to Iraq.

The study said Iraq's program was far behind those of the other four countries.

TRIBUTE TO GERALD McRANEY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. PARKER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today before the U.S. House of Representatives to pay special tribute to Gerald McRaney, a personality well-known to Mississippians as well as many other Americans.

Mr. McRaney is better known as Major McGillis on the CBS-TV situation comedy "Major Dad" in which he portrays a traditional U.S. Marine officer. Mr. McRaney's experience helped him develop the series he is now producing under his own Spanish Trail Productions banner for MCA-TV.

What most people do not know is that Gerald McRaney was born in Collins, MS, about 60 miles from my hometown of Brookhaven. He also spent all of his youth in the great State of Mississippi.

Mr. McRaney is also well known for his starring role as Rick Simon on the television series "Simon and Simon". He played on this CBS comedy-adventure series for 8 years before producing "Major Dad". This kind of character diversity shows why Mr. McRaney continues to enjoy so much success in the entertainment industry.

In addition to appearances on numerous television series, Gerald McRaney has been seen in many television movies including "Roots II" and "The Law". I must mention one role that he played because it must have been a Mississippi boy's dream come true—McRaney was the last gunfighter to square off against Matt Dillon in the final episode of "Gunsmoke". Now that is one villain that any country boy would have been proud to play.

Although Gerald McRaney has such a demanding career, he still manages to devote much of his time and effort to numerous worthy causes. Through his active involvement in a wide array of organizations, Mr. McRaney has truly made a difference.

Perhaps Gerald McRaney's most important civic effort began when he helped form the Entertainment Industries Council for a Drug-Free Society. This organization is dedicated to convincing producers, directors, and actors to warn against the dangers and evils of drug abuse through their film and television shows. This nonprofit organization is recognized nationally for its innovative substance abuse campaigns. I firmly believe that this kind of effort can make a difference by changing our children's attitudes about drugs.

He is also a strong supporter of the John Tracy Clinic in Los Angeles which teaches communication and educational skills to deaf and hard of hearing children. The U.S. Marine Reserves' Toys for Tots Campaign and various MIA programs also benefit from Mr. McRaney's involvement.

In a few weeks, Collins, MS, McRaney's hometown, is going to honor him by declaring May 5 as "Gerald McRaney Day". I feel that this day is a fitting honor to Gerald McRaney's many accomplishments.

We honor and salute him for his unique role in society and the lasting place he has earned in the hearts of many.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order I have requested for today to honor Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA be allowed to precede all other special orders. Pending that I want to say that my office has consulted with Members with such requests and received consent from them to proceed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR SPARK MATSUNAGA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. AKAKA] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor today to mourn the loss of a statesman, a poet, and a friend—our colleague, SPARK MATSUNAGA. I know you share my great sadness and sense of deep personal loss over his death. SPARK passed away on Easter Sunday after a long fight with cancer.

It is an understatement to say that he will be missed. SPARK's life was a genuine American success story. Mahalo for enriching our lives and the lives of so many others.

The son of immigrant parents, SPARK rose from poverty to earn a Harvard law degree and ultimately to become a three-term U.S. Senator. Along the way, he served our country with courage and distinction as a combat officer in the 100th Infantry Battalion and 442d "Go for Broke" Regimental Combat Tean.

Twice wounded on the battlefield, he was highly decorated for his valor in action. SPARK was instrumental in reshaping the politics of Hawaii in the modern era, first as a territorial representative, and then as a member of the U.S. House of Representatives. He served here for 14 years.

His career was extraordinary and his accomplishments were many. SPARK was the father of renewable energy research and development, a champion for the cause of Japanese-American redress, a pioneer in the field of Soviet-American cooperation in space, and the principal force behind the creation of the United States Institute of Peace.

It was a privilege for me to serve in Congress with SPARK for so many years. When the voters of Hawaii elected me to Congress, SPARK generously shared his years of experience and gave me words of encouragement. I know that I am a better Congressman today because of his good advise and counsel.

SPARKY, I salute you and thank you for your service to our country, and for our friendship, which I will always cherish. Your accomplishments in the field of battle and for the cause of peace are legendary.

Millie and I extend to SPARK's wife, Helene, and their five children and grandchildren our love and aloha, and our condolences over the loss of this dear man.

To recognize his 40 years of service to his country, I have introduced legislation to establish the Spark Matsunaga Scholarship program and rename the United States Institute of Peace in his honor. It is a fitting tribute to SPARK that the organization he labored to create should bear his name.

Throughout his long career, Senator MATSUNAGA was devoted to the cause of peace, and it was due to his efforts that the Institute of Peace was founded. The legislation I have introduced will be a constant reminder of his vision, determination, and achievements on behalf of this noble cause. I am prepared to pick up the torch and make his cause my own so that the flame he lit will not die.

SPARK championed the cause of peace. He also fought for reconciliation. The credit for enacting the Civil Liberties Act of 1988, which provided an apology and reparations to those Japanese-Americans who were interned during World War II, can be shared by many members of the House and Senate. Many of you are on the floor here today.

But it was SPARK MATSUNAGA who was the intellectual force behind this legislation and who kept fighting for this cause until the bill was signed into law.

SPARK recognized that our Constitution ensures freedom and protection for all its citizens at all times. The Civil Liberties Act is the most solemn piece of legislation I have ever had the opportunity to consider in my 13 years in Congress. It was a compact between the U.S. Government and those unfortunate individuals who were unjustifiably evacuated, relocated, and interned during World War II. By this compact, the United States apologized for the grave injustice suffered by U.S. citizens of Japanese ancestry. We vowed that such violations would not reoccur, and obligated ourselves to provide restitution for the hardships and losses they suffered.

Let history record that through the efforts of this boy from the small town of Kukuiula, the son of immigrants, who rose to become a Senator of the United States, that this noble cause became a reality and the Civil Liberties Act became law.

EDUCATION FOR DISADVANTAGED CHILDREN

As a son of Japanese immigrants who made extreme sacrifices for the education of their children, SPARKY knew the wisdom of fulfilling the educational needs of our Nation's disadvantaged children.

SPARKY embraced the philosophy of Thomas Jefferson, who so wisely observed that an educated populace is absolutely essential to the survival of a democratic society such as ours.

Through hearings that SPARKY chaired, he demonstrated that supplemental instruction provided by Federal funds has a significant and lasting impact on disadvantaged children.

He backed up his findings in his home State by supporting the Native Hawaiian Education Act, which has proven to be a beneficial program in Hawaii.

And as a father of five children and a former school teacher, childhood education was a big part of SPARKY's life. SPARKY worked hard for education for all children.

ENERGY I

I am not sure how widely known this may be, but only last March, Senator MATSUNAGA was named the "Man of the Decade" by the Solar Energy Industries Association. I haven't checked the record, but this is probably the last award that SPARK received as a Senator.

Senator MATSUNAGA was named "Man of the Year" by the solar industry in 1981, 1987 and 1989 in recognition of his tireless efforts to promote renewable energy. Given his record of support, it was only fitting that he be named "Man of the Decade" for his contribution throughout the 1980's.

At the time of this award, it was said of MATSUNAGA that "virtually every piece of solar legislation in research and development through extension of the commercial solar tax credits passed through the direct efforts of Senator MATSUNAGA." I don't think that any member of the House or Senate can claim a record so strong.

ENERGY II

It was in no small part due to SPARK's efforts that Hawaii has become a recognized leader in the field of renewable energy. He was one of the first to recognize that investment in renewable energy was an investment in our future.

The advances in renewable energy that he championed have had a positive impact on our balance of payments, have helped maintain our stable economy and have significantly strengthened our energy security.

Senator MATSUNAGA dominated this field. He was an advocate of wind research, of solar thermal energy, and of photovoltaics. He was the "father of OTEC," a source of energy from the ocean that will make its mark in the decade of the 1990's. He fought for hydrogen research so that America will have an energy source when it runs out of fossil fuels. And, he urged Hawaii to reach even greater heights in the area of biomass. Over 10 percent of the State's electrical generation comes from biomass.

In summary, SPARK MATSUNAGA has helped ensure that Hawaii's energy future is a bright and promising one.

ENVIRONMENT—KILAUEA POINT WILDLIFE REFUGE EXTENSION

SPARK has a special love for Kauai and its beauty, and he fought hard to protect its remaining wildlife habitat. SPARK led the cause in expanding the Kilauea Point Wildlife Refuge on Kauai, habitat for at least six species of seabirds.

Kilauea Point Wildlife Refuge is a popular visitor destination, where dolphins, whales, sea turtles and monk seals often can be sighted offshore. However, the explosive growth in the number of visitors had endangered the wild seabirds and their nests. SPARK came to the rescue and saw to it that the protection of the wildlife was enhanced by extending the size of the refuge. No living creature, big or small, was beyond his protective fold.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SPARK's leadership and courage in advancing the cause of human rights at home and abroad is well-documented. As the majority leader of the other body eloquently said during his eulogy for Senator MATSUNAGA in Honolulu, "Most of all, SPARK MATSUNAGA loved his country enough to make it right when it was wrong."

It is therefore fitting, that in one of his final statements offered during debate on the floor of the other body, Senator MATSUNAGA voiced his unwavering support for enactment of the Hate Crimes Statistics Act of 1990. This legislation, recently signed into law by the President, requires the U.S. Attorney General to collect and disseminate statistical data related to crimes based on race, religion, ethnicity, or sexual orientation. This data will provide invaluable information in confronting the problem of hate crime.

SPARK fought tirelessly throughout his public service career to champion the cause of the forgotten individual and to elevate the human spirit. He was convinced that through equal opportunity, imagination and hard work, each individual, and society in general, could overcome obstacles and achieve what he liked to call the "spiritual transcendence" separating man from all other living creatures.

SPARK's view of humanity, his unflappable belief in the capability of the human spirit and capacity of the mind is best described in an article he published in Omni in December 1984.

And I quote, "humanity constantly transcends its condition by inspired feats of imagination that the reasoning man translates into working reality."

SPARK lived his life by this philosophy and devoted his career challenging us to realize the full promise offered by the ideals upon which our democracy was founded.

SPARKY AND MINIMUM WAGE

One issue that SPARKY felt very strongly about was fair labor standards for all Americans. He firmly believed in a meaningful wage floor to ensure all Americans a fair day's pay for a fair day's work.

On this issue, SPARKY helped dispel the myth that a decent minimum wage increases unemployment. On the contrary: A decent wage promotes employment.

SPARKY fought the misconception that a decent minimum wage has an inflationary effect. SPARKY knew that it is not the minimum wage earners struggling to provide for their families, who cause inflation.

SPARKY wouldn't yield to those who said a decent working wage would hurt our global competitiveness. SPARKY knew that it is productivity, technology and a well-educated work force that will give us a global edge.

SPARKY knew that we cannot solve our Nation's problems on the backs of our lowest wage earners.

OLDER AMERICANS

Many Americans remember our good friend, Claude Pepper, as a leader of the elderly, but older Americans had a great friend in the other body as well—Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA.

SPARKY took pride in having played a key role in the development of the original Older Americans Act and, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Aging, having been instrumental in its reauthorization. In large measure, his participation during reauthorization created even more programs of benefit to the elderly.

A major concern of SPARK's was whether older Americans were effectively taking advantage of these Federal programs to which they were entitled. Included in the reauthorization was the creation of a multiyear demonstration program to test the ability of the Older Americans Act system to reach these individuals and to evaluate the program's success or failure. Furthermore, provisions were included to improve outreach to the elderly with disabilities, to provide a new program of service to all native Americans, including native Hawaiians, and to assist States in carrying out programs for the prevention of abuse, neglect and exploitation of the elderly.

Mr. Chairman, SPARK once told me, "It has been said by sages of the past that the greatness of any society can be accurately measured by the degree to which it cares for its elderly." As a champion of the elderly, our lives have been made far richer through SPARK's compassionate efforts.

PEACE INSTITUTE

"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." Appropriately, this passage from the Gospel according to Matthew was SPARK's favorite biblical inspiration. In his dedication to the cause of international peace and understanding, SPARK was guided by the belief that nations and individuals must transcend divisiveness and overcome counterproductive rivalries through the identification of shared ideals and cooperation on common interests.

"Let Us Teach Our Children To Want Peace," a composition written in 1938 when SPARKY was a freshman at the University of Hawaii, served as a blueprint for his lifelong tenacity in the pursuit of peace education.

From his first year in the House, SPARK introduced legislation to create a United States Institute of Peace. Driven by the belief that "peacemaking is as much an art to be learned as war," his vision and persistence led to the creation in 1984 of the United States Institute of Peace.

Created by Congress to embody "the heritage, ideals, and concerns of the American people for peace," and dedicated to the interdisciplinary study of peaceful conflict resolution, the Institute is part of SPARK MATSUNAGA'S legacy as peacemaker.

I urge my colleagues to place his name on the title of my bill to establish the Spark Matsunaga Scholarship Program and rename the U.S. Institute of Peace in his honor.

POET AND SCHOLAR

Besides his accomplishments as a respected member of the Senate, SPARK possessed other notable talents that I would like to touch upon.

Many of you know that SPARK coauthored a book on the operations and nature of the House of Representatives' Rules Committee titled "Rulemakers of the House". It has become a major reference material for students of American government and for Congress, as well, on the workings of the House.

SPARK was also a fine poetic talent, and he often shared his compositions with us. One of my favorities went like this:

Success in life demands an early goal, which you yourself must set and strive to gain.
'Tis better to be known as a good man than a great one,
For greatness is an assessment of mortals;
Goodness a gift of God.

On a more personal note, SPARK enjoyed music and we often sang in a musical duet. In anything that SPARK undertook, he reached for the zenith of his potential, and singing was no exception. On special occasions, we joined together to sing his favorite, our State anthem, "Hawaii Pono'i." This tenor sang with such gusto and pride that he would inspire me to sing with even more crescendo and heart, too.

I will miss those evenings of camaraderie, laughter and good times shared, but even more so, I will miss my good friend and partner, SPARK.

SPACE

SPARK'S leadership in furthering space exploration was intricately linked to his overall vision of America and the world. He traced his commitment to the peaceful exploration of space to his 1980 visit to the observatory at Mauna Kea. Taken by the spectacular expanse of the cosmos and possibility for its limitless discovery, SPARK devoted his considerable powers of persuasion to the peaceful, international exploration of the universe. For SPARK, the boundless frontier of space held the promise to realize mankind's greatest achievements in art, science, and religion.

SPARK was the leading advocate of international cooperation, especially American-Soviet cooperation, in space science. He introduced numerous congressional resolutions calling for international collaboration in "technologically productive" space research.

SPARKY'S boldest proposal dared the United States and Soviet Union to work together in the effort to launch a joint, manned mission to Mars in the next century. Senator expounded this vision in his book, "The Mars Project: Journeys Beyond the Cold War." He challenged the superpowers to look beyond the arms race and cold war and to stop the exploitation of space as a weapons proving ground. The Mars mission offered the opportunity for all nations to dedicate their best efforts toward the development of new technology, while at the same time rediscovering our common humanity.

SPARKY AND CLAUDE PEPPER TWO GREAT AMERICANS

The loss of SPARK brings to mind the passing of another great American, Claude Pepper, who died last year. Both came to the House in the class of the 88th Congress.

These two men were vastly different, yet they were alike in many ways: Both were born to rural poverty, but thanks to hard work and our country's open society, they were able to gain educations. Both began their careers as public school teachers. Moreover, both Claude and SPARKY were able to gain entry to and win credentials from Harvard Law School. Through the practice of law and service in their respective State legislatures, they were able to work their way to finally serve in our Nation's Capital.

Once in Congress, both were proud of their liberal philosophies. They fought bigotry and worked for our Nation's elderly, the disadvantaged and children in poverty.

Today, both Claude Pepper and SPARK MATSUNAGA are serving together somewhere else in a much higher body than man will ever be able to create.

SENATOR MATSUNAGA'S FUNERAL SERVICE

Thursday of last week we eulogized Senator MATSUNAGA during a memorial service at Central Union Church in Honolulu.

SPARKY's colleagues and his many friends gave this special man the very highest praise for both his legislative accomplishments and for his unique human and humane qualities.

I want to extend gratitude to the delegation members who made a grueling 22 hour round trip to spend 6 hours in Honolulu to pay their final respects to a great American.

They traveled this great distance to extend their deepest sympathy to Helene Matsunaga and to the children of these two fine people, Karen, Keene, Diane, Merle, and Matthew, and all of their loved ones.

Making the official trip were Congressman NORM MINETA, Senate Majority Leader GEORGE MITCHELL, Senate President ROBERT BYRD, and Senators JEFF BINGAMAN, DENNIS DECONCINI, CHRISTOPHER DODD, MARK HATFIELD, and TED STEVENS. Also in the delegation were Mrs. Daniel Patrick Moynihan and Senate Sergeant At Arms Henry Guigni.

These very busy people took the time and traveled such a great distance because SPARKY enlivened and enriched their lives.

WHO NAMED SPARKY

In Hawaii, for over a generation, we have come to love and admire the Senator who we fondly called "SPARKY." As we pay tribute to him today, I think it's appropriate to tell you how he came to be called "SPARKY."

It's a simple story, and it may cause many of you to recall your own childhood days. I think the way to relate this is to tell it in the words of Mr. Philip Morris. The setting is the old plantation camp of Kukuiula on Kauai:

According to Mr. Morris, a lifeling friend of the Senator's, the young MATSUNAGA and his pals would often run to school together. As Morris describes it, SPARKY was a slow runner, because he was smaller and younger than his classmates. So he would often lag behind.

He would always be racing to keep up with the others, and as Morris describes it, he would shout: "Come on, Sparkplug!" And that's how this great man came to be known as SPARKY.

As another person put it this way: "SPARKY was a special kind of friend." He was always close to the people of Hawaii and the people of Hawaii were just as close to him. He will not be forgotten.

SPARKY AND STATEHOOD

SPARKY was a decorated war hero, and after World War II he returned to Hawaii and became part of the revolution that turned Hawaii politics inside-out. He went on to a seat in the Territorial Legislature, and from there to the House of Representatives and finally the U.S. Senate.

But if there was one incident which first made Hawaii and the Nation take notice of this young man from Kauai, it was his testimony before a Senate Committee in support of Hawaii becoming a State. It was there that he made his plea for "a single star we can call our own." His statement won praise from Senators and front-page attention back in Hawaii. And as far as I can tell, it was that event that launched his career.

My colleagues, Hawaii fought a long struggle for statehood. Some of the more senior Members know this from personal experience because you cast a vote on statehood.

Hardly a day goes by when I don't glance up at the ceiling of this Chamber and notice the stars that are there, one for each State. Thanks to a young law student from Kauai, HI, has a star that it can call its own.

SPARKY AND VETERANS

One of SPARKY's guiding statement was: "Justice delayed is justice denied." This is why he always urged quick action when it came to providing justice for our Nation's veterans.

SPARKY AND VETERANS IN HAWAII

SPARKY saw that justice for veterans in his home State was lacking. Despite the fact that Hawaii has the highest ratio of veterans per general population, the State has ranked near the bottom in terms of VA spending per veteran * * * moreover, Hawaii has been one of only two States in the Nation without a veterans hospital.

SPARKY took it upon himself to turn these inequities around, and through his efforts, the Veterans Affairs Department is currently in the process of selecting a site for a new veterans hospital in Hawaii, a hospital that we hope will bear the name of SPARKY MATSUNAGA.

AGENT ORANGE VETERANS COMPENSATION

SPARKY strongly supported providing benefits to veterans who were suffering from exposure to agent orange. He was a key supporter of legislation that compensated veterans exposed to agent orange * * * veterans who were suffering from the cancers non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and soft tissue sarcoma, and other diseases related to that toxic defoliant. SPARKY pushed for benefits at a time when some in the administration were saying these diseases were not related to agent orange and service in Vietnam. Today, we know different.

SPARKY saw his fellow veterans suffering. He saw that they needed his help, and he was there.

CABINET STATUS FOR VA

SPARKY also was instrumental in making the Veterans' Administration a cabinet level agency. Because of these efforts, Secretary of Veterans Affairs Edward J. Derwinski now sits in the highest policy council in the land * * * the rightful place for the individual who represents some of our most deserving Federal beneficiaries.

THE GI BILL

There was no stronger proponent of education benefits for veterans than SPARK. He once said that the GI bill "has provided unprecedented opportunities for millions of Americans to expand their personal horizons through education and training which would otherwise have been beyond their means."

When SPARK said this, he spoke from his personal experience as a youthful veteran of the Afro-European campaign, SPARKY was able to attend Harvard Law School through financial assistance afforded by the GI bill. SPARKY often said that he would never have been able to become a Member of this Chamber had it not been for the GI bill.

Mr. Speaker, we have friends of SPARKY who are here today. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in expressing sorrow at the untimely death of my friend and colleague, SPARKY MATSUNAGA, Senator from Hawaii. For a number of years he was a valued Member of the U.S. House of Representatives before going to the Senate where he served 14 years.

He was an excellent public servant and a good friend.

Our families were good friends, and his daughter is married and lives in my district in Mississippi.

To all the family we express our sorrow at his untimely death. We have lost a good friend and the Nation a fine public servant.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am 1 of the 12 remaining Members of the House who had the honor of voting to admit Hawaii into the Union, along with the chairman of the full committee who just spoke. I have known all of the Representatives from Hawaii, and I can truly say that they have been outstanding, one and all.

Mr. Speaker, "man for all seasons" would be an apt description of the dear friend and colleague we honor here today. Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA will go down in history as an eminent statesman from our great 50th State. But also, as his colleagues well know, he was a former teacher and prosecutor, a decorated combat veteran, an able lawyer, a leader for peace and humanitarian causes, an exemplary husband and father, an amateur poet, an authority on agriculture and finance, and a marvelous spokesman for his native Hawaii and for Japanese-American citizens. Like many others in the House, it was my privilege to enjoy a warm friendship with SPARK from the time he was first elected to Congress. We spent many memorable hours talking about topics ranging from farming and free trade to human service needs of the Nation. In his work in the House, SPARK would zero in on an objective and keep after it with unfailing good humor but unbelievable tenacity. His wife, Helene, and my wife, Bea, have also been intimate friends through the years.

It is entirely fitting and I thank the gentleman from Hawaii, one of SPARK's closest friends, for setting aside this special time in the House for us to reflect on the lifelong record of integrity and devotion to the common good of this extraordinary public servant. In his seven terms in the House, SPARK served with distinction on the Agriculture, Post Office and Civil Service, and Rules Committees. We remember him as deputy majority whip who knew the rules and the issues and whose leadership was readily accepted by his colleagues because of his warm personal attributes and good will. It was poetic justice that he succeeded by sheer personal energy in leading to the enactment of the Civil Liberties Act of 1987, and then leading the effort in the Senate to make it an entitlement so that Japanese-Americans, so rightly entitled to compensation, could be sure to receive it soon. It was symbolic of his passionate commitment to the great issues that his last vote in the Senate was for the Clean Air Act. Our hearts go out to his lovely wife, Helene, and to his five children. He will be sorely missed in the Congress by his countless friends. As to enemies, if he had any, I never heard of them.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Iowa for his remarks.

I yield to the gentlewoman from Hawaii [Mrs. SAIKI], who also attended the services for SPARKY in Honolulu as a representative of this body.

Mrs. SAIKI. Mr. Speaker, and my fellow colleagues, we gather here today to honor and pay tribute to a former colleague in the House, Senator SPARK MASAYUKI MATSUNAGA.

SPARKY served in this House for 14 years before he went to the Senate for 14 more years. Each of those years was devoted—day and night—to serving his Hawaii constituents. And I would venture to say there is probably no one on Capitol Hill who wasn't touched by SPARKY's presence or his valuable work.

The "aloha spirit," was truly what SPARKY lived by, strove for, and what he embodied. SPARKY never changed, he only matured.

He learned from his very humble beginnings on the island of Kauai the importance of kindness. SPARKY brought with him to Washington, this "aloha spirit." He shared his love and enthusiasm for life and mankind with his colleagues and his constituents.

He was full of compassion for his State, his people, and his country. Even if you didn't know SPARKY personally, he took the time to make you feel as if you did.

SPARKY has been characterized more recently by his Senate colleagues as diligent, legislatively astute, persistent, gentle, and tireless. His very long days are legendary, not only here on Capitol Hill, but in his beloved Hawaii. He took the time, no matter how much, to do what he felt needed to be done.

Senator MATSUNAGA took the words "public service" to heart. His career as a public servant began as a public school teacher before World War II, a career in public service that would span an amazing 50 years.

SPARKY's efforts are legendary for fighting—in his own selfless way—for what he believed would help people, people in Hawaii, of course, but people across America and around the world.

He fought for peace all his life.

In college, SPARKY wrote:

If we want peace, we must educate people to want peace. We must replace attitudes favorable to war with attitudes opposed to war.

What made SPARKY different was that he went to work and literally spent his life creating what he believed. His Institute of Peace exists today, because of him. He learned the horrors of war and the insult of discrimination early, and was wounded by both experiences. But, SPARKY worked to redress them.

The Japanese-American reparations authority exists because of him. Stories abound pointing to his valor on the field of battle during World War II, and his courage was equal to that when it came to getting restitution for Japanese-Americans.

When he argued before Congress for another earlier cause, statehood for Hawaii, one Senator remarked that it was the most stirring testimony he'd heard in 6 years on Capitol Hill.

A peacemaker, a legislator, a leader, SPARKY was also a poet, using the language of the heart to bring peace to us all. Because of his effort again, America has a national poet laureate designated to continue the tradition he knew should be.

SPARKY sought peace not only here on Earth but in our space program as well. He wanted a joint United States-Soviet space mission to Mars. He called it Journeys Beyond the Cold War.

His Institute for Peace probably made him the happiest of all for it went to the very thing he lived for—peace in the world, goodwill toward man. He lived every moment a man at peace, striving to share what he knew, peaceful thoughts, advancing us toward a better and better world.

SPARK MATSUNAGA—our Ambassador of Peace.

As many of our constituents from Hawaii know, SPARKY had the time to take almost every islander who came to Washington to lunch. Thousands of constituents would look forward to this.

We know, as Members of Congress, how visitors come in to see us for courtesy calls and to "talk-story" as we say in Hawaii.

My constituents have often come into my office, chatted with me, and then when we finished, they'd say, well, we're off to lunch now with SPARKY.

He felt he owed it to his constituents to spend as much time with them as possible. This was a humble man dedicated to his people, who loved him in return.

Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA was a very good man who gave his life for Hawaii's people, for his country's benefit, for his own beliefs.

No one can give more with his life than SPARKY did.

Aloha, SPARKY, very well done.

Mahalo.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Hawaii [Mrs. SAIKI] for giving us that deep insight of our friend from Hawaii, SPARKY MATSUNAGA. I thank her very much for the personal touch she has given her remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I will now yield to our colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. MATSUI], who has had a part in all this and has helped SPARKY in the past with redress.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Hawaii, for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to pay my respects to SPARKY's wife Helene and their five children.

SPARK was a very dear friend of mine. To all the people of the State of Hawaii and all the people of this great Nation of ours, SPARK MATSUNAGA, as others have said, was a poet, a statesman, and a very wonderful and fine human being.

I remember very distinctly the first time I had the opportunity to meet SPARK MATSUNAGA. I had been a candidate for the U.S. Congress in 1978. I had just won my primary, and I came to Washington, DC, to visit and thank a number of people for their help. SPARK MATSUNAGA was one of those who was very high on my list.

I visited with him in the area called the lobby right off the floor of the U.S. Senate, because he was very busy and was on the floor that day. He came out, and we chatted for a while. He said, "So you want to be the next Congressman from your area?"

And I said, "Yes."

He said, "I'll be right back." He went back into the Chambers of the U.S. Senate, and within 10 minutes he came out and brought with him Sam Hayakawa, the Senator from the State of California, and he said; "Sam, I want to introduce you to a young man. This is ROBERT MATSUI. He is running for Congress, and, Sam, Mr. MATSUI is a Democrat and I know you are a Republican, but you are going to have to promise me one thing. And he had a twinkle in his eye and a little smile on his face. He said, "I don't want you campaigning against this young man."

And Sam said, "That's fine, SPARK."

I will never forget that, because SPARK gave meaning to who he was, because he actually wanted to do something for me, and in fact he did, because Sam Hayakawa did not come out and campaign for my opponent that year.

Others have talked about SPARK's legislative achievements. I will never forget when Congressman MINETA and Congressman AKAKA and I were testifying before one of the subcommittees of the Judiciary Committee on H.R. 442, the bill to provide compensation for Americans of Japanese ancestry for their internment during World War II, when American citizens were incarcerated by their own Government because of race. I remember how SPARK became so emotional and how he had tears in his eyes when he spoke about his father, who was a Buddhist priest who was locked up in Hawaii because of his ancestry after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, and how he felt so strongly about all the 120,000 of us who had interned from California and other Western States in the continental United States. And I remember how he was so instrumental in the ultimate passage of that legislation when singlehandedly on the floor of the U.S. Senate SPARK MATSUNAGA was able to get 76 of his colleagues to support that legislation by cosponsoring the bill.

Let me make a comment about that, if I may. Many of those Members did not know what that bill was all about. Many of those Members really did not give a lot of attention to it. The reason they cosponsored the bill was because of their affection and because of their loyalty and trust for SPARK MATSUNAGA.

Ultimately, as we all know, the bill became an entitlement, thanks to the help of Congressman MINETA, Congressman DAN AKAKA, Senator INOUYE, and certainly SPARK MATSUNAGA played a major leading role in that effort.

I would only conclude by saying that this body and the Senate will be somewhat lessened because SPARK MATSUNAGA is no longer with us. At the same time, the fact that he served in this Capitol for some 28 years has made it a greater and better place for all Americans in the future.

So SPARK, we will miss you, and we love you for what you have done for all of us. Thank you.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. MATSUI] for his remarks and for sharing with us his personal experiences with SPARKY.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS], who was a very, very good friend of SPARKY'S.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman so much for yielding, and I thank him very much for giving us the privilege of participating in this ceremony for SPARKY.

Mr. Speaker, I quote now from the words of our dear friend and former colleague, SPARK MATSUNAGA, when he addressed this House during memorial ceremonies in honor of my husband, Hale Boggs. He said:

> It is with a mixed sense of deep sorrow and great pride that I rise to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the memory of [SPARK MATSUNAGA]—sorrow over the loss of a dear friend and pride in having had such a friend.

SPARKY and Helene have been dear and treasured friends for many years, starting with his trips to Washington in 1950 and 1954 with the Hawaiian statehood delegation to the Congress. Our mutual friend in New Orleans, George Lehleitner, had imbued Hale with the sense of justice and appropriateness which statehood for Hawaii represented. And SPARKY was the embodiment of everything that was right about the inclusion of Hawaiians as full citizens of the United States. He was a conscientious, productive patriot.

SPARKY also said about Hale, when he seconded Hale's nomination for majority leader of his House, "I like to think of him as one who possessed the qualities of leadership as if so endowed by nature." Well, SPARKY's service to the Army was brilliant and dedicated—and he won the Bronze Star and the Purple Heart with an Oak Leaf Cluster and many, many other decorations—as was his service in the territorial government legislature where he served as a majority leader, in his House where he served as a deputy whip, and in the U.S. Senate, where he made a brilliant career of his strong and wonderful feelings about his State, about his people, and about the United States of America. Surely they all displayed his natural qualities of leadership.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, our hearts go out to Helene and to the other members of his private family, but they also go out to the members of his extended family, the people, the citizens, of the State of Hawaii.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS] for her personal remarks on SPARKY.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will call on another Member from California, one who was part of the delegation that represented his House at the Services of SPARKY in Honolulu. He was also a very close friend of SPARKY'S.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA].

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor and privilege of attending the memorial service in Honolulu on April 18, 1990, as the only mainland Member of Congress to see the outpouring of love that was exhibited toward Senator SPARK M. MATSUNAGA and was very moved by that experience.

Mr. Speaker, there are many great words etched in stone here in Washington, DC.

Some words speak of the men and women who have helped shape the United States. Others speak to the great principles we have come to hold dearest of all.

Binding these words together is a special resolve: to seek the unique voices among us to reflect the best human decency, and the most tireless determination to better ourselves and our Nation.

SPARK MATSUNAGA was such a voice.

Eighty years ago, Woodrow Wilson spoke of Americans like SPARK when he said:

> We live in an age disturbed, confused, bewildered, afraid of its own forces, in search not merely of its road but even of its direction. There are many voices of counsel, but few voices of vision.

SPARK MATSUNAGA, my great friend and colleague, was such a visionary, and more.

SPARK drew his strength from people, and he responded with warmth, persistence, and inspired public service.

SPARK was very much a teacher. And as with the best of teachers, he was a consumate listener. He listened because he cared.

He cared about people. He cared about peace. He cared about justice.

During the Second World War, SPARK was a highly decorated member of the all-Nisei 100th Battalion and 442nd Regimental Combat Team, the most honored in the history of the United States.

Forty-five years later, he led the fight in Congress to redress the injustices endured by the 120,000 Americans of Japanese ancestry who were interned by the U.S. Government during the very war in which he and so many others fought so bravely.

Redress was not a Japanese-American issue to SPARK.

It was not an Asian-American issue.

It was an American issue, which is how he wished the lessons of the internment to be remembered. Through his tireless efforts, they will.

It was SPARK's Native Hawaiian Claims Commission which served as the pattern for the Commission on the Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians. That Commission concluded, and I quote:

The personal injustice of excluding, removing, and detaining loyal American citizens to manifest. Such events are extraordinary and unique in American history. For every citizen and for American public life, they pose haunting questions about our country and its past.

SPARK's determination to correct those historic injustices was realized in the Civil Liberties Act of 1988, a law that stands as a living testament to his dedication to the rights of every American.

Mr. Speaker, great words may be set in stone, but truly great men will always live on in our hearts.

SPARK and his ideal will live in us all so long as there are wrongs to right, people in need of justice, and a world in need of peace.

In 1938, while a student at the University of Hawaii, SPARK wrote a composition entitled "Let Us Teach Our Children To Want Peace."

In it he wrote:

Wants are the drives of all human action. If we want peace, we must educate people to want peace. We must replace attitudes favorable to war with attitudes opposed to war.

Parents should protect the child from experiences with materials of warfare. Teachers should let the generals fall into the background and bring into the foreground leaders in social reform as heroes.

We must help our young to see that there are other types of bravery than that which is displayed on the battlefield.

If in our teaching we emphasize the life and work of our great contributors instead of our great destroyers, people will come to realize that moral courage is bravery of the highest type, and America will be called the Champion of Peace.

SPARK lived by this goal, and saw it embodied in the United States Institute of Peace, which he established.

SPARK MATSUNAGA was a great man of peace who fought in war, and later fought to eliminate war and the wartime injustices which preyed upon innocent people.

That he was so successful in this is his lasting legacy to our Nation and a timeless source of inspiration to all Americans. Having known SPARK since 1962, he was my role model. We all love you, SPARK, and we will all miss SPARK MATSUNAGA.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Samoa [Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA], and, coming from Samoa, he has been a close friend of Hawaii and also a close friend of SPARKY's.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues today in expressing our sense of deep personal loss over the recent death of Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA on the 15th of this month.

SPARKY, as he was known, was one of the finest human beings I have known. I will always remember this thoughtful man who has contributed so much of his life to the service of his State and to our Nation.

SPARK MATSUNAGA was born on October 8, 1916, on the island of Kauai to a humble immigrant family from Japan. He worked hard and performed many odd jobs to support the family even while attending high school and as an undergraduate at the University of Hawaii. He earned several academic honors which included his election to the Phi Beta Kappa National Honor Society. After the war, and with the use of his GI bill, he completed his law studies at Harvard University.

After spending some time as a prosecutor in Honolulu, SPARKY was elected a member of the territorial house of representatives from 1954 to 1959, and later on became the house majority leader. He was later elected a Member of Congress where he served in the Rules Committee for 14 years. In 1976, he ran for the U.S. Senate seat that became vacant upon Senator Hiram Fong's retirement. He won the election and served as Hawaii's Senator for 14 years.

At the outbreak of World War II, SPARKY joined the U.S. Army's 100th Battalion which later became part of the 442d Regimental Combat Team. Serving in Italy, that regiment became one of the most heavily decorated and famous units in the history of the Army. While fighting in Italy, SPARKY earned the Bronze Star Medal and two Purple Hearts.

Ironically, after the attack on Pearl Harbor, Senator MATSUNAGA, though a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army, was detained in a military installation in Wisconsin. He helped draft a plea to President Roosevelt to allow him and other Japanese-American detainees to organize a Nisei regimental combat team. As a result, both the 100th Battalion and the 442d Regimental Combat Team was officially organized by Executive order of President Roosevelt to allow Americans of Japanese ancestry to fight as soldiers during World War II.

Mr. Speaker, let me share with my colleagues the highlights and accomplishments of these two combat units. The 100th Battalion joined the 442d Regimental Combat Team, and as such they rescued 1st Battalion, 141st Regiment, also known as the Lost Battalion. The 442d Regimental Combat Team suffered 314 percent casualties, earned 18,143 individual decorations, participated in six campaigns, and received seven Distinguished Unit Citations. The 442d Regimental Combat Team emerged as the most decorated military unit for bravery in the history of the U.S. Army. The 100th Battalion today is the only battalion-sized unit in the U.S. Army authorized to wear its own insignia—a shoulder patch.

Senator MATSUNAGA devoted a great deal of his life to redress a grave injustice done to Japanese-American citizens by the Federal Government after the attack on Pearl Harbor. SPARKY lobbied for 9 years trying to enact a law to provide approximately $1.25 billion as reparation and payment of $20,000 to each survivor among Japanese-Americans who were placed in relocation camps during World War II.

In 1984, Congress approved another of Senator MATSUNAGA's longtime goals—the establishment of the U.S. institute or academy for the establishment of peace internationally. The institute distributes grants for the study of peaceful resolution to conflict. SPARKY lobbied for 22 years before persuading Congress to establish the institute. He was often quoted as saying that peacemaking is as much an art to be learned as war.

In 1986, when colleagues heatedly debated star wars, he proposed a joint United States-Soviet exploration of Mars. That global approach was a legacy from his father, a former Shinto priest, who urged him to have an appreciation for both Japanese and Western cultures.

Mr. Speaker, I want my colleagues to know that the people of American Samoa have been recipients of many Federal programs through the tremendous efforts of Senator MATSUNAGA, both as a Member of Congress and as U.S. Senator. Just 2 weeks ago, SPARKY informed me that he fully supported my efforts to provide improvements for the weather observation station which was devastated by Hurricane Ofa 2 months ago in Samoa.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who knew SPARKY will miss him very much. Perhaps my good friend, Hawaii's Governor John Waihee, said it best when he said that SPARKY will be remembered most for his vision of world peace and his faith in humanity and in the tenderness of the human soul.

Mr. Speaker, as a lifemember of the Go-for-Broke Association and as a Reserve officer in the U.S. Army, and more specifically a member of the 100th Battalion 442d Infantry Reserve Organization in Fort DeRussy, HI, I know our commanding officer, Lt. Col.

Robert Lee and all the members of the battalion, including B Company that is stationed in Samoa—all join me in expressing our fond Aloha and "go for Broke" slogan to Senator MATSUNAGA.

Mr. Speaker, The term "Go for broke" was the expression used by the members of the 100th Battalion and the 442d Regimental Combat Team in pidgin-English, which meant give it all you got, spare nothing, even if your guts fall out, you keep going, never say die, and never give up.

Mr. Speaker, with Aloha I say to the Honorable SPARK MATSUNAGA, U.S. Senator—"Go for broke, SPARKY—and may your journey be one filled with happiness and with Aloha Pumehana," from all the Blalas of the 100th Battalion, 442d Infantry.

Mr. Speaker, I submit for the RECORD a historical overview of the famous 100th Battalion, 442d Infantry.

SUMMARY HISTORY OF 100TH BATTALION 442D INFANTRY

1. Mission: As with all infantry units, the mission of the 100th Battalion, 442d Infantry, is to close with the enemy by means of fire and maneuver in order to destroy or capture him or repell his assault by fire, close combat and counterattack. Its combat support unit provides reconnaissance, and ground surveillance, indirect fire support, antitank support and limited air defense support for the infantry battalion, infantry division or separate infantry brigade. Its headquarters unit provides command, control and supervision of the operations of the infantry battalion.

2. History: The history of the 100th Battalion, 442d Infantry begins with the attack on Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941. At the time of the attack, there were already some 1,500 Nisei's serving in the U.S. Army most of them with the 24th and 25th Infantry Divisions, and the 298th and 299th Infantry Regiments at Schofield Barracks. Six months after Pearl Harbor, in May 1942, Army Chief of Staff George C. Marshall ordered the formation of the 100th Battalion, composed of men already in the U.S. Army. The 100th Battalion (Separate) was thus activated on 12 June 1942, at Oakland, California.

The unit took its basic training at Camp Shelby, Mississippi under LTC Farrant L. Turner and was deployed overseas in August 1943. Landing in Oran, North Africa, the battalion crossed over to Italy, attached to the 133d Infantry Regiment, 34th Infantry Division. It participated in the bitter advance up the Italian peninsula fighting in the major battles at Salerno, Valturno River, Rapido River and Cassino.

The 442d Regimental Combat Team was activated at Camp Shelby, Mississippi on 1 February 1943 with COL Charles Spence commanding. After training at Camp Shelby and in the Louisiana Army Maneuvers, the RCT deployed overseas in May, 1944. Landing in Italy, it joined the 34th Infantry Division and the 100th Infantry Battalion. Together, they participated in the Anzio and Rome-Arno campaigns and later fought in the Rhineland and North Appennines campaigns attached to the 36th Infantry Division.

While attached to the 36th, they rescued the 1st Battalion, 141st Regiment, known as the "Lost Battalion." During the rescue, the RCT became closely attached to the people of Bruyeres, France, a little town in the Vosges Mountains. A sister city relationship exists today between Bruyeres and Honolulu.

In March 1945, the RCT returned to Italy and attached to the 92d Infantry Division, particpated in the Po Valley campaign, their last campaign before the end of the war.

The record of the RCT is without equal. The unit suffered 314% casualities, earned 18,143 individual decorations, participated in six campaigns and received seven Distinguished Unit Citations, three by the 100th Battalion. It emerged as the most decorated unit of its size in the U.S. Army.

The unit was inactivated in August 1946 and reactivated in the U.S. Army Reserve in July 1947. The Battalion is the only battalion-sized unit in the U.S. Army authorized its own shoulder patch.

During the period July 1947 to 13 May 1968, the Battalion underwent organizational changes from Regimental to Battle Group, to its present battalion structure. Significant events during this period were providing individual personnel replacements during the Korean War when all company grade officers and senior NCO's were recalled to active duty. The Battalion also participated in Operation Koolau with the 25th Infantry Division in 1959 and Exercise Coral Sands 11 with the 11th Infantry Brigade in 1967.

On March 13th, 1968, during the Vietnam War, the 100th Battalion, 442d Infantry was ordered to active duty and attached to the 29th Infantry Brigade (HANG) as one of its Maneuver Battalions. Its mission was to provide strategic reserve in the Pacific. Stationed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, the Battalion trained for eventual deployment, and provided a manpower pool of trained personnel replacements.

On an individual basis, most members of the Battalion were reassigned to Vietnam. During the period 13 May 1968 to 12 December 1970 a total of nine gallant men from the 100th Battalion 442d Infantry gave their lives while serving in combat in the Republic of Vietnam.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from American Samoa very much for his personal comments and remarks about SPARKY.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to another good friend of SPARKY, one who has played a major role in the redress bill that SPARKY shepherded through these halls and one who has been helpful to SPARKY. I yield to our friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON].

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Hawaii for taking this time so we can pay our respects to our great friend, SPARKY MATSUNAGA.

I rise today to join my colleagues to pay tribute to one of this body's most distinguished alumni, one of this Nation's bravest war heroes, and one of the foremost leaders in the quest to establish lasting peace and justice for all men and women.

Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA was a remarkable man who led a life which was as rich as it was diverse.

SPARK MATSUNAGA and I came to the House of Representatives in January 1963. We were both elected in 1962, in November. We were sworn in in January 1963, and we served together in this body until he was elected to the Senate 14 years later.

During that time and during the time that he was in the House and more recently during the time that he was in the Senate, we worked together on many matters, and I considered him a very close personal friend and his wife, Helene, as a close personal friend over these many years.

He distinguished himself here in the House, particularly as a member of the Rules Committee, and distinguished himself in the Senate and was highly regarded in the Senate, particularly in Hawaii.

It so happened coincidentally that our paths crossed again, because on Easter Sunday I was visiting along with my wife, Nancy, visiting my son, Steven, Comdr. Steven Horton and his wife, Ann, and two children. We were in Hawaii. We got up to have breakfast and the headline said that Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA had died. It was a close personal loss for me on that Sunday to read that headline and to know that SPARK had passed on.

I had served not only in the House with him, but we had been on a couple of trips together. He was in the Reserve unit that I was in during the early days of our tenure here in the House of Representatives, and it so happened that we went on a trip to the Orient. We were in Okinawa. We were in Tokyo and other places in the Far East in connection with our work on the Reserve unit that we were assigned to. We also visited in Honolulu.

It was my privilege to be his roommate. He and I were roommates on that trip and I got to know him even better than I had in just the relationship we had here in the Congress.

He was a very fine person. I remember on that trip that many people in different parts of the Far East would have little events for him in the evening and SPARK asked all the Members if they would like to go with him to that and I was one of the few who went with him to every one of them. I will tell you, I really appreciated the high regard that SPARK was held in by the people throughout the Far East.

He was widely known for his work in the House and then later in the Senate and distinguished himself greatly. I also had, but I did not know him at the time, but it so happened that I was in combat in World War II; I commanded an infantry company that made the landing in North Africa, and then I was in Italy, and my job with the office that I was serving at the time in Naples, Italy, was to meet new units that came in. It so happened that I met the 442d when it came into Italy just before it went into combat in Italy up at Monte Cassino. I knew personally the efforts of the 442d, and that is why I was so happy to help with H.R. 442, and to make it possible for that legislation to be passed to make it possible for those people of Japanese ancestry who had been so mistreated by our Government during World War II to be provided some recognition for the suffering that they had had and the country could pay its tribute to them for their sacrifice and for their willingness to serve this country.

SPARK had a distinguished military record, and I was very proud to share that with him on numerous occasions. It also happened that we have a meeting once a year of the 88th Club on St. Patrick's Day and, as a matter of fact, the gentleman in the well now, DANNY AKAKA, is one of those who has attended for some time, and SPARKY had a very good singing voice. A lot of people do not realize this. But as does the gentleman in the well and my wife, Nancy, also has a very good singing voice. On numerous occasions, I can still hear SPARK and Nancy and DANNY singing together Hawaiian songs. So I had a very special personal relationship with Helene and with SPARK, and I did have the opportunity; I was not at the funeral, but I did visit the Capitol and saw his casket as he lay in state there. I heard some of the tributes being paid to him in Hawaii while I was there. A great person.

I personally will miss him, and I want to take this opportunity to say to his wife and his children that my wife and I miss SPARKY, and we will continue to think of him and what he has meant to this country. I join with the gentleman in paying our respects to the family and to the great State of Hawaii for the type of representation that SPARK MATSUNAGA gave.

Mr. Speaker, SPARK and I also worked together on passing Asian/Pacific American Heritage Week. Work began on this legislation back in 1978. Asian/Pacific American Heritage Week was first observed in May 1979. Last year, SPARK and I once again joined forces in introducing new legislation to extend this observance into an entire month. His leadership in this effort will be missed, but it is my hope that both bodies will act to pass H.R. 3802 or its companion bill S. 2111 in his honor.

I was touched by the extreme sense of loss felt by his constituents. SPARK was more than a political figure for Hawaiians. As one of that State's founding fathers, he was viewed with the same reverence that all Americans view George Washington and Thomas Jefferson.

Before his death, many had questioned whether SPARK should have resigned in light of his declining health. In response to those suggestions, the Honolulu Advertiser called on those to reconsider their position. An April 8, 1990, editorial stated:

[Spark's] 20-hour days over two decades have earned whatever sick leave he needs. The time will come when . . . Spark Matsunaga decides to step aside from his work. But, . . . that should be determined by this man who has always acted in what he felt to be Hawaii's best interests.

This statement clearly shows the high regard in which SPARK was held.

The search for peace was one of Senator MATSUNAGA's lifetime goals. As a young student in 1938, SPARK wrote an essay for an English class entitled, "Let Us Teach Our People To Want Peace." He wrote:

Wants are the drives of all human action. If we want peace, we must educate people to want peace. We must replace attitudes favorable to war with attitudes opposed to war.

SPARK's sponsorship of legislation calling for a peace institute was clearly an extension of the essay he had written. A noted poet, SPARK continued his literary expressions as a Member of Congress.

SPARK's leadership will be missed both here in Washington and out in Hawaii, but he leaves behind a legacy which will endure forever. My wife Nancy joins me in extending our sympathies to SPARK's wife Helene and their five children.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for his remarks on SPARKY. I know that they have been great friends over the years.

At this time I yield to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I also thank the gentleman from Hawaii for calling this special order for our friend, SPARK MATSUNAGA.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in honoring and remembering our dear friend who has passed away as was mentioned April 15, 1990.

Others have spoken about SPARKY's background, about his training, about his legislation for which he was renowned, and for his many accomplishments in the House and in the Senate, and even before then in the legislature in Hawaii.

But I must say that not only have the people of Hawaii lost one of their greatest legislators and not only have we in the Congress lost one of our finest colleagues, but I rise to speak on behalf of my constituents in San Francisco where we are, indeed, blessed, Mr. Speaker, with, and enriched by, a great Japanese American population; indeed, even in the larger sense, the entire Asian American population, all of whom, even though they were not Hawaiians, some of whom were, but many were not, identified with SPARKY, took pride in his accomplishments, rooted for him, of course, with the Reparations Act, and were generally very, very proud of the work that he did here, and I might add, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON] did, of the entire Hawaiian delegation.

SPARK, as we all know, was a champion of peace and civil rights and will long be remembered for his leadership on the civil liberties act to provide redress to Japanese Americans interned during World War II. It was through SPARK's leadership that all Americans came to understand the wrong that was committed in the 1940's to American citizens.

It was a great honor for all of us to have supported SPARKY on this historic legislation.

I would like to, on a personal note, particularly call to mind SPARKY's courage, bravery, and fortitude in coming to the floor of the Senate at the time of the override of the President's veto of the Chinese students' bill. He demonstrated his commitment to peace and human rights that day, too. I will be forever grateful to him for his efforts on behalf of the Chinese students. He was, indeed, a fighter, as has been mentioned, and never gave up.

I am so pleased that the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. AKAKA] has called this special order today. I think it is very fitting that we are honoring SPARK, a champion of peaceful exploration in space, on the very day that the shuttle finally was launched, perhaps to accommodate this special order, Mr. AKAKA, that it was fate, and launch the Hubbell space telescope. I think it is very fitting we are here to honor SPARK and his commitment to space.

I hope that there will be something that will be named for him in recognition for his leadership, and as I said, we have in our district many people who supported SPARK because of ancestry and because of his civil rights stand, but there are also many people there who were fans of his because of his work for peace in space and the exploration of space. So he had a constituency in that regard as well.

I know that we all will miss his smile, the twinkle in his eye, and I know, personally, I will miss the chocolate-covered macadamia nuts that he treated us to from time to time. That was the first gift I received when I came to Congress, and I told SPARK, "Keep them coming," and he did.

On behalf of my constituents, I wish to extend to the Matsunaga family our deepest condolences, identify myself with the remarks that have been made in memory and in honor of SPARK today, and thank the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. AKAKA], our colleague, for taking this special order, and say to SPARKY, "We will miss you. Aloha."

Mr. AKAKA. I thank the gentlewoman from California very much.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to a friend of many years of SPARK's in the House, one who has distinguished himself here, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA conscientiously and ably represented his constituents in Hawaii and earned his constituents' respect and the friendship of his colleagues in the Senate, and previously in the House.

He will be remembered in history for his successful efforts in the establishment of the U.S. Institute for Peace, in which efforts I was glad to play a part in the team he organized to pass this legislation through Congress. MATSUNAGA, a World War II hero in the American Army forces in Europe, felt that a country like ours, which invests so greatly in life and treasures in military strengths, should also invest thoughtfully in the quest for peace. And this institution fulfills that dream.

He also spoke eloquently and worked forcefully for the legislation that honored loyal Americans of Japanese ancestry who were interned in World War II. His speech on the Senate floor for this legislation was moving and effective.

We who knew him in Congress loved him for his warm and outgoing personality. He was not only a man with the spark that gave him his name, but also a man of sunny disposition that could have given him just as well another name—Sunny. We are all the beneficiaries of his fine life, and with his beloved family, we sincerely share their grief.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield such time as he may consume to our mutual good friend, a good friend of SPARK's, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join our colleagues in paying tribute to an outstanding legislator and dedicated public servant, Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA of Hawaii.

Senator MATSUNAGA has been in public life longer than his home State of Hawaii has been in the Union. As a member of the territorial legislature prior to statehood, he was one of the leading proponents of making Hawaii our 50th State. He had the foresight and the vision to grasp that the time for statehood had come, and played an integral role in convincing his fellow Hawaiians of the benefits of statehood. Senator MATSUNAGA also understood that Americans had felt Hawaii was already a part of the United States, even before that fateful Sunday morning when Japanese bombs plunged the United States into World War II.

SPARK MATSUNAGA was a member of the famous 442d Regimental Combat Team during World War II. The battalion of Japanese Americans was the most decorated unit of all during the Second World War, and was one of the most famous fighting teams in all of American history. SPARK MATSUNAGA's service with them underscored his courage and his dedication to American principles.

Upon the achieving of statehood, this fine record of public service helped get him elected first to the U.S. House of Representatives where I first came to know, admire and work with him and then to the U.S. Senate, where he served with distinction since 1976.

Perhaps the greatest tribute to SPARK MATSUNAGA's legislative skills was the passage he obtained of the bill granting $1.25 billion in compensation to Japanese Americans interned during World War II. By steering this unpopular legislation through both Houses of Congress, Senator MATSUNAGA appealed to the desire for justice in all of us. It was through his leadership that one of the most disgraceful episodes in American history was redressed.

The passing of Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA leaves a void on Capitol Hill. He was a giant of a man, who will be greatly missed, and we join in extending our condolences to his widow, Helene.

Mr. AKAKA. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. BROOKS. I want to take this opportunity to join my colleagues in expressing our deep sense of sadness at the passing of our friend, SPARK MATSUNAGA of Hawaii. Senator MATSUNAGA not only served this body with both distinction and dedication for 14 years, but also served in the U.S. Senate from 1977 until his death a week ago. In this House and in the other Chamber, he was known as a hard worker and could always be counted on to offer good advice and the hand of friendship in difficult situations.

It was my distinct privilege to serve with Senator MATSUNAGA from 1962 until he left this body in 1976. The people of Hawaii can be proud of the 25-year record of service he established and the fine representation he gave to his district, his State, and his country. They could not have had a stronger advocate here in Washington, and he left an indelible mark on the social, economic, and political fabric of Hawaii.

As a member of the House Rules Committee, and as chairman of its Subcommittee on Federal, State, and Community Services, he earned the respect of all with whom he came in contact.

All of us will miss his many contributions to our joint legislative efforts. He set a high standard of excellence for others to follow.

Along with his many friends here and in the other body, I will miss him.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join you and our colleagues in the House in this moment of both great sadness but also great admiration for our late friend and colleague, Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA. It was my great fortune to be able to serve with SPARK for 7 years in the House before he moved onto the Senate in 1977.

Mr. Speaker, SPARK M. MATSUNAGA lived an exemplary life dedicated to the public service, and his record is one that any of us would be truly proud to call our own. He was serving his country long before coming to the U.S. Congress.

He was a highly decorated veteran of World War II, having been a member of the famous 100th Battalion and the 442d "Go for Broke" Regimental Combat Team of the U.S. Army fighting in Italy and France. This was the most decorated unit in U.S. history. During World War II SPARK was a hero in every sense of the word. He was wounded in defense of our country and earned two Purple Hearts and the Bronze Star.

When the war was over, SPARK M. MATSUNAGA began a different kind of fight, the fight for peace. To that end, he served the people of Hawaii and our Nation for more than 35 years, first in the Hawaii Territorial Legislature, then in the U.S. House of Representatives from 1962 to 1976, and finally in the U.S. Senate.

Mr. Speaker, SPARK MATSUNAGA consistently demonstrated his dedication to fighting for peace and justice. He was the author of the Civil Liberties Act of 1987, which provided long overdue apology and redress to Japanese-Americans interned during World War II; he was an early advocate of United States-Soviet cooperation in peaceful space exploration, and he was the father of the United States Institute of Peace.

Truly, SPARK M. MATSUNAGA was a statesman and a leader who led by example. I know that we can do greatest honor to his enduring memory by dedicating ourselves to those universal principles of peace and justice which he held so dear.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to our friend and colleague, SPARK MASAYUKI MATSUNAGA.

As a young man at the University of Hawaii, "SPARKY" wrote:

If we want peace, we must educate people to want peace. We must replace attitudes favorable to war with attitudes opposed to war.

This was the vision of an individual who had yet to experience the true horrors of war. A short time after writing these words, SPARK "joined up" and served with the "Go for Broke" 442d Regimental Combat Team in Europe during World War II. He was wounded twice and received a Bronze Star for bravery and two Purple Hearts.

"SPARKY" was a champion of world peace and cooperation throughout his 40 years of public service to the people of Hawaii and the rest of the country.

From his first election to the House of Representatives in 1962 and, later, the Senate in 1976, he focused his efforts on establishing a U.S. Institute of Peace, long before many people jumped on the glasnost bandwagon.

In 1984, 22 years after his initial election to Congress, the Institute of Peace—his vision—became a reality.

He also fought for fairness. In his early political career, as majority leader of Hawaii's territorial House of Representatives during the 1950's, he worked to establish full citizenship and statehood for the people of Hawaii.

SPARK, later, outraged at the unfair internment many of his fellow Japanese-Americans endured during World War II, reaching out to his Senate colleagues one-by-one, was able to convince 74 of 100 of them to cosponsor the landmark bill that would provide an apology and compensation to each living internee.

Because of his own experiences in war, "SPARKY" never forgot those brave individuals who selflessly served this country, and, both as a Representative and a Senator, he sponsored legislation that addressed the special needs of veterans.

His last effort, which unfortunately he did not live to see, was the construction of a veterans hospital in Hawaii that would serve the aging and ailing military veterans in his native State. This facility, when completed, will bear "SPARKY's name.

We all have heard the story of how "SPARKY" came to be known as "SPARKY" because he was always lagging behind the older boys in races at camp.

But as I look back and remember SPARK, a friend and colleague, trying to catch up to everyone else doesn't come to my mind. I have always thought of SPARK as someone who was leading rather than following.

During the 27 years he graced these Capitol steps, SPARK was a courageous public servant who served through constant pain until he could serve no longer.

I extend my deepest sympathy to his devoted wife and children and hope that we all may find comfort in his accomplishments and vision.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, with the passing of our friend Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA of Hawaii, the Nation has lost a popular leader who dedicated his long and distinguished career to public service and always fought hard for the principles he held dear.

Warmly regarded by colleagues and constituents alike, the junior Senator from Hawaii was unfailingly friendly and kind in his personal demeanor. His gentleness added a rare and often overlooked dimension to daily life in the Halls of Congress.

In Congress, and throughout his life, Senator MATSUNAGA always championed large goals such as peace and justice. His values were forged in the crucible of events that included the United States Government's heartless internment of thousands of Japanese-Americans during World War II. He and other internees convinced President Franklin Roosevelt to allow them to form the first all-Nisei fighting regiment, and famed 100th Infantry Batallion. A twice-wounded war hero, Captain MATSUNAGA helped spur his regiment on to become one of the most highly decorated in history.

Senator MATSUNAGA never forgot the mistreatment of his fellow Nisei at the hands of the U.S. Government. He worked relentlessly until he gained passage of legislation providing a formal apology and monetary compensation for Japanese-Americans sent to wartime government camps.

Long before the Berlin Wall crumbled and the cold war began to thaw, SPARK MATSUNAGA pursued the idea of joint Soviet-American space exploration. After nearly two decades of dialog with his colleagues, in 1984 he finally achieved his quest to establish a Peace Institute to foster the resolution of disputes between nations.

During his time in the House of Representatives, SPARK MATSUNAGA served on the Rules Committee and gained a mastery of House procedures amply demonstrated in his book, "Rulemakers of the House." This volume is required reading for students of government and political science students at many universities, and would serve as a valuable introduction to the legislative process for any new Member of Congress.

Because he was an ardent and effective advocate for environmentally sound renewable energy programs, it is fitting that the Senator's last vote was cast April 3 in favor of the Clean Air Act. This was the final step in a long career devoted to making the world a safer and more livable place for his fellow men and women.

A poet, a peacemaker and a great humanitarian, SPARK MASAYUKI MATSUNAGA will be greatly missed by all of us.

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in this special order in tribute to our late colleague, SPARK MATSUNAGA, an outstanding individual, a friend, and an exceptional legislator.

I had the privilege of serving with SPARK for 4 years in the House of Representatives. He was a knowledgeable, effective legislator who never compromised his principles while fighting for what he believed in.

That is the kind of reputation he achieved even before coming to Congress. He was a combat veteran in World War II and was wounded in service to the country. After serving in the military, he distinguished himself, earning a law degree at the Harvard University Law School, following which he went on to serve in the Hawaii Territorial Legislature, the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate.

While many give only lipservice to liberty, SPARK MATSUNAGA acted on his beliefs and his convictions. He compiled the kind of record of public service that is a monument to the man—thoughtful, caring, committed, and principled.

We will miss his counsel and his guidance, and I will also miss his friendship.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, SPARK MATSUNAGA was a very dear friend of mine. I am deeply saddened by his death. I will miss him very much.

SPARKY was a delightful, intelligent, thoroughly charming man. We shared many happy moments when he was a Member of this House. I benefited from his friendship and I was very proud of his career and his work in the House. While I hated to see him leave, I was just delighted when the people of Hawaii elected him to the Senate in 1976.

Our friendship continued and over the years we worked together on a number of issues. Redress for the internment of Japanese-Americans during World War II was an abiding concern for both of us. It was a difficult issue and SPARKY never gave up. I am very glad that he was able to see the bill become law and the payment mechanism put in place last year.

SPARK MATSUNAGA was a man of principle and high purpose. The people of Hawaii have lost a fine Senator and we have lost a good friend. Addie joins me in extending our most sincere sympathy to Helene and the family.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. AKAKA] for reserving this time to pay tribute to our former colleague and a great statesman, SPARK MATSUNAGA. With his passing, the State of Hawaii and our Nation lost a dedicated and committed leader.

SPARK MATSUNAGA served the people of Hawaii and our country for over 35 years in the Hawaii Territorial Legislature, the House of Representatives, and Senate. SPARK first responded to our Nation's call as an Army captain in Hawaii's famed 100th Infantry Battalion and the 442d "Go for Broke" Regimental Combat Team. A twice-wounded, highly decorated combat veteran, SPARK graduated from Harvard Law School and returned to Hawaii to begin his distinguished career in public service. In 1954 he was elected to the Hawaii Territorial House of Representatives and served as its Majority leader from 1957 to 1959.

Mr. Speaker, SPARK was first elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1962, and served in this body for 14 consecutive years. His accomplishments in the House were many. A specialist in legislative procedures, SPARK was chosen deputy majority whip and served as a key member of the Rules Committee. A book which he wrote about the committee, entitled "Rulemakers of the House," is now required reading in political science courses in 37 colleges and universities across the United States.

In 1976, Hawaii's voters elected SPARK to the U.S. Senate. In the Senate, SPARK was a pioneer in the promotion of renewable energy research and development, an early advocate of United States-Soviet cooperation in space exploration, and a strong proponent of free trade. He was the father of the United States Institute of Peace, and the author of the Civil Liberties Act of 1987, which provided a long overdue apology and redress to Japanese-Americans interned during World War II.

Mr. Speaker, SPARK MATSUNAGA was a gentleman, a statesman, and a friend. Those of us who served in the Congress with SPARK will always remember his warm personality, his determination, and his commitment to his constituency and our Nation. We extend our deepest sympathy to his wife, Helene, his children, and his many friends.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to my good friend, the late Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA of Hawaii.

SPARKY was one of my favorite people. I admired him, respected him, and enjoyed working with him. Our Nation has lost an outstanding leader and statesman. My wife, Lou, and I have lost a good friend.

For more than 35 years, SPARKY dedicated himself to serving the people of Hawaii and our Nation. He was a decorated war hero who worked hard to make a better world for us all.

I have never known a more dedicated American, nor a nicer man. I will miss his friendliness and good humor as well as his entertaining stories.

The U.S. Congress will miss SPARKY MATSUNAGA for his intelligence and wise leadership, but we will never forget his good deeds and his fine service to our country.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to our former colleague, the late Senator SPARK M. MATSUNAGA, whose death on April 15, after a long and distinguished career in public service, is a tremendous loss to the people of Hawaii and the people of our Nation.

For 12 years, from 1965 through 1976, I had the opportunity to work with SPARKY in the House of Representatives, and he was a man who dedicated his life to public service.

Born in Kukuiula, Kauai, HI, on October 8, 1916, SPARK MATSUNAGA served our country with distinction in the Army during World War II. Wounded in action, he received the Bronze Star, the Purple Heart Medal with oak leaf cluster, the Army Commendation Medal, American Campaign Medal, the Asiatic-Pacific Campaign Medal with one battle star, and the European-African-Middle Eastern Campaign Medal with four battle stars, in recognition of his heroic service. Before he retired from the Army, he rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Graduating from Harvard Law School in 1951, SPARK MATSUNAGA compiled an outstanding record of achievement as a member of the Hawaii Territorial Legislature from 1954 through 1959, and as House majority leader in 1959. He was elected to the 88th Congress in 1962, and he served in the House of Representatives for 14 years before his election to the U.S. Senate in 1976. Elected to three terms in the Senate, he ably served as chairman of the Subcommittee on Taxation and Debt Management of the Senate Finance Committee, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Aging of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, and as the ranking member of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee. He was also instrumental in creating the American Peace Institute and in establishing the position of American poet laureate at the Library of Congress.

SPARK MATSUNAGA was a man of peace, and possessed deep compassion, courage, and conviction. He was highly respected by all of us in Congress for his commitment to the causes of humanity, and his legislative abilities were unmatched. He was a statesmen of great principle, and his service was inspirational in shaping our country's future. He will be missed by all of us who had the opportunity to know him and to work with him.

Mrs. Annunzio and I extend our deepest sympathy to the wife, Helene, his five children, and the other members of his family who survive him.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, our Nation lost a tremendous legislator and leader recently with the death of SPARK MATSUNAGA. I knew him as an able House colleague and a good friend. He was one of the most conscientious Members of this body to have served the people of Hawaii and this Nation.

He dedicated more than 40 years of his life to this Nation—from combat duty in support of freedom to service in government. He was wounded in the war and was highly decorated for heroism under demanding conditions. Following the war, he attended Harvard Law School and then returned to Hawaii to begin a long and distinguished career in government.

He came to the House in 1962 for the first of seven terms. During his tenure with us on the House side, he earned the respect of his colleagues by his mastery of House rules and procedures. He pressed for legislation with a perserverance that was impressive. He could always make his point without making waves. He employed tactics that were graceful and effective. In short, he was a statesman and gentleman. He was a great friend. He will be missed.

I extend to his family my sincerest sympathy and commend my colleague Representative AKAKA for setting aside this time to appropriately remember a man who will not be forgotten—SPARK MATSUNAGA.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA'S voice will continue to be heard through the work of the U.S. Institute of Peace, which was established by legislation he authored about 5 years ago. I was the House sponsor of that legislation, and I was proud to work with this devoted public servant. The Institute was founded on the notion that this Nation, which spends hundreds of billions of dollars annually in preparation for war, should do more to educate its leaders in the science of making peace. SPARK MATSUNAGA'S vision was a West Point or Annapolis dedicated to peace.

As the world goes through monumental changes, it is clear that the leaders of both East and West are beginning to realize that we cannot afford the waste and tragedy of war. The cost of war, in terms of lives and economic loss has grown with the sophistication of weapons. So, we are entering a new era, where the skills of keeping peace and learning to live in a world of economic interdependence are paramount.

The U.S. Institute of Peace has begun to fulfill SPARK MATSUNAGA'S vision of teaching the science of peaceful conflict resolution through the numerous programs, publications, and fellowship programs it sponsors. It is following the course of its new president, Ambassador Sam Lewis, former Ambassador to Israel under Presidents Carter and Reagan.

We will all remember the legacy of this Senator, who appears to have been at the forefront of a worldwide movement.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues today in mourning the passing of our good friend and comrade, Senator SPARK M. MATSUNAGA of Hawaii, who died last Sunday after a long fight against cancer.

SPARK was first elected to the House of Representatives in 1963, the same year I first came to Congress. He served for 14 years in the House, becoming a deputy whip and serving on the Rules Committee. He won election to the Senate in 1977, and immediately gained a seat on the Finance Committee.

Senator MATSUNAGA was steadfast in his legislative interests, especially his advocacy of free trade, the peaceful exploration of space, and justice for Japanese-Americans who had been interned during the Second World War. His successful 9-year effort to pass legislation redressing the unjust internment of Japanese-Americans may have been one of his greatest legislative accomplishments.

SPARK MATSUNAGA was born on the island of Kauai, HI, in 1917. He graduated with honors from the University of Hawaii with a degree in education. Upon the outbreak of World War II, he joined the Army and served with distinction in Italy, earning the Bronze Star Medal and two Purple Hearts. After the war, he graduated from Harvard University law school in 1951 and served as an assistant prosecutor in Honolulu before entering into private practice.

SPARK MATSUNAGA was recognized for his ability and determination in his particular areas of legislative interest. He influenced legislation through his charm and persuasion, and he was deeply loved by his colleagues.

SPARK MATSUNAGA enriched all our lives with his warmth and friendship. His innumerable contributions left this institution and this Nation far richer and better than he found them. He will be remembered and revered for his achievements.

On a personal basis, Mr. Speaker, SPARK MATSUNAGA was elected to the House of Represenatives in the 88th Congress the same year that many of us were elected to this great body. We elected SPARK MATSUNAGA president of the 88th Congress, and he has remained our president ever since, even after he was elected to the Senate.

He was loved by all the Members and his charm and wit and friendliness helped keep us together as a group all these years. The 88th Club has met on or around St. Patrick's Day every year for over 26 years, and I think that is an all-time record for any one congressional class. SPARKY and his wife Helene were our leaders, were our inspiration, and they were the love of all.

Even as services are being held in Hawaii this week, I think Senator MATSUNAGA would like to know that the 88th Club remembers him with great fondness, and we drink a toast to him today. One of our members, Federal Judge William Hungate, has written a toast of the 88th Club, and I quote it to you: "88th, 88th, here's a toast to thee, banner class, the very best, in our history!" Mr. Speaker, SPARK MATSUNAGA was the very best in our history.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I come before you today to honor and pay tribute to one of the most respected and dedicated Members of the U.S. Senate—Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA.

A man who was very much admired by his colleagues not only in the U.S. Senate, but in the House of Representatives as well where he once served. Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA will certainly be missed by all here on the Hill and around the country, who had the pleasure and good fortune to know him.

His life and many accomplishments throughout, are to be celebrated at this time, not mourned. We must remember SPARK as the hard worker and peacemaker that he was. We must remember him for the years of service that he gave to the people of Hawaii and to the Nation. And we must remember him for the friendship that he so willingly gave to all.

To his widow Helene and his family, I know I speak for the entire House of Representatives when I say our thoughts and prayers are with you. May you find comfort and strength during this time of sadness.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in paying tribute to Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA with whom I served in the House before his election to the Senate.

Senator MATSUNAGA supported numerous worthwhile causes while serving in the Congress without any direct or indirect political gain to himself. One cause which the Senator supported was the desire of the people of Puerto Rico for statehood.

In June of 1988, Senator MATSUNAGA cosponsored a forum on Puerto Rico's economic transition to statehood, which was held in the Capitol's Mike Mansfield Room. He was one of the few in the Congress to recognize the efforts of over 350,000 Puerto Ricans who submitted petitions for statehood to Congress. He demonstrated he had not lost touch with the man on the street, even a man from a distant U.S. island territory.

No doubt SPARK MATSUNAGA empathized with the people of Puerto Rico as he had been born in a U.S. territory, lived most of his life without full political rights accorded to other U.S. citizens, understood the difficulty of living on an island with language and cultural characteristics different from the States, and had witnessed firsthand the long arduous and frustrating quest for statehood.

Senator MATSUNAGA was way ahead of the curve in 1988 on the importance of Puerto Rico's relationship to the United States when little attention was given by Congress. Since then, some 20 days of hearings have been held or are scheduled by both Senate and House committees on this very topic. This is a demonstration of Senator MATSUNAGA's foresight and leadership.

It is difficult to determine the impact of one man's action on the future. However, I believe Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA's efforts on behalf of so many people in different ways, will engender immeasurable positive results for generations to come.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, let me thank my friend and neighbor in the Rayburn Building, Congressman DANIEL AKAKA, for calling this special order today. I join him and everyone here in mourning the death of our good friend, Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA.

With SPARKY'S passing, Congress lost an accomplished legislator and a gentle human being. Hawaii lost a dedicated public servant and determined advocate. And we all lost a good friend.

SPARKY lived through some of the most significant events of the 20th century, and never lost his humility, his love for his family, and his unmatched gift for friendship.

He was a public servant committed to the well-being of the people of Hawaii, whom he served as a territorial legislator in Hawaii, as a leader in the cause of Hawaiian statehood, and as a gifted representative in Washington for almost 30 years.

He was a scholar, an author and a poet, who established the post of U.S. Poet Laureate 5 years ago.

He was a believer in the potential of technology and progress to make the world better for all its people. He was a thoughtful advocate for clean renewable energy sources like solar energy and wind power as well as for space exploration.

And he was a brave soldier who knew how blessed it is for a country to be at peace.

A decorated war hero; an officer of the famous 100th Infantry Battalion; a wounded veteran of the terrible battle for Monte Cassino, SPARKY came home from the Second World War and devoted his life to the search for peace. Over his years in Congress, he established the U.S. Institute of Peace, supported arms control efforts, proposed cultural and technological U.S.-U.S.S.R. exchanges, and worked for peaceful resolution of conflicts around the globe.

His life, like the lives of Eisenhower and Washington, teaches us once again that those who know war best are the ones who hate it most of all.

We're all familiar with his long and successful fight to pass the redress bill for the Japanese-Americans and Aleuts who were shut into internment camps during the Second World War.

That bill's passage is a monument to SPARKY'S passionate belief that our country must offer justice to all its citizens. It is the proof of his patriotic conviction that, as he said on the Senate floor, "our beloved country is great enough to acknowledge and correct its past mistakes."

I quote from a letter SPARKY received on the occasion of the redress bill's passage: "Your role in the redress movement will be part of the Nisei saga in American history. What a tremendous accomplishment. Thank you, SPARKY, for restoring the pride and dignity of all Niseis, their children, and now other newly immigrant Asians."

The author of that letter speaks not only for the Nisei and their children, not only for Asian-Americans—but for all Americans. In particular, it speaks for the veterans of the Second World War. The shame of the internment camps tarnished the ideals and values SPARKY and I served in that conflict to defend, and on behalf of his fellow veterans I thank him for giving justice to those so unjustly persecuted.

SPARKY, you gave honor to this Congress. You were a voice of kindness and compassion. You dedicated your life to making the words of the prophet Isaiah reality: "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

It was a privilege to know you, and we miss you very much.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, Hawaii and the entire United States suffered a great loss when Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA fell victim to cancer less than 10 days ago.

When we think back to those days he served with us here in the U.S. House of Representatives, we always see the smiling face of our colleague known to everyone as SPARKY. He was a gentleman, but he was also a fighter for what he thought was best for his native State as well as the remainder of the Nation.

The son of immigrants, he graduated with honors from the University of Hawaii with a degree in education.

SPARKY devoted over half of his 73 years to serving his State and the Nation. Climbing to majority leader while a member of the territorial House of Representatives, he was one of those who fought the difficult but successful struggle to bring statehood to the islands he loved. Part of that battle included work on the Hawaii Statehood Delegation to Congress.

He came to Washington in January 1963 as a newly elected Member of the House of Representatives. Hawaii was well served by SPARKY in the House until 1973, when he took his dedication to State and country to the Senate.

Our friend saw the war coming and volunteered for active duty in the Army in July 1941. He was a decorated hero in one of the most highly decorated and famous units in the Army—the Nisei 100th Infantry Battalion of the 442 Regimental Combat Team. Serving in North Africa and Italy as a combat infantryman, he was awarded the Purple Heart with oak leaf cluster for wounds suffered as well as the Bronze Star for bravery. SPARKY was presented a total of five battle stars—four to go with his European-African-Middle Eastern Campaign Medal, and one with his Asiatic-Pacific Campaign Medal.

While he was instrumental in gaining passage of a number of important pieces of legislation in over a quarter of a century as a Member of Congress, he is best remembered, perhaps, for his outstanding efforts in behalf of gaining approval of a law redressing the injustices felt by West Coast Japanese-Americans who were interned in camps during World War II.

Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA will be missed by those of us who served with him and knew him here in Congress as well as by a nation grateful for his magnificent contributions to his country.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I join our colleagues in paying tribute to SPARK MATSUNAGA. Throughout his distinguished career, he fought for civil rights, education, and the peaceful resolution of conflict. Those of us who served with SPARKY in the House of Representatives, and those who worked with him during his years in the Senate, know that these causes were a reflection of his convictions. It seems appropriate that we are honoring SPARKY just as we have finished celebrating the 20th anniversary of Earth Day since his last vote was for passage of the clean air bill.

He bravely served his country in World War II, even though his country was denying his people the civil liberties guaranteed by the Constitution. As we all know, he made righting this injustice a personal crusade which, through enactment of the Civil Liberties Act of 1987, our Nation has finally corrected.

As our world moves closer to conciliation and away from confrontation, I will remember my good friend, SPARKY, as a man of peace. In memory of his passion for this cause, the U.S. Institute of Peace serves as a testament to his commitment to peaceful resolution of conflicts. Peace was not an opportunistic issue for SPARKY, but, as a veteran of war, he did it so future generations would never see and experience the horrors of war.

SPARKY was a warm and gentle person who was always a welcome sight to his colleagues. How many times, as we walked through the hallways of the Capitol, did we bump into SPARK MATSUNAGA giving his constituents a tour of this building. There are very few people who can be admired by so many for so much, but SPARK MATSUNAGA was one of those people. It is fair to say that Will Rogers and SPARK MATSUNAGA would have enjoyed each others company. Jeanne-Marie and I extend our sympathies to his wife, Helene, and to their children.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in expressing my deep regret at the passing of our friend and colleague, SPARK MATSUNAGA.

I got to know SPARK when we served together on the House Rules Committee 15 years ago. He was already an experienced and proven leader, and I was a newcomer to the legislative process. But I knew even then, this was a man of intelligence, dedication, and integrity. From whom I could learn many things.

SPARK had a deep respect for the House as an institution and for the exercise of power. He understood that even though you may have political advantage, it was usually wise, not to push that advantage in order to work for the greater good of the body and the country.

That's not to say that he hesitated to use his knowledge of the House, on rare occasion when it came to the vital interest of his constituents.

In 1974, when a dock workers strike threatened to disrupt the transportation Hawaii depends upon for survival, SPARK persuaded the Rules Committee to pry a compulsory arbitration bill from the legislative committee and bring it to the floor for a winning vote. He did this despite the fact the leadership of the House was opposed to his effort.

He actually discusses this balance between the committee's own goals and the responsibility it holds to the leadership in a book he wrote, "Rulemakers of the House." The book describes the day to day operations of the committee and the interaction of opposing views. It was a real labor of love for him.

Mr. Speaker, SPARK MATSUNAGA was a valued contributor to the important and complex work of the Rules Committee. Those of us who served with him will remember him for many reasons.

He was a man of great intellect, and yet a man of great humility. He was dedicated to his ideals and devoted to ensuring justice. But perhaps most importantly, he was a man of great courage who provided an example of public service for others to follow.

I want to thank my colleague for taking this time to pay tribute to a trusted friend. I am saddened by his passing and extend my heartfelt condolences to his family on this loss.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a former colleague in the House and distinguished Senator from Hawaii, SPARK MATSUNAGA.

I had the opportunity to serve in the House with SPARK from 1971 to 1976. He was always a cheerful and personable fellow.

SPARK MATSUNAGA may have had the distinction of being the only public official to have served in a territorial legislature and in the U.S. House and Senate representing his State. At any level of government, I feel SPARK distinguished himself for his tireless efforts while serving Hawaii and the Nation.

After a decorated career in the Army and after graduating from Harvard Law School, SPARK dedicated over 40 years of his life to public service. During this time, SPARK was a visionary and peacemaker. As a champion of Japanese-Americans, Senator MATSUNAGA pushed for measures to provide redress for Japanese-Americans interned in the United States during World War II.

Mr. Speaker, SPARK MATSUNAGA possessed many talents which made him an outstanding representative, statesman, poet and friend. I extend my sympathies to his wife, Helene, and his five children. SPARK will be deeply missed.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, when I was first elected to serve in the 88th Congress, I met a newly elected Member whose district is about as far from mine geographically as it is possible to be. His name was SPARKY MATSUNAGA.

Even though we were members of different political parties, I found that he was friendly, knowledgeable and hard-working. When he hade a commitment, he was true to his word.

In the 89th Congress I became a member of the House Rules Committee, and 2 years later in the 90th Congress SPARKY was selected as a member of the same committee.

Back in those days, the Rules Committee met with the members seated around a long table. There was a lot of give and take because the members of the other party were always about 3 feet away on the other side of the table. SPARKY was a great addition to the committee, and I came to appreciate even more what a fine human being he was. We were quite frequently on opposite sides of the issue, but always remained friends, even after some very tough legislative battles.

During those years, when the Rules Committee had its annual Christmas party, members of the committee provided produce from their home States for the occasion. SPARKY always provided fresh pineapple and macadamia nuts, an unusual treat for the rest of us.

He was president of our 88th club, and I think in part because of him, those of us who were first elected in the 88th Congress have maintained an unusually strong group identity.

Mr. Speaker. I join my colleagues in expressing sympathy to SPARKY'S wife, Helene, and their children. SPARKY'S death is a great loss to his family, to his State, and to his Nation.

IN TRIBUTE TO SPARK MATSUNAGA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCURDY). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, our Nation lost a tremendous legislator and leader recently with the death of SPARK MATSUNAGA. I knew him as an able House colleague and a good friend. He was one of the most conscientious Members of this body to have served the people of Hawaii and this Nation.

He dedicated more than 40 years of his life to this Nation—from combat duty in support of freedom to service in Government. He was wounded in the war and was highly decorated for heroism under demanding conditions. Following the war, he attended Harvard Law School and then returned to Hawaii to begin a long and distinguished career in government.

He came to the House in 1962 for the first of seven terms. During his tenure with us on the House side, he earned the respect of his colleagues by his mastery of House rules and procedures. He pressed for legislation with a perseverance that was impressive. He could always make his point without making waves. He employed tactics that were graceful and effective. In short, he was a statesman and gentleman. He was a great friend. He will be missed.

I extend to his family my sincerest sympathy and commend my colleague Representative AKAKA for setting aside this time to appropriately remember a man who will not be forgotten—SPARK MATSUNAGA.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE SPARK MATSUNAGA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Guam [Mr. BLAZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLAZ. Mr. Speaker, I too come to the floor of the House moved by the passing of a distinguished Member of the Congress and a very dear friend of mine.

A few days ago I paid tribute to him in downtown Honolulu, and I am in doubt as to whether I have the words or wisdom to adequately express, Mr. Speaker, the sentiment I have for SPARK MATSUNAGA. I did not know him before I came to the House. But when I came 6 years ago he was already in the Senate, and he immediately embraced me as a friend, being both sons of the Pacific.

Mr. Speaker, I recall so many good things about him, but I think the one that I remember the most was in our mutual battle for the recognition of the Japanese-Americans who were incarcerated during World War II. I remember the arguments, and I remember saying on this floor that the distinction between the guards regarding BOB MATSUI and NORM MINETA and the guards that were guarding me during the occupation of my own territory was that the guards guarding them were Americans and the guards guarding me were Japanese. SPARK told me later on that he felt that was a very good way of stating the problem and he was grateful.

I do not know that I can say much more than to say that each one of us has a hero in life and someone we emulate. When I was in the military my hero was Dwight Eisenhower, Later on here in Congress my heroes were DANIEL INOUYE and SPARKY MATSUNAGA who has now left us.

Mr. Speaker, I come here to say these words, maybe paling by comparison to the good words that have been said by others, but it is something I had to say and I want to say with all my heart and to his family, thank you very much for being my friend, SPARKY, and thank you for inspiring me to go on and do the things that I know you stand for and we in the Pacific all stand for.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the subject of my special order today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

COMMEMORATING THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PASHAYAN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. PASAHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide. I am happy to note that the United States has reaffirmed its proud record in support of the Armenian people. President Bush recently issued a statement squarely referencing the Ottoman government's attempt to commit genocide against the Armenian people, its own population, from 1915 to 1923.

In February the Senate held 4 days of debate on whether to commemorate the genocide, Senate Joint Resolution 212 introduced by Senator DOLE of Kansas. While a filibuster stopped any vote on the merits of the resolution, the debate conclusively refuted all those who would deny that the genocide ever occurred.

In addition, from Massachusetts to Oklahoma, California, Connecticut, and Tennessee, State and local governments all across America proclaimed this day as a day of remembrance on the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide. The Armenian Assembly of America and the Armenian National Committee, two Armenian-American organizations that have worked hard to achieve America's affirmation of the facts, issued statements in response to the President's declaration. They are as follows:

ARMENIAN ASSEMBLY OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, April 23, 1990.

President GEORGE BUSH,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Your statement on the occasion of the 75th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide serves as a clear and welcome rejection of the Republic of Turkey's global campaign of denial. By remembering this crime against humanity, you give meaning to your call for "all peoples to work to prevent future acts of inhumanity against mankind."

We regret, however, that your statement avoided a direct reference to the word genocide. Our views on that matter are well known and need no elaboration here. But we take heart that you affirmed comments you made during the election campaign in which you characterized the intentional destruction of the Armenian people as genocide. We welcome your statement that these represent "the depth of my feeling for the Armenian people and the sufferings they have endured."

We are aware of the extreme pressures generated from Ankara on this matter. We applaud Senator Dole's leadership in illuminating the facts of the Armenian Genocide during the Senate debate on SR 212, and your wish to join in observing April 24, 1990, "as a day of remembrance for the more than one million Armenian people who were victims.

We ask that you urge Turkey to seize this moment to put its denial efforts to rest. Just two days ago, East Germany finally apologized to the Jewish people for the crimes committed by Hitler. And in Moscow, the Soviet Union acknowledged the Katyn Forest Massacres. Ankara can hardly do less. Turkey must come to terms with its past by recognizing the genocide committed by the Ottoman Empire against the Armenian people.

Sincerely,

HIRAIR HOVNANIAN,
Chairman, Board of Trustees.

[Press release of the Armenian National Committee of America, Apr. 21, 1990]

BUSH STATEMENT ON THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

WASHINGTON, DC.—Last night, while on a visit in Orlando, Florida, President George Bush issued a statement on the 75th anniversary of "the massacres" of Armenians and expressed his personal wish "to join with Armenians and all peoples in observing April 24, 1990 as a day of remembrance for more than a million Armenian people who were victims." He then called "upon all peoples to work to prevent future acts of inhumanity against mankind."

Avoiding the word genocide, the President described it as "the terrible massacres suffered [by Armenians] in 1915–1923 at the hands of the rulers of the Ottoman Empire" and depicted those massacred as "the victims of this crime against humanity." However, he made clear reference to his campaign statement by saying that "my comments of June 1988 represent the depth of my feeling for the Armenian people and the sufferings they have endured," thus indirectly reiterating his earlier recognition of the Armenian Genocide.

"The President's statement is a deeply-felt personal expression of sympathy addressed to the Armenian community worldwide on the day of remembrance for the victims of the Armenian Genocide," stated ANCA Executive Director Seto Boyadjian. "The Presidents sincere words come in defiance of Turkish pressures to prevent official observance by the U.S. government of the 75th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide," he said.

"While Armenian-Americans regret that the President could not make an explicit declaration in this regard by directly characterizing the genocidal nature of the 'terrible masacres' of 1915–1923, yet we recognize that he has in fact identified these massacres as a 'crime against humanity' by stating the magnitude of the crime and identifying the authors as the rulers of the Ottoman Empire, and by reiterating his position on the basis of his 1988 statement affirming his stand on the Armenian Genocide," added Boyadjian.

Along with the tragedy of the genocide, President Bush also mentioned the tragedy that befell upon Armenians by the earthquake of 1988 in Soviet Armenia. In this regard, Boyadjian stated, "Needless to say, Armenian-Americans remember with gratitude the President's personal involvement in support of the recovery efforts for the earthquake and appreciate his continuing commitment to the people of Soviet Armenia in their effort to maintain the integrity and the economic stability of the homeland."

In his statement, President Bush also paid tribute to the "special, enduring relationship" which the United States has had with the Armenian people and said that the more than one-million Armenian-American community continues "to make significant contributions to the betterment of our country."

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT, APRIL 20, 1990

Throughout this century, the United States has had a special, enduring relationship with the Armenian people.

Armenians around the world share with their friends in the United States a love of freedom, and as proud people they have a strong commitment to the preservation of their heritage and culture.

Their history, though marked by a number of tragedies, nonetheless reflects their faith and the strength and resilience of their tradition. Those tragedies include the Earthquake of 1988 and, most prominently, the terrible massacres suffered in 1915–1923 at the hands of the rulers of the Ottoman Empire.

The United States responded to the victims of this crime against humanity by leading international diplomatic and private relief efforts.

The Armenian-American community now numbers nearly one million people. Those who emigrated to the United States, and their descendants, continue to make significant contributions to the betterment of our country in many fields of endeavor.

On this seventy-fifth anniversary of the massacres, I wish to join with Armenians and all peoples in observing April 24, 1990 as a day of remembrance for the more than a million Armenian people who were victims. I call upon all peoples to work to prevent future acts of inhumanity against mankind, and my comments of June 1988 represent the depth of my feeling for the Armenian people and the sufferings they have endured.

In December 1988, an earthquake devastated Armenia and the United States responded and continues to respond to the overwhelming humanitarian needs of the victims. Before and after the earthquake, the Armenian people of Nagorno-Karabakh became the first in the Soviet Union to voice and the need for self-determination. The Soviet Union and Azerbaijan reacted with unconscionable brutality, including a devastating blockade. The United States has stood firm in supporting the Armenian people and democracy.

But today we commerate those massacred and driven from their ancestral homeland from 1915 to 1923. The evidence of this genocide is overwhelming in its scope and depth. We have recently learned that the U.S. Archives contains approximately 30,000 pages of documents detailing the bone-chilling history of who the Ottoman government targeted for killing, and when, where and how the Government killed them.

The time has now come for the Republic of Turkey to face its own history and to account for it. Its uncivilized refusal to acknowledge the Armenian genocide and its attempt to deny the genocide only perpetuates the Ottoman's crime against humanity.

Therefore, I take this occasion as an opportunity to challenge the Republic of Turkey to join the rest of the world and live up to its past.

□ 1700

From the United Nations Human Rights Commission to the European Parliament, from cities to States, from platforms to classrooms, government and social entities acknowledge that the history of the Ottoman government includes the Armenian genocide, not just a massacre or a killing, but of genocide.

Recently the Government of East Germany, Mr. Speaker, issued a formal apology for the Holocaust in Nazi Germany, although the East German Government was not responsible for causing the Holocaust. East Germany is the greater, not the lesser, for her apology as the Republic of Turkey would be if she should take the same civilized step.

President Bush has proved that Turkey's campaign of denial persuades no one, and I hold all confidence that the future will only bring additional rejection of Turkey's sad attempts to revise history.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to a colleague, a good friend of the Armenian community in the United States, the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD].

Mr. MOORHEAD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the gentleman from California [Mr. PASHAYAN] for his leadership in taking this time to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide.

Mr. Speaker, each year we come here like clockwork to talk about the attempted extermination of an entire race of people. We brush off our historical facts and figures and make the same request. We urge the Congress of the United States to recognize the systematic murder of 1.5 million Armenians by the Ottoman empire between 1915 and 1923. Like clockwork, the result is always the same and it is always tragically unacceptable.

No one in this body condones murder. No one in this body disputes the fact that hundreds of thousands of innocent Armenians died cruel and, in many cases, bloody deaths. But some House Members and Members in the other body have required us, year after year, to debate the historical accuracy of calling what happened from 1915 to 1923 genocide. I am as dismayed to hear someone say the Armenian genocide did not happen as I would be if someone challenged the facts of the Holocaust in which 6 million Jews perished at the hands of the Nazis.

Seventy-five years ago the genocide began and 75 years later neither the House nor the Senate has recognized April 24 as a day of remembrance for the victims of the Armenian genocide. There was a debate in the Senate 2 months ago that ended in the defeat of a resolution sponsored by Republican Leader BOB DOLE. Senator DOLE, during this eloquent and passionate defense of the resolution, called the vote "a triumph of politics over morality."

Harut Sassounian, the editor and publisher of the California Courier, one of the finest English-language Armenian newspapers in the country, dedicated several of his columns to the Senate debate, writing:

> Talaat, the mastermind of the Genocide, had predicted that 50 years after 1915, no one would remember the Armenian question. Talaat must be turning now in his grave, because not 50, but 75 years after the Genocide, the U.S. Senate spent 15 hours over a three-day period discussing his crimes.

Now that the German Government has recognized the Jewish genocide and the Soviet Union has recognized the extermination of millions who disagreed with the Government under Stalin, it is time for Turkey to recognize the genocide of the Armenians under the Ottoman empire.

I'm not surprised with what has happened in the House on countless occasions regarding this issue and I'm not surprised with what happened in the Senate in February of this year. I'm disappointed. Politics is sometimes blind to what is right.

The Los Angeles Times, in reporting on the Senate debate, noted that support for the genocide resolution began to erode amid pressure from Turkish political and business interests.

Mr. Speaker, that influence exercised by Turkey was costly. Mr. Sassounian reports that Turkey hired four public relations firms at a cost of up to $3 million to lobby on Capitol Hill.

Mr. Speaker, it is now time for the House of Representatives to recognize an established historical fact and adopt House Joint Resolution 417, designating April 24 as National Day of Remembrance of the 75th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide of 1915–1923.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman agree that in that resolution and any number of resolutions there has been no attempt to implicate the present Republic of Germany in terms of its being the cause.

Mr. MOORHEAD. No. And there is no, absolutely no intention to place the blame on the present Government of Turkey. We are now in a republic in Turkey. At that time they were under a huge empire that spanned the areas of countries today.

I think that if we follow the pattern that we have, Adolph Hitler may be right when he said at the start of the Holocaust, when he started putting people in camps and was told he would never get by with it, he said, "Who remembers the Armenians?"

We are remembering the Armenians and their genocide.

But it is time that all people recognize what history has shown us, that this really happened and that we get on with it.

We want to be friends with every country around the world. We do not want this to divide the world, but at the same time it is so important that history be recognized and not become a fable to so many people.

Mr. PASHAYAN. I should like to thank the gentleman for his remarks, and again to say that he has been a staunch friend of the Armenian community in the United States. And really, the Armenian people from all over the world would join in thanking the gentleman for taking his precious time to be here today.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to yield to my good friend and colleague and neighboring Member, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank and commend my colleague and friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. PASHAYAN] for organizing this special order today.

Mr. Speaker, I rise along with the gentleman and others to recognize the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide.

Unfortunately, what should be a simple reverent commemoration has become an item of political controversy.

As we commemorate the period from 1915 to 1923 during which history records the tragic loss of two of every three Armenians then living in their homeland, I would like us to reflect upon a statement made in 1918 by Henry Morganthau, the United States Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire. He said:

> When the Turkish authorities gave the orders for these deportations, they were merely giving the death warrant to a whole race; they understood this well, and, in their conversations with me they made no particular attempt to conceal the fact. I am confident that the whole history of the human race contains no such horrible episode as this. The great massacres and persecutions of the past seem almost insignificant when compared to the suffering of the Armenian race in 1915.

That was no revisionist historian, that was no Armenian speaking, that was the United States official representative on the scene in Turkey at the time.

Mr. Speaker, to not recognize the Armenian genocide is to ignore history. The historical record is clear and irrefutable. It is our moral responsibility to acknowledge it.

Winston Churchill and Arnold Toynbee recognized it as, indeed, Ataturk, the founder of Turkey, the first leader of that state, recognized the atrocities and said the Turkish people ought to own up and face it.

Indeed it was a Polish Jew who first used the word genocide in 1939 to describe what had happened to the Armenians.

No, to officially recognize one of the most atrocious crimes against mankind runs counter to our American values and damages our moral credibility.

The genocide was officially recognized by the U.S. Government in the past. Prior to 1983 this was not an issue at all. The State Department did not refute the fact, the Congress routinely passed resolutions and Presidents frequently signed proclamations commemorating the event. The U.S. Holocaust Commission has recognized the genocide.

However, in 1983, our State Department stepped out and proclaimed a new U.S. position on the genocide: It did not occur. The State Department and the administration decided to bow to Turkish pressure and endorse a policy rooted in expediency and lies. The State Department succumbed to pressure put on it by Turkish Government, pressure that amounted to blackmail. The Turkish Government threatened to undermine our importance alliance; a threat we know would never be backed up by actions, for our alliance with Turkey is as much in their interest as it is in ours. Nothing in the resolution, as my colleague just pointed out, casts any aspersions on modern Turkey, or anyone living in Turkey today, or on the Turkish Government.

Unfortunately, the current administration has continued this ill-conceived policy, disregarding a campaign promise pledging to support a resolution recognizing the Armenian genocide.

I also wish to commend Senator DOLE and his supporters in the Senate for their leadership in the past year and in their valiant efforts to reverse this policy and gain recognition of this event. I would like to add a word about our commemorative resolution. Although we lost our battle this time, we have not lost our fight to have the resolution enacted into law. This issue will be alive in every Congress until the truth prevails. Therefore, as we gather here today to commemorate the Armenian genocide in which 1,500,000 human beings whose only crime was being Armenians, were brutally murdered during the years 1915 to 1923, we comfort the survivors, and we keep alive the memories of those who were murdered, and try to gain insights and learn lessons from this experience so that a similar episode may never be repeated again.

The East Germans have owned up to their past in a commendable fashion. Turkey should do the same.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman made reference, as the last speaker did, to the commemorative resolution. Once again, let me ask the gentleman, in light of the fact that the commemorative resolution specifically excludes the Republic of Turkey from any reference to the events of the genocide, the resolution specifically saying that the events of the genocide occurred prior to the establishment of the Republic of Turkey, would the gentleman care to expostulate on his own feelings about how obviously uncivilized it is for the Republic of Turkey to wage a horrendous expensive lobbying campaign against a commemorative resolution, and go beyond that, and share with Members his feeling or even speculations as to why the Republic of Turkey is taking that posture?

I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I think Turkey needs to get this issue behind them. We need this as much as the survivors do. They need to come to grips with their past. As long as they fail to recognize what actually happened, the issues will not go away. It is not going to disappear because Turkey fights it every year. Occasionally, and most recently, they were successful.

All that happens is the issue is dramatized that much more, and momemtum continues to build on the other side.

The gentleman is correct, nothing in the resolution either implicitly or explicitly referenced the Turkey state. The Turkey Government at that time was not the Government that we have today. It was subsequently overthrown later on. The Government at the time was fighting on the other side from the United States in the First World War. Today, Turkey is a valued ally of the United States. Nothing in this resolution would harm that relationship, just as nothing in our relationship with Germany today is harmed by Germany owning up to its past.

I do not know what the motivations are on the part of the Turks, or why they labor so hard to deny what is so obviously a historical fact. However, I think ultimately they are harming themselves by so doing, as much as they are harming history.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman who has been a long supporter of this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR], my friend and colleague on the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, the following is a speech I delivered in Michigan last weekend to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide:

It is a great honor to be here with you. Today, we are gathered to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide—a horror that took the lives of 1½ million people.

For too long, the world has closed its eyes and tried to pretend the Armenian genocide never happened.

But, we must not let the world forget. Generation after generation, the Armenian people have struggled to keep the memory alive. You have reminded people in every land of the history of man's inhumanity to man.

The historical evidence of the Armenian genocide is overwhelming. American Ambassador Henry Morgenthau wrote:

"When the Turkish authorities gave the orders for these deportations, they were merely giving the death warrant to a whole race; they understood this well, and, in their conversations with me, they make no particular attempt to conceal the fact."

British historian Arnold Toynbee adds:

"The atrociousness of the two great twentieth century wars was aggravated by genocide. In the First World War, the Turks committed genocide against the Armenians; in the Second World War, the Germans committed genocide against the Jews."

The individual accounts of suffering and agony are far too numerous to ever fully chronicle. I'm sure everyone of you in this room has some special story to tell. Perhaps like the story of Mary and Armen Derdarian, a couple from Pennsylvania. Mary Derdarian was a 9-month old baby when her entire family was massacred. She wrote of the grief she has felt all her life. "I don't know what mother's love is because I didn't feel it. The Turks deprived me of it." Mary survived because her only remaining aunt found her in the rubble of her home.

Mary's husband, Armen Derderian, also lost his father. His father was deported from his house and killed with Armen's aunts and uncles. After being taken in by a Turkish neighbor for a year, his mother and two siblings were forced to flee across the Syrian desert to Aleppo. He writes, "I am 82 years old and I have stories in me that if I tell, would give you goose bumps."

We must not let those horrible truths be disguised or forgotten—and we must never, never let them be repeated. That's why I was proud to introduce the Armenian genocide resolution in the House of Representatives.

President Bush gave his commitment during the last election to support the genocide resolution. Unfortunately, the administration has not carried through on this pledge and Senator Dole did not have the support he needed to pass the resolution in the Senate. This impasse has filled me with very deep regret. But, that is why this gathering here tonight is so important.

In gathering here tonight and in countless similar events around the world, people of conscience acknowledge the genocide, we mourn the victims, and we renew our cry—never again.

We must never stop our efforts to get the United States Government to acknowledge the Armenian genocide.

But as long as people gather in events such as this one, we will not forget those. Those who would like to cover up the Armenian genocide have not succeeded, and they never will.

□ 1720

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] for taking time to come to the floor. I have a question for the gentleman.

Let us suppose that 1 day the Republic of Turkey, in a fashion similar to what was just achieved by the Government of East Germany, issues a formal apology for the conduct of the prior Government under a different constitution for its conceiving and executing the Armenian genocide. Would the gentleman care to speculate on what he would suppose the standing of the Republic of Turkey would then be in the international community?

Mr. BONIOR. Obviously, it would impose immeasurably. It is difficult to admit mistakes. It is particularly difficult for nations to stand up and admit mistakes of horror. But when they do, I think there is a general feeling and a willingness to move on, on the part of the rest of the world community.

I would also say that there is a cleansing effect that enables citizens of a nation, whether they be the Russians, the citizens of Soviet Russia, or East Germans, to be able to move on. As long as they deny historically what has been chronicled, they will be besieged by the nightmare that they have not come to grips with the reality of who they are and where they want to go.

I would also add, I say to my colleague, that as we in the Congress debate the changing world, as reflected by the peace revolution of 1989, not one person will be unmindful of the fact that we have indeed been providing large sums of money, dollars to the Republic of Turkey, and that we have four or five major military installations in that Republic which may in fact not be needed.

I would also say to my friend that there are those of us here who have not been as engaged as we perhaps should have been on the issue of Cyprus, and if the present Government of Turkey wishes to continue this, what I consider to be an unfortunate attack on a historical reality, they can expect to encounter increased opposition from this body and the other body on more important and fundamental question relevant to their present political reality.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my remarks and as I am sure the gentleman himself knows, I believe it is correct to say that the European Parliament has said that until the Republic of Turkey shall acknowledge the Armenian genocide, it will not even be considered to be let into the European Economic Community, something it has applied for.

Mr. BONIOR. That is correct, Mr. Speaker. And I think that should give them pause also to reflect upon the lack of wisdom with which they have pursued this unfortunate policy.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, another colleague, a new Member, the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT], has joined us. The gentleman from California is a Member who is well known for his support on this particular issue. His district is very near to my district, and as a matter of fact they do touch one another.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. CONDIT].

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, in the Central Valley of California and across this great country lies an Armenian-American population that is waiting for this Congress and the President to recognize a fundamental fact of history.

One and a half million Armenians suffered a genocide at the hands of the Ottoman Turkish Government from 1915 to 1923, yet the Turkish Government of today says that genocide never happened.

I have people in my district who personally witnessed this slaughter of friends and family members. Many others escaped death themselves and were forced to flee from their country.

But their tragedy didn't end there.

Not only did these people have to live with the loss of their loved ones, but with the fact that the Turkish Government to this day denies this slaughter ever took place.

This resolution does not ask for reparations and it does not ask for the return of lands taken during this massacre. It simply asks for one thing: Recognition of the massacre and a day in commemoration.

I urge this Congress to take action on House Joint Resolution 417. This resolution recognizes April 24 as a National Day of Remembrance of the anniversary of the Armenian genocide of 1915 to 1923. It is important that we once and for all set the record straight.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from California, and I thank him very much for taking his time to come here to comment on this issue. Does the gentleman wish to expound on any kind of a theory as to why the Republic of Turkey is so dogmatic in not only owning up to what the prior government did, but, in fact, spending as much as perhaps $1½ million, as I understand it, when the issue was recently in the other body led by Senator DOLE from Kansas, in lobbying against it and positively denying that the genocide ever took place? Would the gentleman care to expound on why they indulged in this erratic and uncivilized behavior?

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Speaker, as to why they did it, that is a big question, I say to my colleague, and it is a dangerous subject on which to speculate. I am confused as to why they do not make a simple recognition of this event. It is fact. It happened, and sometimes the truth cleanses us. Confession is good for the soul.

I believe if they saw the truth and spoke the truth and confessed the truth, we would all feel better. I am absolutely confused as to why they will not do that. I believe that we would all have a higher regard for the Turkish Government if they would do so.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is accustomed to dealing with logicalities rather than the reverse. I can appreciate why the gentleman says he is confused.

I suppose we might conclude by saying that it was Shakespeare who said that "Perhaps they protesteth too much," and perhaps when the Republic of Turkey spends something like $1½ million hiring professional lobbyists to carry on a campaign against a commemorative resolution which has no legislative effect, maybe they do protest too much. That is kind of a backward admission, but I would ask the gentleman, that is not the kind of admission we are looking for, is it?

Mr. CONDIT. No; it is not.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide. We commemorate this crime against humanity to understand the event, and thereby preclude its repetition against anyone anywhere in the world.

In the latter half of the 19th century, the Ottoman Turkish Government began a policy of persecution against its Armenian population. The persecution was brutal and ferocious. It resulted in many deaths of Armenians in 1894–96, and in 1909. The pattern of persecution and destruction culminated in the great massacre of 1915–23. At least 1.5 million Armenian men, women, and children perished in the holocaust. Those who survived became homeless refugees, whose descendants, with their painful memories, can be found in numerous countries today.

As Armenians recovered from the shock of their near annihilation and deportation from their homeland, they found themselves largely forgotten. In time, however, the spirit of the Armenian people revived. April 24 has become a rallying point, a day of commemoration for the victims and a day of renewal for their survivors and descendants. And those who had not been touched by this tragedy first hand began to join and participate in the commemorative events of April 24.

So our participation in these commemoration events today is a form of celebration, a celebration of the spirit and renewal of the Armenian people, as well as a renewal of our commitment to fundamental human rights.

We commemorate Armenian Martyrs' Day to remember and recognize the suffering and pain that the Armenian world community has endured. Let us commit ourselves today to a future course that prevents us from ever permitting the occurrence of such horror ever again anywhere in the world.

Commemorating those innocent victims who died is in the great American tradition. So I welcome this chance to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to the Armenian martyrs. In paying such tribute, we remind ourselves that the rights of minorities, no matter where they may be, must always be maintained.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in commemoration of the 75th anniversary of Armenian Martyr's Day.

In recent months we have witnessed extraordinary events taking place throughout the world.

East Germany has joined West Germany in apologizing to the Jews of the world for the atrocities committed against them during World War II.

The Soviet Union has admitted and accepted responsibility for the Katyn Forest Massacre where 50 years ago the best and the brightest officers of the Polish Army and the intellectual leaders of Poland were brutally murdered.

By their actions, the East Germans and the Soviets have gained new stature and respect in the eyes of the free nations of the world.

I urge the present government in Turkey to follow their inspiring example and acknowledge responsibility for the genocide 75 years ago of two out of every three Armenians living in the Ottoman Empire at that time. By so doing, they can permit the healing process to begin, and at the same time, gain the respect and admiration of the free world.

Mr. Speaker, as we recall and mourn the loss of the Armenian martyrs earlier in this century, so, too, should we now pledge ourselves never to forget those innocent martyrs and to continue to fight against violence and destruction so that humanity may survive in a world where genocide can never reoccur.

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, today we commemorate a very special—and very sad—date in the history of the Armenian people.

Today we commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide. Between 1915 and 1923, the world witnessed the first attempt at systematic destruction of an entire people this century. Some 1.5 million Armenians died as a direct consequence of the international and deliberate actions of the Ottoman Empire.

Much debate has been generated over these events, the causes, and who is to blame. In fact, we need only to remember the Armenians who were victims of the massacres. Almost every Armenian-American can tell of brothers, sisters, parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles, or other relatives that fell victim to the outrageous events that occurred 75 years ago. Whatever the origins, whatever the causes, we can and must remember the victims. By doing so, we can and will help focus world attention on the need to recognize what happened, and we can thus help prevent genocide from ever happening again.

Mr. Speaker, today we remember the 75th anniversary of the beginning of Armenian genocide. We also today resolve to remember the victims, the survivors, and to commit ourselves to remembering this event in history and preventing it from ever happening again.

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to show my appreciation for the wisdom that the Members of Congress have demonstrated in not passing the Armenian Genocide resolution. Genocide is the most highly charged indictment that can be made against a country. However, if the term is to retain its meaning, it must not be applied to the events of 1915 in the Ottoman Empire, no matter how tragic they were for the victims.

No one denies that a civil war within a global war, intercommunal hostilities, famine, epidemics and banditry took a heavy toll on all sides. The Armenians suffered and the Turkish people did as well. However, no matter how painful this was, historians tell us there is insufficient evidence to apply the term genocide. Tragedy, suffering, loss of life and genocide are not synonymous. Until further research is done by bonafide scholars, the allegation that there was a systematic, state-directed program of the Ottoman Empire's Government to exterminate the Armenian people is not sustainable. Certainly, it is not one that this political body is in a position to validate.

I join my colleagues in the conviction that we must not unwittingly allow our compassion for the descendants of Armenian victims to cause us to convict unfairly the forebearers of our own Turkish-American citizens.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues today in rising to commemorate the Armenians who perished in this century's first genocide. Many of my Armenian constituents and friends have told me of loved ones taken from them by the genocide. Many are still tormented by memories of the death marches of 1915. I know how important this tribute is to them and to the memory of all those who lost their lives in the slaughter.

This single day each year serves also as an expression of our commitment to historical truths and to the universal principles of human rights. The line from Armenia to Auschwiz is a direct one. The Holocaust which took the lives of 6 million Jews and millions of other innocent people was inspired by the murder of 1½ million Armenians. Hitler, during an early meeting to map out the extermination of the Jewish people, was asked whether world opinion would not prevent such a plan from being carried out. Hitler laughed. "World opinion! A joke! Who ever cared about the Armenians?"

By holding his special order, we in the House vow that genocide will not go unacknowledged and unmourned. We must always continue to speak of the genocides of this century and resolve never to let our moral outrage diminish so that Hitler's sentiments are never again uttered.

The Armenian people, like the Jewish people, although scattered all over the earth, have remarkably kept their culture, language, and religion intact. I salute their tenacity and spirit.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in solemnly observing today as "National Day of Remembrance of the Armenian Genocide of 1915–23." I have long been a vocal proponent of the need to commemorate the 1.5 million Armenians who lost their lives in the first genocide of the 20th century. I am also a member of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council and, as such, have supported a proposal designating a section of the planned Holocaust museum to the Armenian genocide.

We must not rewrite history by forgetting the 1.5 million Armenian men, women, and children who were massacred earlier this century. The proof and magnitude of the Armenian tragedy was established at the time by the records of this Congress and by our own Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire in 1915. The truth must survive the eyewitnesses.

It was Hitler who cynically asked in 1939, "Who today remembers the Armenian exterminations?"

Fifty years later, it must be we who remember. To do otherwise brings shame to this great democracy. We must remember that many of the Armenian-Americans we represent are themselves survivors of the horrible massacres. Many others are the children of those who witnessed the atrocity. Today we must pause and pay tribute to the memory of those Armenians who senselessly lost their lives in 1915.

In closing, I should like to share with my colleagues the following piece from the New York Times of April 22, 1990, that attempts to describe the horrible wrong which occurred 75 years ago.

[From the New York Times, Apr. 22, 1990]

ARMENIA, REMEMBERED

SOMETHING TERRIBLE HAPPENED IN 1915

(By Karl E. Meyer)

After 50 years, Moscow admits that Stalin ordered the killing of thousands of Polish officers in Katyn. After 40 years, a new Government in East Germany joins West Germany in acknowledging accountability for Hitler's crimes against the Jews. But after 75 years, Turkey insists that charges of mass killings of Armenians are grossly exaggerated by survivors and descendants.

Indeed, Turkish resentment is so vehement that the United States Senate drew back from approving a resolution designating April 24 as a day of remembrance of "the Armenian Genocide of 1915-1923." It is the word "genocide" that most angers Turks, who view it as a slanderous simplication of a confused and tragic episode.

There is justice in the Turkish argument that historians differ on exactly what happened. It's also true that Turkish diplomats have been viciously targeted by Armenian extremists. And one can grant a valid American concern about gratuitously offending a NATO ally.

Nevertheless, something abominable occurred in Anatolia. An Armenian community of a million or more was reduced to negligible numbers. Turkish authorities concede that at least 600,000 Armenians perished in communal violance or in a forced exodus. Others fled Turkey, bearing memories that still sear a stateless people.

What is lacking in the Turkish response is even a hint of generous contrition for excesses that resulted in so many deaths. Instead, by pouncing on disputed particulars, official Turkish handbooks seem to suggest the Armenian case is mostly a fabrication. This is not the path to reconciliation.

Accidents of World War I brought on the Armenian catastrophe. In 1915, Russia turned back an Ottoman invasion of Transcaucasia and czarist troops soon entered northeastern Turkey. Long-established Armenian communities were located on both sides of the eastern front. Fearing that Christian Armenians would rise in aid of Russia, Ottoman leaders ordered their mass deportation.

Even granting a military justification, the order was carried out ruthlessly. This is borne out by press reports, diplomatic dispatches and accounts of historians, including Arnold Toynbee, who invoked the word "genocide." It is graphically documented in eyewitness descriptions by Leslie Davis, the U.S. Consul in Harput, who visited devastated villages.

To Mr. Davis, whose forgotten reports are reprinted in full in a recent book, "The Slaughterhouse Province," there was no doubt what was happening: it wasn't expulsion but "wholesale massacre."

And it passed from memory, so much so that Hitler remarked to his generals, on Aug. 22, 1939: "Who today remembers the Armenian extermination?" A Niagara of ink has spilled over the authenticity of this quotation. The context is frequently garbled; Hitler was talking about his planned invasion of Poland, not about the Jews. But an account of the speech was secretly transmitted to the British in 1939 by one of those present, Adm. Wilhelm Canaris; this is a matter of record, not a concoction.

What adds to the sorrows of Armenia is that so much of the argument concerns precise numbers, faded documents and whether or not Kemal Ataturk, the creator of the Turkish Republic, in fact deplored the killings in a 1926 press interview. A horrible wrong occurred, and Turkey would stand taller in the world if it ceased blaming the victims.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, once again the Congress is entangled with the State Department over whether to pass a resolution remembering the victims of the Armenian genocide. Ever since we first proposed a day of remembrance for the 1½ million victims, we have been told by our cautious diplomats and even a hesitant White House that such a move would harm our relations with Turkey, a key ally.

This argument will not work as far as I am concerned. We have made it very clear over the years that the systematic genocide of the Armenian people was the cruel work of the Ottoman Empire, which preceded the current state of Turkey.

As for those who would say the massive killings never occurred, it is appropriate to recall the heinous crimes which took place in those torturous years earlier in this century. We should tell them that in 1915, all Armenian members of the Ottoman Army were segregated, disarmed, and worked to death or massacred. We should point out that entire Armenian village populations were murdered. We should demonstrate the exile or murder of Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders. Finally, we should remind all of the thousands of deaths resulting from long forced marches and starvation.

This horrendous slaughter did happen, and it is up to us in the democracies of the world to see that this kind of mass murder never happens again. It is extremely important to the thousands of Armenian Americans who have contributed and continue to contribute to the advancement of America that the Armenian genocide victims not be forgotten.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, I spoke today at a rally to commemorate one of the most tragic events in history: The holocaust of the Armenian people. As with the Holocaust of the Jews in Germany, we must constantly remind the people of the world of these atrocities. Though it may sadden us deeply to dredge up these memories, we must do so, lest these heinous crimes against humanity be forgotten, and heaven forbid, repeated.

Seventy-five years ago, on this day in 1915, the Armenian people were subjected to unspeakable loss, as their spiritual, intellectual, and societal leaders were rounded up and exiled to be executed. In the following years, the Armenian people were persecuted, untold thousand murdered, and their survivors forced into a diaspora that struggles throughout the world to maintain its culture and heritage, far from the true homeland of the Armenian people.

And so, on this day, just as several days ago the Jewish Holocaust Memorial Day, we remember the senseless slaughter of a wealth of humanity and we must renew our pledge to speak out against any atrocity large or small. Whether it be the millions of Ethiopians left to starve to death, or the thousands of Kurds massacred by poison gas, or the burning of a cross on the lawn of a black man, or the visit to the United States of bigoted, anti-semitic Russian nationalists. The identity of the victim or victims is not important, the reaction of the rest of the world is. Silence and apathy are the mortal enemies of freedom.

As a cosponsor of the legislation to commemorate this day of observance, I come before you to say the United States should officially recognize the genocide of the Armenian People as a tragic but very real part of world history.

I would like to salute the Armenian church, Armenian organizations, and the Armenian people for bringing us together here today on this solemn occasion. Our shared grief gives us the strength to fight for what is right and just, so that all peoples may live in freedom, without fearing persecution for who they are or what they believe.

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, every year at this time we commemorate the genocide of the Armenians. Over the period 1915–23, 1.5 million Armenian men, women, and children were killed in Turkey. Today we recall those who starved to death, were tortured or just executed outright, and we honor those who survived.

On this special anniversary, let us also demand that those who would deny the reality of the genocide be called to account. We all suffer when history is denied, because it makes it that much easier to repeat. If the killings which started out this decade are forgotten or refuted, who will bother to speak up against the massacres of tomorrow? Who will defend the people of Cambodia from the return of the Khmer Rouge, or face down Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and his threats of chemical genocide?

As we remember the past, we must work for today. The December 1988 earthquake which left 25,000 Armenians dead, 100,000 injured and 500,000 homeless. The United States has spent $4.5 million in disaster assistance already, and plans to spend another $5 million. All the relief in the world will do no good, however, so long as the trains which carry them are blockaded. Since the residents of Azerbaijan reinstated the blockade March 26, 186 trains, over 8,000 cars, have been stopped from reaching their destinations. These trains carry food, fuel, and reconstruction material desperately needed by the people of Armenia.

On this 75th anniversary, let us each do our part to remember old wrongs and prevent new ones. Those responsible must recognize their role in the genocide. The Soviet Government should accept that the 76 percent Armenian population of Nagorno-Karabagh must be allowed some autonomy. Each of us individually, should pause to reflect on man's potential for harming others, and renew our resolve to protect the sanctity of life.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, last Saturday I had an opportunity to speak in Birmingham, MI, at the 75th commemoration of the Armenian genocide.

Commemorating the Armenian genocide is certainly important to Armenian Americans, but I believe it is also important for anybody, anywhere who is concerned about man's inhumanity to man.

A direct line runs from Anatolia to Auschwitz. In fact, the mass killings of the modern age got their start when Ottoman Turks decided to rid themselves of what they considered their "Armenian problem."

What followed was one of the most brutal massacres in the history of the world.

Anyone who has read the account of these events by Ambassador Morgenthau can't fail to be revolted by the story of the Armenian massacre.

Women snatched from doing their wash, children taken from their beds, young men nailed to crosses, tortured too terrible for most of us to imagine, death by clubs, hammers, spades and saws, as many as a million-and-a-half people led to their deaths by torture, starvation and exhaustion.

The concentration camps of Hitler had their seeds in Anatolia. The mass murders of the Stalin era and the killing fields of Cambodia—all the great terrors of the 20th century grew out of Anatolia.

That's why it's so difficult to understand the position in Congress to the resolution sponsored by Senator DOLE.

His resolution asked only that America observe the anniversary of the Armenian genocide, that America set aside a national day of remembrance for one of the most brutal events of this century.

Even Turkey's actions over the past few years have violated important principles that America should be more assertive in defending.

When they invaded the sovereign nation of Cyprus in 1974, they jumped out of planes supplied by America. They chewed up Cypriot soil in American tanks, and killed Cypriots with American rifles and howitzers. All of this equipment was intended solely for defensive purposes.

Yes, we cut them off. But 4 years later, America was once again supplying them with arms.

We did it because Turkey promised us they would withdraw from Cyprus. That was a decade ago. Today their army still illegally occupies Cyprus. They continue to fortify their position, and they are modernizing their forces with equipment supplied by the United States.

Yet America continues to be intimidated by the Turkish lobby. We are told the same things whenever anyone tries to stand up to Turkey. We have been told that the genocide resolution will hurt our relations with Turkey, that we'll lose an important ally.

That doesn't make any sense. If this is a real alliance, it means both partners have real interest in being allies. Alliances cut both ways.

The Dole resolution offered America a good chance to stand up to the Turks. When we buckled under to their lobby, we lost a good chance to stand behind a principle of human rights that we wouldn't hesitate to project in other areas of the world.

Let me give you an example of just how ferocious this lobbying was. The Dole resolution originally had 61 cosponsors. By the time it was brought to the floor there were only 46.

Sixteen of the original cosponsors actually voted against the resolution. Was that because of pressure from a Republican White House? Hardly. Thirteen of the 16 switchers were Democrats.

I don't know how much Turkey spent on lobbying against this resolution, but I like the way BOB DOLE put it. He said the Turks are worried about having to pay reparations to relatives of the Armenian victims. But he pointed out, if Ankara had offered the same amount of money for reparations that it spent on lobbying against the resolution, the whole issue would have been resolved by now.

The Turks were willing to spend all that money because the Dole resolution touched a very sensitive spot in Turkey's history. It's something they'd like the world to forget.

I wonder if it wouldn't be better all around if the Turks just 'fessed up and admitted that these crimes were committed during the Ottoman Empire. Wouldn't it be better if they just opened their files and told the world the truth?

Germany has admitted its role in the Holocaust. It has accepted its responsibility. It has apologized, and it has regained the world's respect for doing so.

The Turks want the world to forget what happened in Anatolia 75 years ago. We can't let that happen.

Armenians who live in the Soviet Union certainly remember what happened. They know that only a thin fabric of civility protects them from the fate that befell their ancestors.

They see the fabric beginning to unravel, and they are worried. And we should be worried too.

For centuries, Armenians have suffered for their religious beliefs—at the hands of those who persecuted them for practicing a different religion, and at the hands of those who persecuted them for practicing any religion at all.

Armenians in the Soviet Union are surrounded by those who don't share their culture; who don't respect their talent for expression in art, music, and literature; and who envy their achievements in commerce.

Soviet Armenians know they might become the losers in a game of power politics that is not of their own making.

They see that Mr. Gorbachev is afraid of the Islamic republics in his empire.

They sense his one reason for coming down on the side of the Azeris—to keep his crumbling empire together.

If a little country here, or a little group of people there gets crushed, who in the Kremlin is going to care?

That's why commemorating the Armenian genocide is so important. It is a form of insurance. It tells the world that some people do care, and that they will not allow the Armenians to be swept away by the tidal wave of history.

One clear way of showing America's concern about the fate of Armenians in today's Soviet Union is to show that America still cares about the fate of the 1½ million Armenians who died at the hands of the Ottoman Turks.

You may remember what Hitler said. On the eve of the Holocaust, he said to his aides: "Who remembers the Armenians?"

It is a good thing to commemorate the lives lost in the great Armenian massacre. It is the best way to ensure it will never happen again.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my deepest concern for the oppression that the Armenian people suffered 75 years ago and for the new hardships they are confronted by in the present. As you know, this year marks the 75th anniversary of remembrance for those Armenians who suffered and died at the hands of the Ottoman Empire. Unfortunately, this year's remembrance comes at a time of renewed peril for Armenians living in the Soviet Union. In light of the recent violence against Armenians, it is more important than ever to remember that artocities can, and do, occur when the world chooses to turn a blind eye to realities that are too uncomfortable to confront.

My parents emigrated from southeastern Europe, just as many of yours did. I think because of this I have always had a special affinity for Americans of Armenian descent. I know that one issue of great importance to the American Armenian community is the official recognition of the Armenian genocide that occurred during World War I. As I am sure you would agree, a tradegy of this sort is never restricted to just one people. When war is made upon an entire nationality, it effects everyone: The victims, who suffer all the direct pain, hardship, and loss; the perpetrators, who must live with the guilt and disgrace of their actions; and the entire world community, which is inevitably shaken by the horror that man can bring upon his fellow man.

Unfortunately, many people today would rather forget the grim reality of what happened 75 years ago. The Government of Turkey, to this day, continues to deny events that some of you experienced, many of you remember, and all of us know occurred during that terrible time.

As I am sure many of you know, Senator BOB DOLE has been trying to get a bill through the Senate commemorating the "Armenian Genocide of 1915–1923." Unfortunately substantial opposition to this bill has been waged by the Government of Turkey—now a NATO ally—and by some very influential Senators. In a letter to my Senate colleagues, the Turkish Ambassador to the United States argued that the Ankara government is afraid that passage of this legislation would "inflame nationalist passions and historic grievances and incite further violence." Considering how few Armenians actually remain inside Turkey, I really do not see how or why the Turkish Government would fear renewed nationalist passions on the part of the Armenians there. In my judgment, the real threat to the Turkish Government is open and official recognition that its forebearers were responsible for such heinous and deplorable crimes.

Opposition on the part of some of my Senate colleagues is also difficult to understand. A number of Senators are afraid the resolution would offend Turkey. I do not see this as a legitimate concern. Turkey has been a strong NATO ally for years. I do not foresee the United States relationship with Turkey waning even with the extraordinary changes in Eastern Europe. In relationships such as the United States and Turkey's, there are bound to be disagreements. In the past, our relationship has withstood many such differences of opinion, an excellent example is the Turkish occupation of Cyprus. The 1967 invasion and subsequent occupation of this small, predominantely Greek island certainly offends Greece, also a NATO ally, and the United States, the United States has not backed away from criticizing Turkey for its military occupation of Cyprus even though such criticism upsets Turkish leaders. I see nothing wrong with letting the Government of Turkey know—in an official capacity—that the United States does not approve of what happened 75 years ago. If the Turks are displeased with this resolution, so be it. I do not see the United states relationship with Turkey irreparably damaged over passage of a genocide recognition bill.

I think it would actually be good for the Turkish Government to recognize the events of the Armenian genocide. Recently the East German Parliament recognized that it had indeed played a part in the Jewish Holocaust of World War II. This type of reconciliation with the past is extremely important. While it may be uncomfortable for the guilty country, and unquestionably revives deep, painful feelings, it is part of the healing process that allows both the victims and the perpetrators to finally come to terms with the horrors of the past. In my judgement, it is time, after 75 long years, for the Turkish Government to finally recognize that these atrocities did occur.

Regarding the Armenian genocide resolution specifically, in late February, Senator DOLE was unable to end a filibuster—supported by President Bush—against Senate Joint Resolution 202. This means that the Senate will not vote on this bill in this particular form, Joint Resolution 202 is effectively dead. However, the Armenian genocide resolution will most likely be reintroduced in the Senate as a concurrent resolution—rather than a joint resolution, a concurrent resolution differs from a joint resolution in that it does not need to be signed into law by the President. Unfortunately, it also does not carry the same weight, the President apparently believes a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Senate—rather than a binding law—would be less offensive to the Turkish Government. I am optimistic that the resolution will pass in this form. Senator DOLE was only 12 votes shy of ending the filibuster against his joint resolution. Since President Bush will not oppose a concurrent resolution, I believe enough Senators will support the resolution to ensure its passage.

While passage of the Armenian genocide resolution is certainly a top priority, there are serious problems in Soviet Armenia today that require our immediate attention as well. As I am sure you would agree, Soviet President Mikhal Gorbachev's reforms are, without question, most welcome. However, the rapid, dramatic change catalyzed by perestroika and glasnost has not been without its downside. One of the most destructive consequences of Gorbachev's reforms has been, and continues to be, the escalation of ethnically motivated violence. Tragically, new found freedom has let to increased expression of violence and hatred toward certain minority groups. In Azerbaijan, Armenia, and Karabagh the situation has been most extreme—particularly since 1988. For it was just over 2 years ago that the Nagorno-Karabagh legislation passed a resolution calling for its reunification with Armenia. Since then, the Azeris have incited riots, racist attacks, and even blockades against Armenia and Karabagh. Thousands of Armenians living in Azerbaijan have been forced to resettle outside of Azerbaijan. To be fair, some Soviet Armenians have not been above returning violent acts for violent acts, albeit in the name of self-defense.

Much of the recent tension in Azerbaijan stems from an Azeri group known as the popular front. This group, which has de facto control of Azerbaijan, has exploited Moscow's relaxed posture, and the ethnic tensions in the southern caucus region to promote its plan for an independent Azeri state. While independence is a laudable goal, and I am sure many of you here, like myself, support similar efforts of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, the means employed by the Popular Front in Azerbaijan are wholly unacceptable.

The Popular Front's ultimate goal is to unite Soviet Azerbaijan, the Nakhichevan region, and Azeri populated parts of Iran to form one nation. In addition, it also proposes annexing, and relocating the Armenians from the Karabagh region as well as the Armenian region that lies between Azerbaijan and Nakhichevan. Further, the Popular Front hopes to rid Azerbaijan of all Armenians as it believes that enthnic plurality is a threat to its goal of a unified Azeri state.

Perhaps the Popular Front's most unconscionable act to date—at least in my judgement—is its imposition of blockades against Armenia. Since July of last year, aid to the earthquake victims of Armenia, many of whom had been forced out of Azerbaijan shortly before the earthquake, as well as general shipment of commodities to Armenia, have been subject to an Azerbaijani blockade. The blockade has effectively derailed the international relief and caused severe shortages of many basic items needed for subsistence.

As you know from following the news accounts, the ethnic violence instigated by the Popular Front finally led to the intervention of Soviet forces. While it is unfortunate that force needed to be used to quell the disturbance, the restoration of basic order was certainly welcome.

Fortunately, after 3 months of relative calm there are signs of improvement in the situation in Karabagh. The Soviet leadership has allowed the Karabagh local governments to be reestablished. With time, I sincerely hope the Kremlin will allow the people of Karabagh to become part of Soviet Armenia.

We can all appreciate that Mr. Gorbachev's position is most difficult. We can only hope that he is able to strike the balance between maintaining order and allowing ethnic minorities the autonomy to determine their own destiny, including what form of government they desire to live under.

Before concluding I should comment on the latest violence that occurred last weekend. Apparently protests over the environmental situation broke out last Saturday in Armenia. These protests reportedly began after 100 people were hospitalized due to a gas leak at a chemical plant. This accident is an extreme example of the continuing problem of toxic emissions around Yerevan and the Ararat valley. Two-thirds of the Armenian population live in this region and is subjected to excessively high rates of stomach cancer, cardiac and respiratory disease, as well as birth defects. It is my sincere hope that while Mr. Gorbachev tries to improve the Soviet economy, he does not underestimate the importance of protecting the environment both in Armenia as well as the entire Soviet Union. Our environment has been abused to a far too great a degree, both in the East and in the West. It is time that the international community rise to the challenge of imposing far greater environmental controls, even if this costs short-term job loss, money, and sacrifice.

This past weekend, the United States celebrated the 20th anniversary of Earth Day, maybe next year—when we celebrate the 21st anniversary—the people of Armenia will be able to celebrate with us. I certainly hope so.

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in commemorating the anniversary of the Armenian genocide, and I wish to thank Congressman BONIOR and Congressman PASHAYAN for sponsoring this very important special order.

Commemorating the Armenian genocide is a matter of utmost importance to all people who believe that the brutality and horror of genocide must never be repeated.

In the late 19th century, the Ottoman Turkish Empire began to persecute its Armenian population. The policy of persecution was brutal and ferocious. It resulted in many deaths and enormous destruction. This policy of persecution ended in bloody massacres that extended from 1915 through 1923.

There are some who would deny that the events of 1915 through 1923 actually occurred. There are others who would deny that the events of 1915 through 1923 are worth recalling. But these are voices that we must not heed.

What happened in 1915 to the Armenian people was genocide. At least 1.5 million Armenian men, women, and children perished in the bloody massacres that ensued. The rest of the Armenian people became homeless refugees, scattered to other nations.

On July 16, 1915, U.S. Ambassador Henry Morgenthau sent a telegram to the Secretary of State that read as follows:

> Deportation of and excesses against peaceful Armenians is increasing and from harrowing reports of eyewitnesses it appears that a campaign of race extermination is in progress. . . .

The archives of the United States and of other nations are filled with material that document the premeditated extermination of the Armenian people.

If we permit genocide and inhumanity to go unacknowledged and unmourned, we make it more likely to reoccur. When Adolf Hitler planned the genocide against the Jews, he is quoted as having said, "Who remembers the Armenians?" When we let one genocide go unremembered, we invite another genocide. Just as we must never forget the victims of the Nazi Holocaust, we must never forget the victims of the Armenian genocide—the first genocide of the 20th century.

As a Jewish woman alive at the time of the Holocaust against the Jews, there are few things that have made a stronger impression on my life. There was not a person among my friends or family who was not touched by the horrors of the Holocaust.

It was from the survivors of the Nazi death camps, where antisemitism was transformed into an orderly and mechanized process of mass murder, that we learned that all-important cry, "never forget!" And just as we must never forget the victims of the Nazi Holocaust, we must never forget the victims of the Armenian genocide—the first genocide of the 20th century.

It is fundamentally important that we publicly and without reservation condemn the atrocities that brought death and destruction to Armenia in the early part of the century. This tragic event must never be forgotten by us or by any people around the globe.

When the survivors of the Nazi concentration camps reentered civilization, they admonished the rest of us, "never forget!" and we have taken those words to heart.

Today, we must go even further. We must pledge to "never be silent." We must raise our voices against intolerance and oppression, wherever we confront them. We must pledge to work strenuously to prevent the horrors that have afflicted past generations, so that we leave to our children a future that is safer and more tolerant of the importance of all peoples and all cultures around the world.

Here in the U.S. Congress, we must dedicate ourselves, not only to remember the tragedy of the Armenian genocide, but to prevent inhumanity and genocide in the future.

Mr. OWENS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, no words of outrage or tragic loss can describe the events of 1915 through 1923, which claimed the lives of 1½ million Armenians. We haven't the vocabulary to capture the suffering or conjure the anguish. We haven't the capacity to give such words meaning.

The term "genocide" was coined in the aftermath of the Second World War to define in an academic, almost clinical way a phenomenon of the 20th century—the deliberate and systematic destruction of an entire people. It has no precedent in the barbaric annals of human history. It requires all of the organization and technology of our time.

I rise today along with my colleagues to remember the atrocities of 1915 to 1923 on this 75th anniversary. We join together to register an unspeakable loss, recognizing it as a singular event in history, a genocide. No manner of justice or atonement can be offered for the deaths of 2 out of every 3 Armenians living in their homeland. The most we can offer, and the least, is our remembrance.

Nearly 2 months ago, the other body failed to adopt a joint resolution which would have designated April 24, 1990, a national day of remembrance for those who perished in the Armenian genocide. This was a modest resolution which deliberately omitted mention of the current Republic of Turkey. Yet, due to Turkey's protests, the administration subordinated an issue of simple morality to amorphous claims of national security. Despite a clear campaign commitment to support this very resolution, President Bush persuaded 16 cosponsors to change their votes. I commend the distinguished Senate minority leader for his leadership, and regret that his efforts were so undermined by the President.

As we join together to commemorate this 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide, let us renew our firm commitment to designate April 24, 1991 a day of remembrance in the law of this land.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, today we commemorate the events of 75 years ago in eastern Anatolia in which the Armenian people were subject to forced death marches and mass executions at the hands of their Ottoman overlords. These well-documented events were part of a deliberate attempt to destroy the proud and culturally rich Armenian nation. By the end of this ordeal, 1½ million, or two-thirds of the Armenian population, had been decimated.

While we remember this tragedy, we ought to reflect on the admirable fortitude with which the Armenian people have recovered from that incredible hardship and have worked to resurrect their nation. Through their faith they have found meaning in their ancestors' martyrdom and have perpetuated the Armenian spirit. The many Armenian communities across the United States have enriched the culture of our country and their example lends faith to those of us who also will experience hardship at some time.

While the survivors of the Armenian genocide and their descendants have recovered with dignity, they forever bear a tremendous anguish. That anguish, over the pain of a nation once broken and scattered about the globe, cannot but be exacerbated by the failure of some to fully recognize the full implication of those events. I would hope that those events receive worldwide recognition. Only through such recognition of the truth can the Armenian people hope to feel some measure of compensation for the ultimate injustice incurred by their nation 75 years ago.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for the opportunity to participate in this special order so that we may commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide.

We merely seek to have the truth told. To that end, we have worked to pass a resolution that would formalize the U.S. recognition of the genocide.

As time passes and more and more of the eyewitnesses die, we have a duty to those who have died and to those who survive to help preserve this memory forever. Indeed, an exhibit on the Armenian genocide will be included in the U.S. Holocaust Museum which is now under construction.

But this is not enough. What we now need is official recognition by the U.S. Congress and we will not cease this effort until this resolution is approved.

Of course, there are those who would prefer that these atrocities be forgotten forever. This is the final indignity. As a democratic country committed to human rights and humane values, it is our duty to record and to remember these terrible events. Only in this way can we ensure that such atrocities will never again be inflicted on any people.

Armenians have roots dating back more than 1,000 years in what is now eastern Turkey, northwestern Iran, and south-central Soviet Union. Today the Armenians in the Soviet Union continue their struggle to survive; they face not only the monumental task of rebuilding their lives after the devastating earthquake of late 1988, but they must also contend with the nationalist violence of their neighboring Soviet states.

On this day of memory for the 1½ million Armenians who lost their lives in the genocide we pledge our support both for a resolution recognizing the Armenian genocide, and for the ongoing struggle for Armenian rights in the Soviet Union.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, today we are called on to remember the tragic events which occurred in Armenia under the rule of the Ottoman Empire from 1915 to 1923. During that time, almost two-thirds of the Armenians living in their homeland were killed. As a way of paying respect to the large number of Armenians who needlessly lost their lives, I support House Resolution 212, which designates April 24, 1990 as the 75th Commemoration of Armenian Martyrs' Day.

Being from Boston, with its large Armenian population, I have witnessed the grief and sense of loss felt throughout the Armenian community. I would like to express my profound sympathy for Armenians both living in Soviet Armenia and in diaspora, who had lost relatives and friends under Ottoman rule. I also share the concern of many Armenians over the reluctance of the present Turkish Government to take any responsibility for the tragedy, even to the point of denying it ever occurred. Therefore, I urge my fellow colleagues to join me in expressing admiration for the Armenian population, which has endured so much and to press the Turkish Government to accept its responsibility, as a modern state, for the actions of its previous government.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, there is an Armenian grandmother in my district, her name could be Elizabeth. Elizabeth was born in her homeland of Armenia beneath the shadow of Mount Ararat. But she has no way of knowing exactly where she was born or when. Perhaps she has faint glimmers of once looking into her mother's smile.

Today, Elizabeth struggles but she cannot remember her mother. Elizabeth was orphaned in 1915. Her parents were victims of the first genocide of this century perpetrated by the leaders of the Ottoman Empire in what is today eastern Turkey.

In remembrance of her parents and 1½ million other Armenians who perished during the genocide of 1915, there was introduced in the Senate this session a resolution honoring these victims. This resolution was but a small token, a small gesture, saying to Elizabeth—we, the elected leaders of the free world, share with you your sorrow and pledge to remember one of man's greatest inhumanities to man so that we may never again be a witness to it on this earth.

The inhumanities and utter barbarisms of 1915, witnessed by U.S. Government officials, various relief workers, and missionaries and the world press, came in many forms. The able-bodied young men were inducted into the Ottoman army and worked to death or summarily executed. The religious and community leaders were gathered and butchered. The remaining men were taken away and shot.

Shockingly, the women, children, and elderly suffered an even crueler fate. They were forcibly marched in the deserts, without food or water and then bayonetted, raped, or allowed merely to fall and slowly die of exhaustion. The desert of Der Zor is one such place where the sands are soaked with the blood of these martyrs, parents, grandparents, and children.

These memories fill Elizabeth's mind. One of these victims was her mother, another her father, and perhaps a brother or sister she may have had back in 1915. Hearing of the Senate resolution, Elizabeth's heart was filled with joy, her eyes with tears that the U.S. Senate would have the moral fortitude to say, "We shall remember."

That was not to be the case however. Instead Elizabeth has learned a new proud word: filibuster—defined by Webster's Third New International Dictionary as "the use of extreme dilatory tactics by an individual or group in an attempt to delay or prevent action by the majority."

My esteemed colleagues may not realize that when they delivered their filibuster against this commemorative resolution, they stood not in the U.S. Senate but in the sands of Der Zor, atop the abandoned skeletons and souls of Elizabeth's parents, grandparents, sisters, brothers.

Today, Elizabeth is owed an explanation of the meaning of the word filibuster. She is owed a response to her question: "Why?" She needs to be reminded that ours is the Senate of the United States of America—which stands as the defender of freedom and liberty, the beacon of morality and justice, and the country into whose arms she ran as an orphan, a forgotten child of the forgotten genocide of 1915.

My esteemed colleagues, let us push aside the pressures of special interests and reaffirm for Elizabeth what our great nation stands for. On the 75th anniversary of the first genocide of the 20th century, let us vote to remember man's inhumanity to man so that our children may never forget.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Hawaii has my sincere thanks for arranging this special order, so that we might all have the opportunity to pay tribute and bid farewell to our good friend and esteemed former colleague, SPARK MATSUNAGA.

I first became personally acquainted with SPARKY on his own "turf," during a congressional delegation which visited Hawaii. He could not have been more gracious, courteous, helpful and informative, and he extended his equally helpful staff to us. It was immediately clear how much SPARK loved Hawaii, and how fortunate that State was to have had his dedicated and enthusiastic public service for so many years.

From our earliest acquaintance, I always enjoyed having the opportunity to practice my Japanese on SPARKY. He took my practice efforts very seriously, and never failed to correct my pronunciation meticulously. The exchanges became something of a humorous ritual between us, and I always greatly enjoyed his company. For that reason alone, I would miss him.

However, SPARKY was much more to me than a dedicated legislator, Japanese instructor, and even enjoyable colleague. He and his wife, Helene, became good friends to my wife and myself. Our relationship has provided many treasured personal memories which will keep him alive in my heart, always.

SPARK MATSUNAGA made enormous contributions to his State, his country, and the international community. But, for me, personally, he will be remembered most for the even greater gift of his friendship.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, in this age of global telecommunications, it would be impossible to understand how the massacre of nearly 1 million Armenians could go unnoticed by the rest of the world. Indeed, the murder of even a few individuals in this day and age is almost instantaneously transmitted around the globe, and international condemnation is almost sure to follow.

Unfortunately, such a mechanism did not exist in the early part of this century, and the international community remained almost blind to one of the most tragic events of the 20th century: The brutal and systematic massacre of the Armenian people by the rulers of the Ottoman empire during the period of 1915–23.

Armenian-Americans are hard working individuals who are committed to the memories of those friends and relatives lost during this dark period of history. I have listened to the stories they have to tell. Stories of mothers seeing their husbands and sons executed before their eyes. Stories of families forcibly separated, never to see each other again. Accounts of babies beheaded, of entire villages murdered. One cannot help but be touched by these personal accounts.

A resolution was introduced to commemorate the Armenian genocide. This bill only sought to remind us of the tragedy so that our generation, and future generations, might take the care to ensure that this type of horror might never be repeated. Unfortunately, the resolution was smothered by opponents who argued that our relations with Turkey, an important NATO ally, might be harmed.

I think that it is unfortunate that the leaders of Turkey have taken such offense to this effort. They certainly are not being blamed for the tragedy, and bear no responsibility for the actions of the Ottoman Empire. The relationship between the United States and the Turkish Government should not be affected.

Today's special order is a solemn reminder of the brutality that man is capable of inflicting upon fellow human beings. It is our job to see that the world never forgets this incident, and in so doing, ensures that all possible international pressure is brought upon those who violate the most basic human right of every man, woman and child—life.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, with deep respect for the long suffering of the Armenian people, I join my colleagues in honoring the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide.

Every year, Mr. Speaker, some of my colleagues and I issue this simple message of commemoration for a people who were systematically slaughtered. We must never forget the Armenian genocide was a real slaughter that occurred this century to real people and left behind pain and human suffering that continues to this day.

Let me tell you about one of the people who experienced firsthand the evil of that time. His name is Yervant Kouyoumjian, he was born in 1907, and he along with other Armenian-Americans told his story to the Washington Post. Some of the details of his experiences with death and destruction at such an early age are too gruesome for me to repeat. He tells of knowing that his father would be taken away.

"All night my father and mother were crying," he told the Post. "In the meantime, my father was sewing the Turkish gold into our belts. The next morning, they took my father and one of my stepbrothers, and from then on, our misery started."

His mother later sent him and his brother off with what they thought was a sympathetic man. When the two boys realized instead they were going to be killed, they managed to escape.

But most Armenians didn't. Two out of every three Armenians died during the years between 1915 to 1923. One extended family of 86 people was reduced to five.

Still, the Turkish Government fails to acknowledge this holocaust.

In this country, we are well aware of the Holocaust inflicted by Nazi Germany. That awareness helps us to ensure that it will never happen again. The 1.5 million victims of the Armenian genocide have not been able to experience the healing such recognition would accord. Only by looking this awful period in history straight in the eye can we fully comprehend its ugliness and hatred, and ensure that it too will never happen again.

I am proud to have been a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 417, which would have made April 24 a national day of remembrance. We will never forget.

REINSTATEMENT OF SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my 5-minute special order be reinstated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCURDY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

UPDATE ON SANDINISTA PLANS TO GOVERN FROM BELOW IN NICARAGUA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, as a result of classified material made available to this Member through membership on the House Select Committee on Intelligence, I have become quite concerned by activities of the Sandinista government and its supporters in the post-election environment in Nicaragua. Accordingly, this Member wishes to share some unclassified information with my colleagues and the public about both what has happened in Nicaragua since the election for Violetta Chamorro to the Presidency. It is a brief account of what the Sandinistas have done in an attempt to undermine or sabotage the government headed by Violetta Chamorro and Virgilio Godoy, who will be inaugurated tomorrow, on April 25, 1990.

First. Summary: Sandinista actions since the election suggest President Daniel Ortega will try to follow through on his pledge to govern from below after April 25. The Sandinistas have used all the advantages of incumbency in their final 2 months to strengthen their power and undercut President Chamorro's ability to govern. In particular, the Sandinista-controlled National Assembly has passed a number of laws which will benefit party supporters, limit Chamorro's options, and deplete State resources. These moves could severely inhibit Chamorro's ability to restructure the Government or make rapid economic improvements, and further deplete Government resources so as to cause an even more severe early economic crunch for the new administration.

Second. Appropriating Government resources: The outgoing Government has raided Government assets to undercut Chamorro and ensure the Sandinista Party's financial future. The Sandinista-controlled National Assembly passed laws last month granting legal titles to some 10,000 State-owned homes and properties occupied by party loyalists since the 1979 overthrow of President Anastasio Somoza. Other States assets, such as radio stations and businesses, have been given or sold to party members. In addition, State enterprises are distributing vehicles and other property to Sandinista supporters, and there have been widespread reports of looting of Government offices. The regime also may grant last-minute hefty salary hikes to public employees before leaving office, depleting bank reserves, and preempting Chamorro's plan to realistically raise wages.

Third. Protecting party loyalists: The Sandinistas are implementing legal measures to protect supporters and power base before leaving office. The National Assembly passed a broad amnesty for unprosecuted crimes committed since 1979, and Ortega has asked for pardons for some 900 imprisoned Army and Interior Ministry personnel. The Assembly has amended the civil service law to expand benefits to Government employees and protect the jobs of party followers. In addition, the Assembly has granted immunity and a lifetime pension to some high-ranking Sandinista officials and extended salary benefits for outgoing legislators. The Assembly also has given legal status to a plethora of associations, foundation, and civilian groups associated with the party.

Fourth. Limiting Chamorro's policy options: The Sandinistas are taking steps to hamper Chamorro's ability to reverse existing policies. For example, the National Assembly passed a bill requiring the new Government to continue to press Nicaragua's suit against the United States in the International Court of Justice. In addition, the Assembly has moved to prevent a rollback of agrarian reform by guaranteeing ownership rights to some 120,000 individual farmers and cooperatives who have received land since 1979. Party leaders also announced that they intend to use their large bloc of votes in the National Assembly to thwart constitutional change and protect revolutionary social programs.

Fifth. Threatening destabilization: The Sandinistas are planning harsher measures to press the Chamorro government if they believe their power base or programs are threatened. Party leaders have publicly raised the possibility of widespread strikes by the large Sandinista labor unions if Chamorro's economic policies work against labor's interests. In addition, party hardliners are distributing weapons to civilian supporters, giving them the ability to forcibly challenge the Government.

Mr. Speaker, these are a few of the unfortunate facts that I am free to relate publicly to my colleagues in the Congress. It is important that we keep these facts about the post-election activities of the Sandinista government of Nicaragua and its supporters in mind as we view the subsequent actions of the Chamorro administration, and the situations it faces in the difficult days ahead.

THE INCOMPARABLE SCENERY AND SUPERLATIVE SKIING IN COLORADO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, as the representative for that part of the country that I can humbly say offers the best skiing on this continent, I know—and most of my constituents know—how important tourism is to Colorado and our mountain communities.

People who live on the Western Slope of the Rockies in my district have traditionally supported themselves by utilizing the resources the mountains provide. Whether it was beaver pelts, gold, silver, and coal, or timber, early settlers in Colorado made their living harvesting and mining the treasures of the mountains.

More recently, many small communities and rural areas have discovered that they do not have to dig anything up, cut anything down or take anything away to profit from the mountains. They've found out that people will pay money to slide down the mountains on pieces of wood or fiberglass; that visitors from flatter places are fascinated by the high country and the hiking, camping, and fishing that can be found there; that locals and visitors alike can enjoy driving on scenic highways to view brilliantly gold aspen trees in the autumn.

Colorado draws visitors to the mountains in all seasons, but a closer look at just the winter aspect, the ski industry, gives us a good idea of how important tourism is to our State's economy.

The State's skiing industry has grown in the past 40 years to encompass more than 61,000 jobs and nearly $2.3 billion in retail sales. The industry supports 28 ski areas, nearly 10 million skier visits and on average draws 10,000 out-of-State visitors a day to the State's Western Slope resorts.

The benefits of skiing extend beyond the ski resorts, of course. State sales tax revenues that resulted directly from the ski industry amounted to $49 million last year. Personal and corporate income taxes generated another $43 million, and $9 million came into State coffers through alcohol, cigarette, and motor fuels taxes paid by skiers. The State of Colorado realized a total of more than $100 million in tax revenues, thanks to the skiing industry, and believe me, no one in State and local government is sneezing about this contribution.

The latest data available ranked Colorado 18th in the United States in terms of travel and tourism expenditures in the State. Travel and tourism as a whole brings in more than $5.7 billion, with each visitor spending on average $1,740 in our State. These numbers, too, are getting the attention of everyone, from the chambers of commerce in small, rural towns up to the Governor's office.

In Colorado, we know that tourism pays, and we are working hard to bring visitors from other States as well as from foreign countries to our State to sample our incomparable scenery and superlative skiing.

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.J. Res. 492

By Mr. PARKER:

—Page 1, line 3, strike out "March 30, 1990" and insert in lieu thereof "March 30, 1991".

—Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to designate March 30, 1991, as 'National Doctor's Day'.".

SENATE—Tuesday, April 24, 1990

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 18, 1990)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable TIMOTHY E. WIRTH, a Senator from the State of Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. Today's prayer will be offered by guest Chaplain Archbishop Mesrob Ashjian, prelate of the Armenian Apostolic Church of America in New York City.

PRAYER

The Honorable Archbishop Mesrob Ashjian, prelate of the Armenian Apostolic Church of America, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Eternal Guide of all people, direct us along the path of justice and honor in our daily conduct. Give of Thy blessings to this glorious Nation, so that it may continue to shine as a welcoming beacon of liberty amidst the dark clouds of tyranny and oppression. Reveal always Thy infinite Spirit to the Members of this august body, that they may be inspired toward a greatness of purpose, that they be ennobled in the urgent quest for justice, freedom, and peace for all mankind.

Today we beseech Thee to be mindful of the Armenian people, who sorrowfully commemorate the 75th anniversary of the genocide of one and a half million Armenians in the massacres of 1915.

Mindful of the teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ, we ask not for retribution or revenge, but for repentence and redemption.

We thank Thee in the name of the Armenian people for Thy eternal wisdom and divine mercy in providing them a safe refuge in these United States from the ravaging inhumanity of their enemies. We offer to Thee our sacrifices upon the altar of freedom in an act of redemption for all of mankind. In turn, Heavenly Father, we ask that Thy other children always be spared from the stifling yoke of tyranny, persecution, and fear.

Grant to all of the nations of the family of mankind the compassion and love which Thy Son offered to us through His sacrifice, that we may live freely with joy and happiness amidst all of the glories of Your creation.

Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, April 24, 1990.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable TIMOTHY E. WIRTH, a Senator from the State of Colorado, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. WIRTH thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order, the majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. This morning, following the time reserved for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

At 10 o'clock this morning, under the provisions of the previously approved unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will consider the Packwood log exports amendment, No. 1492, for 1 hour. The agreement also provides that any relevant second-degree amendment to the Packwood amendment will be considered under a 1-hour time limitation.

On yesterday, the Senate granted unanimous consent to consider three Heinz amendments, Nos. 1505, 1506, and 1507, en bloc, following disposition of the log exports amendment.

The Senate will recess today for the party conference luncheons between the hours of 1 and 3 p.m. with action resuming on the tariff bill when the Senate reconvenes at 3 p.m.

Last Friday I indicated publicly to all Senators that today's session could extend well into the evening, as it is my hope that action will be completed on the pending tariff bill. Therefore, Senators should be aware that there is a likelihood of rollcall votes occurring throughout the day and into the evening as we attempt to complete action on this bill.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time, and I reserve all of the leader time of the distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. GRASSLEY addressed the Chair.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa.

JUDICIAL TAX PROHIBITION ACT

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, no doubt every schoolchild in Kansas City knows that the American Revolution was fought over the issue of taxation without representation. It is likely they also are taught that the Constitution reserves to Congress the power to lay and collect taxes. Perhaps they are familiar with the writings of Alexander Hamilton, who noted that "the judiciary * * * has no influence over either the sword or the purse. * * * And just maybe they have learned what Chief Justice John Marshall once wrote: that "courts are the mere instruments of the law, and can will nothing."

Mr. President, unless last week's Supreme Court opinion in Missouri versus Jenkins is overturned, Kansas City's children—and all of us—will have to relearn the fundamental roles of the courts and legislatures in democratic governance.

Last Wednesday, a bare majority of the Court let stand a doubling in the city's property tax—ordered by an unelected and unaccountable Federal judge—to finance a court-ordered desegregation plan. Those who thought, as the doctrines of separation of powers and federalism require, that the power to tax is clearly limited to the legislature, were in for a rude surprise, both by Judge Russell Clark's district court opinion and by Justice White's opinion for the Supreme Court.

Before you think mine is a typical complaint of a conservative critic, you should read Friday's editorial in the Washington Post. Normally, the Post is no fan of judicial restraint. But even the Post found Judge Clark's remedies too "fantastic" to believe:

He ruled that in order to overcome the effects of previous segregation, the Kansas City schools had to be made so exemplary that suburban youngsters would choose to return to the inner city to school. All schools were required to be completely renovated and air-conditioned. Every classroom was to be equipped with 15 microcomputers. Swimming pools, a planetarium and a temperature-controlled art gallery were mandated. And extras such as a broadcasting system, a 25-acre farm, movie studios and a model United Nations, with simultaneous translation facilities were found to be necessary to vindicate constitutional rights. The judge, of course, did not have to consider the cost—hundreds of millions of dollars—or the competing demands for city money for health, social services or law enforcement.

The second astonishing aspect of the case is the expansion of judicial power into an area understood to be the prerogative of a representative body of elected officials. As Justice Kennedy and three colleagues protested, "[The court's] casual embrace of taxation imposed by the unelected, life-tenured federal judiciary disregards fundamental precepts for the democratic control of public institutions." The precedent for court-ordered tax increases to provide all sorts of services when constitutional rights are asserted is ominous. Imagine, for example, three separate federal judges in this city resolving cases involving St. Elizabeths, Lorton and Cedar Knolls, ordering massive tax increases without regard to overall budget priorities, necessary expenditures not before the courts or even the cumulative impact of these three separate orders.

The Judicial Tax Prohibition Act would end such judicial arrogation of the legislative function. It would end this bald abuse of power by the Federal judiciary. It would restore the taxing authority solely to the people through their elected representatives—as our Constitution commands.

There is no doubt that Congress has the constitutional power to limit the authority of the Federal courts to propose such an extreme judicial remedy as a tax increase on the people. So we do not need a constitutional amendment. Indeed, article III, section 2 of the Constitution already gives Congress plenary power in this regard.

Mr. President, I commend Senator HUMPHREY for introducing S. 34 last January and note that, in the wake of last week's decision, we need it without further delay.

SUPREME COURT DECISION IN MISSOURI VERSUS JENKINS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President. on Wednesday, April 18, the Supreme Court handed down an unprecedented decision in Missouri versus Jenkins. By a narrow 5 to 4 vote, the Supreme Court ruling will allow Federal judges to order local governments to increase taxes to accommodate a judicial remedy.

I firmly believe that this decision creates an overly broad extension of the Federal judiciary into an area which has traditionally been reserved to State and local governments.

Mr. President, the very foundation of this Nation was based on opposition to taxation without representation. The recent Supreme Court decision would grant a Federal judge—an unelected and life-tenured judge—the power to order tax increases in local communities. The individual citizens do not elect Federal judges, and they are quite insulated from public opinion. The power to tax is a significant power. However, the rights of citizens had been protected so far as taxation came from elected representatives. Taxation viewed by the public as unnecessary is duly noted at the ballot box. There is no protection for citizens' consent when taxes are imposed through the exercise of judicial power.

There are intricate and complex debates by State and local governments as to where scarce tax dollars will be spent. Federal judges, who are independent by design, should have no role in the imposition of taxes for a particular program or even for raising general revenue. The role of the judiciary is to interpret the law, not to legislate. The power to tax should remain solely a legislative function. In the Federalist No. 48, James Madison explained that in our democratic system, "the legislative department alone has access to the pockets of the people."

Mr. President on the first legislative day of the 101st Congress, I was pleased to join Senator HUMPHREY as an original cosponsor of S. 34 to clarify the remedial jurisdiction of inferior Federal courts. This bill would make clear that inferior courts established under article III of the Constitution do not have jurisdiction to issue any remedy or judicial decree requiring the Federal Government or any State or local government to impose any new tax or increase any existing tax. It is important to note that this legislation does not prohibit Federal courts "from ordering duly authorized remedies, otherwise within their jurisdiction, which may require expenditures by Federal, State, or local governments where such expenditures are necessary to effectuate such remedies."

Mr. President, it is clear that the burden is now on the Congress to alter this decision and return the power of taxation to its proper forum, the legislative branch.

As our distinguished colleague, Senator DANFORTH, remarked when this decision was handed down by the district court, "If the courts have the power to tax, then is there any legislative power that can be deemed beyond the reach of the judicial branch?

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the legislation we have introduced which is directly on point to the Supreme Court decision in Missouri versus Jenkins.

Mr. PRESIDENT, I ask unanimous consent that the following editorials from the Washington Post, the Greenville News, and the Augusta Chronicle be printed in the RECORD following my remarks. These editorials are in opposition to the Jenkins decision, and I believe my colleagues will find them most informative on this issue.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follow:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 20, 1990]

COURT-ORDERED TAXATION

The taxpayers of Kansas City, Mo., must be wondering if they have for years completely misunderstood all the civics courses they took in high school: the ones where they learned about the separation of powers and the inequity of taxation without representation. Here they have been going along innocently believing that elected officials—people whose positions must be in some measure responsive to the views of their constituents and whose tenure in office is dependent on those constituents' approval—are the ones who set and impose taxes. But is a case involving school desegregation in their city, a series of federal courts has insisted that these principles are flexible and can be disregarded by a judge who assumes ultimate authority for raising and allocating this burden. This week five justices of the U.S. Supreme Court agreed that the Kansas City judge could order local authorities to double property taxes.

This case is unprecedented in two respects. The first is the scope of the remedies ordered by the judge. He ruled that in order to overcome the effects of previous segregation the Kansas City schools has to be made so exemplary that suburban youngsters would choose to return to the inner city to school. All schools were required to be completely renovated and air-conditioned. Every class-room was to be equipped with 15 microcomputers. Swimming pools, a planetarium and a temperature-controlled art gallery were mandated. And extras such as a broadcasting system, a 25-acre farm, movie studies and a model U.N. with simultaneous translation facilities were found to be necessary to vindicate constitutional rights. The judge, of course, didn't have to consider the cost—hundreds of millions of dollars—or the competing demands for city money for health, social services or law enforcement.

The second astonishing aspect of the case is the expansion of judicial power into an area understood to be the prerogative of a representative body of elected officials. As Justice Anthony Kennedy and three colleagues protested, "[The court's] casual embrace of taxation imposed by the unelected, life-tenured federal judiciary disregards fundamental precepts for the democratic control of public institutions." The precedent for court-ordered tax increases to provide all sorts of services when constitutional rights are asserted is ominous. Imagine, for example, three separate federal judges in this city resolving cases involving St. Elizabeths, Lorton and Cedar Knolls ordering massive tax increases without regard to overall budget priorities, necessary expenditures not before the courts or even the cumulative impact of these three separate orders.

It is very hard to understand how the Supreme Court could have refused to review the fantastic remedies ordered by the Kansas City judge and why a majority of justices has approved the concept of judicially mandated taxes. There are other ways for a court to compel compliance with even an order like this without imposing a tax to pay for it.

[From the Augusta Chronicle, Apr. 20, 1990]

COURT: ONE FOR TWO

In two turns at bat Wednesday, the U.S. Supreme Court hit a home run and miserably struck out.

The home run came in a 6-3 ruling, with the most liberal justices dissenting, that allows states to prosecute persons for owning or viewing child pornography, even in their own homes.

The High Court, however, not only struck out, but fell flat on its face, when it ruled 5-4, with conservative justices dissenting, that federal judges can order local officials to raise taxes and scrap state laws to advance school desegregation goals.

Writing for the majority in the "kiddie porn" case, Justice Byron R. White said the purpose of the Ohio law was not to censor pornography—indeed, adult smut is still permissible—but to "protect the victims of child pornography."

How better to do that than to strike at buyers of child pornography? They are the ones, after all, who create the demand. Take them out of circulation, and the market dries up.

The law, moreover, pertains only to lewd sexual acts and pictures stressing private parts; it excludes child nudity for art, science and ordinary family photography. No violence is done to First Amendment rights to free expression.

The tax ruling, however, does terrible violence to the Constitution, notwithstanding that the majority tried to soften the radical nature of its decision by saying judges can't raise taxes on their own, as U.S. District Federal Judge Russel Clark did in Kansas City, Mo.

But by giving Clark the authority to order local officials to raise taxes, the Court created a distinction without a difference.

More significantly, it gives the federal judiciary something it has never had before—the power to tax.

Justice Anthony Kennedy, writing for the minority, asserted the ruling endorses taxation without representation, thereby destroying a fundamental precept of the Constitution: ". . . that the power (to tax) must be under control of those who are taxed," i.e., the elected legislative branches of government.

This is a horrendous reminder that under an activist Court the Constitution doesn't mean what it says, but what a transient Court majority says it means.

What's to stop federal judges from ordering massive tax boosts to improve prisons, hospitals or pay for any "noble" social purpose that tugs on their heartstrings?

If giving a blank check to unelected officeholders with life-time tenure doesn't move Congress to protect the people's power of the purse, then it's time the people give the government a history lesson on what the Boston Tea Party was all about!

[From the Greenville (SC) News, Apr. 21, 1990]

IMPERIAL JUDGES MAY COMMAND NEW TAXES

Forget the president, read the U.S. Supreme Court's lips: A judge may order new taxes. The latest expansion of the power of the judiciary came in a Supreme Court ruling Wednesday that said federal judges may order local governments to raise taxes.

In the desegregation case involving the Kansas City, Mo., school district, a federal judge ordered local officials to put an end to an exodus of white students from inner city schools by adopting a magnet school plan. A problem in complying with the order was that voters wouldn't approve the taxes needed to pay for the costly school plan.

So, the enterprising judge simply ordered that local property taxes be doubled. An appeals court said the judge went a bit too far, that he should have ordered the elected school board to raise taxes instead of raising them himself.

In essence, the Supreme Court majority agreed with the appeals court judges, tuttutting about the judge overstepping form, but agreeing he could order local officials to do his will.

As a dissenting justice, Anthony Kennedy, noted, this was no more than an academic distinction. Unquestionably, the court has ratified the concept of an imperial federal judiciary that exercises another increment of power, and answers to no one for it.

Back in the 1700s, this sort of thing was called taxation without representation, and it provoked a revolution. Now it will be applauded by some, because the worthy end served—desegregated and well-funded schools—is thought to justify the means that are contrary to democratic rule. As Justice Kennedy observed, the "casual embrace of taxation imposed by the unelected, life-tenured federal judiciary disregards fundamental precepts for the democratic control of public institutions."

It's interesting that the Missouri judge went considerably beyond the issue of desegregation in his ruling. The judge provided, at taxpayers' expense, such amenities for the public schools as swimming pools, computers, and movie editing rooms.

In the past, federal judges have ordered states to improve circumstances found to be unconstitutional, such as overcrowded prisons or inadequate mental health facilities. Inevitably these orders have forced funding shifts and increases in state spending, but never before has the judiciary assumed the authority of elected representatives to order higher taxes.

The latest Supreme Court ruling gives federal judges unprecedented powers. Despite appointments of the past decade of many judges who are inclined to restraint, it's clear many more such appointments are needed.

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

(The remarks of Mr. DURENBERGER pertaining to the submission of Senate Resolution 274 are located in today's RECORD under "Submission of Concurrent and Senate Resolutions.")

TAXES AND THE COURTS—MISSOURI VERSUS JENKINS

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished senior Senator from South Carolina for his leadership on this and I thank him for his attentiveness to this very important issue of taxation without representation. This is really the essence of this question.

Mr. President, last Wednesday the Supreme Court issued its decision in Missouri versus Jenkins, a school desegregation case in which a Federal district judge imposed a property tax increase to finance the construction of magnet schools in the Kansas City, MO, School District. Very sadly and wrongly, in my judgment, a five-member majority of the Court said on Wednesday that the Federal judiciary can indeed order elected government officials to levy taxes, notwithstanding the legal and constitutional limitations on the taxing authority of those officials. That conclusion violates a fundamental principle of democratic government, namely that people who pay taxes must consent to be taxed, either directly or through their elected representatives. I hope Congress will not let this decision stand long, and I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of S. 34, the Judicial Taxation Prohibition Act, to make it clear that Federal courts do not have jurisdiction to require any government entity to impose new or higher taxes.

Missouri State law, like State law in Idaho and elsewhere, limits the taxing power of local entities of government. The school district has authority to levy property taxes up to $1.25 per $100 of assessed value, and higher taxes can only be imposed pursuant to a referendum vote in which the school district's residents give their direct consent. In this case, the taxes required to finance construction of the district court-approved magnet school system far exceeded the school district's taxing authority, so this unelected, life-tenured Federal judge decided to impose the higher tax on his own authority. The Supreme Court's majority concludes correctly that the judiciary has no power to lay taxes on its own, but concludes in error that the judiciary does have power to order government officials to impose taxes.

In a very powerfully written dissent, Justice Kennedy says, "Any purported distinction between direct imposition of a tax by the Federal court and an order commanding the school district to impose the tax is but a convenient formalism. * * * Absent a change in State law, the tax is imposed by Federal authority under a Federal decree." In contrast to the majority opinion, Justice Kennedy cites the words of the Framers, the language of the Constitution, prior Supreme Court holdings on the question of the judiciary's power to tax, and fundamental elements of the American Revolution: all of which indicate the power to tax is a legislative, not a judicial, power. The Court's decision clearly violates that fundamental precept of democratic government.

I commend Justice Kennedy's dissenting remarks to the attention of all my colleagues, and I thank Senators THURMOND, HUMPHREY, GRASSLEY, and others on the Judiciary Committee for their leadership on this most important issue to straighten out what I think is wrong within government. "No taxation without representation" is the essence of democratic government and a battle cry of liberty for which Americans have risked, and sometimes lost, their lives. The Court's decision in Missouri versus Jenkins puts at risk the sacrifices and enduring achievements of our Founding Fathers. I hope it will be quickly and decisively overturned.

COURT ORDERED IMPOSITION OF TAXES

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I was both surprised and dismayed last Wednesday to see the U.S. Supreme Court decided that a Federal court has the power to order the imposition of taxes. One of the most treasured and fundamental principles upon which this country was founded was the concept that there shall be no taxation without representation. This is not just another old saw, Mr. President. Article I of our Constitution gives only the legislative branch the power to lay and collect taxes, not the courts. I support legislation to halt this expansion of Federal judges' scope of authority and to restore a power that was improperly usurped by the courts.

Legislation is necessary because the courts have shown themselves unwilling or unable to curb such outrageous judicial activism. In the 1987 case, Missouri versus Jenkins, Judge Russel Clark of the western district of Missouri unilaterally ordered a 25 percent income tax surcharge and a 95 percent property tax increase on all income and property in the district to fund a school desegregation settlement which he had ordered. The $187 million plan designed to entice students to return to the inner-city schools, was imposed by a judge who even went so far as to order exactly how the money was to be spent. Numerous swimming pools and sporting fields, greenhouses, a farm complete with farm animals and equipment, a planetarium and model United Nations, complete with translation equipment, are just a few of the remedies Judge Clark viewed as necessary.

The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals overturned the income tax surcharge but it let the property tax increase stand. Disappointingly, the U.S. Supreme Court said that, although a Federal judge could not directly increase taxes, he could force local and State governments to raise taxes. As Justice Kennedy's dissent points out, such a "distinction between direct imposition of a tax increase by the Federal court and an order commanding the school district to impose the tax is but a convenient formalism."

I find this decision particularly troublesome because the people of Wyoming have chosen not to adopt a State income tax. An unelected court official could essentially wipe out the will of the people, reach into their pockets and order that additional moneys must be raised to take care of prison overcrowding, for example. Such action would be neither popular nor appropriate.

I cosponsored the Judicial Taxation Prohibition Act introduced at the beginning of the 101st Congress and I cosponsored the recently introduced joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment to prohibit the courts from laying or increasing of taxes. Congress must put an end to such an abuse of power on the part of the courts if our democracy is going to remain faithful to the most basic concept upon which it was built.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. DECONCINI. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. DECONCINI pertaining to the introduction of S. 2497 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIXON). The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask that when we go on the trade bill, and my amendment, which I understand will be pending, that I might have unanimous consent to speak for a maximum of 10 minutes without the time being charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing no objection, that will be the order.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thank the Chair and I will wait until we go on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. WIRTH pertaining to the introduction of S. 2496 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

THE HOSTAGES IN LEBANON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,865th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut. It is hoped that the freeing of Robert Polhill on Sunday will inspire renewed strength in all of the American hostages and their families and an intensified resolve on our part never to forget the daily trials of our citizens being held hostage.

I ask unanimous consent that two articles from today's Washington Post regarding the release of Robert Polhill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 24, 1990]

EGGS, THE PAPERS, SLEEP: POLHILL SAVORS FREEDOM

(By Marc Fisher)

WIESBADEN, WEST GERMANY, April 23.—Gingerly, Robert Polhill climbed down from a Blackhawk helicopter this morning and stepped back into a life of his own.

Exhausted and malnourished after 1,182 days of captivity, the released hostage soaked in the cheers of workers at the U.S. military hospital here and cast his eyes across a field of flags and handpainted welcome banners. Suddenly he found the energy to pretend he was a backyard quarterback, faking a long pass with the football Air Force officers had given him as a present.

Polhill, the 55-year-old business professor whose Lebanese kidnappers handed him over to a Syrian military intelligence officer Sunday, arrived hungry—for food, information and rest. He ate a traditional American breakfast (half a grapefruit, scrambled eggs, bacon, muffins, milk and coffee), spoke to his mother by telephone, read several newspapers and then spent much of the day sleeping.

Two hours of physical tests found Polhill to be poorly nourished and mildly dehydrated, but otherwise in apparent good health. More extensive tests were scheduled for tonight and Tuesday.

The U.S. State Department's Hostage Reception Team also plans to begin its work Tuesday, debriefing Polhill on his captors, conditions of confinement, and fellow hostages, Beirut University College instructors Alann Steen and Jesse Turner. The three Americans were taken hostage on Jan. 24, 1987, when pro-Iranian members of the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, posing as campus police, abducted the teachers.

If Polhill is carrying the "verbal message" for President Bush that his captors last week said they were sending with him, he had not yet delivered it, U.S. officials here said. They could not confirm persistent reports in Iran and Syria that a second hostage is to be released this week.

The officials said they have no reason to believe that Polhill's kidnappers have received any payment from any government in exchange for the release. "There was absolutely nothing given by the U.S. government and we are not aware of them receiving anything else," an official said.

Polhill and American officials said they did not know why the kidnappers chose to release him rather than one of the other hostages. Polhill told crew members on the Air Force C-141 transport plane that ferried him from Damascus to Rhein-Main Air Base in Frankfurt that he learned that he was to be released only 10 minutes before he was delivered to the Syrians at a west Beirut hotel. He and the other two Americans had known for two days that one of them was to be freed.

On the 5½-hour flight to West Germany, Polhill spent most of his time speaking privately with his Lebanese-born wife Ferial. But Polhill, who did not sleep on the plane, also spoke briefly to the pilots and crew, drinking coffee and smoking cigarettes as he told them of his years of darkness and deprivation.

"As the sun came up over the horizon, he told us how glad he was," said pilot Capt. Andy Jillions. "He hadn't seen the sun for 39 months." For much of his time in captivity, Polhill was kept in chains in a windowless room.

The flight crew gave Polhill an autographed football and their squadron cap, as well as some newspapers. Gaunt, pale and wobbly, Polhill smiled for the cameras, flashed a V-sign and blew the crowd a kiss as he emerged from the transport plane to transfer to the helicopter that made the short hop to the hospital.

There, at the largest U.S. medical complex in Europe, Polhill and his wife were given a private suite in Freedom Hall, the wing where 113 American hostages have been eased back into society since 1981. Photographs of some of the 52 Americans held in Iran for 444 days line the halls.

Watching television pictures of Polhill, his relatives said that he looks thin and, as his mother, Ruth Polhill, said, "very frail, not at all like I remember him." Polhill, who has suffered from diabetes for 25 years, continued to receive insulin injections during his confinement.

In a brief interview with Syrian television in the initial moments of his release, Polhill—a former accountant who moved to Lebanon in 1983 after falling in love with the country, the college and Ferial—spoke in a hoarse, low voice, barely above a whisper. Air Force officers said he also spoke softly on the way to Germany.

"Remember, this is a man who probably hasn't done much talking for three years," said an American official involved in handling the release. "It may take him a little while." Polhill and the other hostages apparently were not permitted to speak in their full voices, officials said.

Despite their isolation, Polhill and the other Americans stayed alert by maintaining a regular schedule of lectures to one another on all manner of topics. Polhill would discourse on jazz, according to his son Brian. Polhill's two sons from his first marriage, which ended in divorce, are expected to arrive here Tuesday.

Psychiatrists and counselors at Wiesbaden who have treated other freed hostages say that they often seem passive and depressed, both because of the sudden rush of activity around them and the realization that they have missed out on several years of the lives of their loved ones.

When he is ready, Polhill will be able to look through a time capsule of news events that occurred during his isolation. He also has access to a full complement of medical, counseling or religious advisers. The Polhills may stay at Wiesbaden as long as they wish. Most returning hostages have stayed for two to four days before heading back to the United States.

Reporters peppered U.S. officials with questions about everything from Polhill's shaving protocol ("We don't have anything on that") to his requests ("He asked for a New York Times and a Big Mac").

After all these months, what, inquiring minds wanted to know, does Polhill crave? "The one thing we heard was a hot fudge sundae," said Air Force Col. Donald Kirchoffner. "But I can't confirm that."

Four hours later, the Air Force press center here had only one new fact about Polhill to offer: The sergeant manning the office proudly told all comers, "I can now confirm the ice cream sundae."

IRANIANS, SHIITE PREDICT ANOTHER RELEASE SOON

(By Caryle Murphy)

DAMASCUS, SYRIA, April 23.—Iran's foreign minister and news media and a senior Shiite Moslem cleric in Lebanon suggested today that a second Western hostage will be released soon, but they reiterated that the freeing Sunday of an American hostage should be met with a similar "goodwill" response from the United States.

Robert Polhill, 55, was freed by his Iranian-backed Shiite kidnappers after 39 months in captivity—the first American hostage released in more than three years. He was set free after pressure was exerted on his captors by Syria and Iran, which have indicated a desire to resolve the hostage crisis.

It is not yet clear whether Iran, which has the most influence with the Shiite captors, is merely testing Washington's readiness to start a process of conciliation or has decided to release all of the remaining 16 Western hostages, including seven Americans, even if the United States does not immediately reciprocate with friendly actions.

However, Arab diplomats and Syrians familiar with the complex politics of the situation said that a goodwill signal from the United States would facilitate future releases.

It would also help, they said, to diminish the political influence of some officials in Iran and factions among its Lebanese allies who are opposed to freeing of hostages and who could slow, and perhaps sabotage, future releases.

One Syrian source spoke of "a huge battle" raging among those kidnappers loyal to Iranian President Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani and those allied with his main political rival, Ali Akbar Mohtashemi, who is opposed to releasing hostages without concessions from the West.

"We are all waiting for the United States to do something," said one Syrian familiar with the issue. "It's a two-way street."

Syria, which played a key role in securing Polhill's release, has urged "all parties" involved in Lebanon to cooperate so that the hostage crisis can end, but it has not officially requested Washington to respond to Polhill's release, according to one well-informed source.

Indications of possible future releases came today from Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati and Hussein Musawi, leader of one of the groups comprising the Iranian-sponsored Hezbollah in Lebanon. Hezbollah groups hold most of the Western hostages.

Velayati, told Cable News Network in New York, "I think it is possible according to the latest information we have from Lebanon, maybe after a few days another hostage will be released." Now, he said, Iran is "looking for positive steps . . . from the other side."

Musawi, in a radio interview in Lebanon, said, "The possibility of another release is in the cards, but I don't know when, how or for what." But he added that Polhill's release "has to have a reciprocation. It is not feasible that all releases would be made as goodwill gestures."

Musawi is said to have influence over the Hezbollah-affiliated Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, which released Polhill and still holds two of his colleagues. Musawi had predicted Friday, at a time when Polhill's release was uncertain, that he would be set free.

In Tehran, there were other suggestions that more hostages could be released. The Tehran Times said: "To contribute to the establishment of a general atmosphere of trust, the Lebanese groups should release another American hostage. By doing so, they once more prove their goodwill and preparedness for the settlement of the issue."

As long as Israel holds Arab prisoners, the paper said, "the Lebanese groups will certainly find it hard to comply with this request and their position is quite understandable."

"But perhaps the release of one hostage alone will not be enough to establish the kind of overwhelming trust needed to bring the whole hostage crisis to an end," it said.

Tehran's state-run radio said that "with the release of this hostage, grounds for the release of the other hostages may be laid, depending on whether Western governments use their influence to gain freedom of other hostages in Lebanon and occupied Palestine."

Diplomats here and Syrians well-versed in the hostage situation suggest that Washington could show its goodwill by helping secure the release of about 400 Palestinian and Lebanese prisoners held by Israel.

When Islamic Jihad released Polhill, it repeated that long-standing demand, apparently in the belief—shared by most Arabs—that Washington can influence Israel to release the prisoners.

Hezbollah groups in Lebanon also have demanded the release of one of their clerics, Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid. He was abducted in Lebanon by Israeli commandos last August in an attempt to secure the release of three Israeli soldiers held by Shiites.

Washington Post correspondent Glenn Frankel reported form Jerusalem:

There was no sign Israel played a role in the release of Polhill. Israeli officials have indicated they are prepared to exchange Obeid and the 325 Lebanese Shiite prisoners Israel holds in southern Lebanon for the three Israeli soldiers and the remaining American hostages.

But Islamic Jihad has demanded the release of the several thousand Palestinians held for alleged security offenses in the occupied territories as part of any prisoner exchange.

SPARK MATSUNAGA

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in paying tribute to SPARK MATSUNAGA. We have lost a public servant whose patriotism, hard work, and unbending pride in the principles of democracy have made our country a better place.

In many ways, SPARK MATSUNAGA'S life represented the best of America. He was born to a poor immigrant family and worked his way through college and law school. Rather than seek fortunes, he dedicated himself to a lifetime of service to our Nation—first as a member of history's most highly decorated military unit, and later as a Member of Congress.

SPARK MATSUNAGA stood for peace and humanitarianism. He stood against the bigots and the bullies who tried to define people by their race or religion. In the Senate, he set the standard for service to constituents. He was a strong voice and advocate for all Hawaiians.

As a member of the Finance Committee, I watched his quiet and consistent fight for equity. But what I will always remember most is the way SPARKY helped the Senate, and the United States, to recognize that a nation as great as ours must try to make amends for our mistakes. SPARKY led the Senate's long overdue effort to pay reparations to Japanese Americans who were interned during World War II. SPARKY led the effort—not just because he had suffered from intolerance—but because he knew that it was the right thing to do. He helped us understand one of the dark pages of our history. He helped us live up to the promise of America.

SPARK MATSUNAGA knew war. But more important, he valued peace. He worked for over 25 years to establish the U.S. Institute for Peace. In 1984, the Institute was founded to encourage research in the resolution of conflicts. This Institute will stand as a lasting memorial to Senator MATSUNAGA.

SPARK MATSUNAGA has left an indelible mark on the Senate, and on our Nation. He will be greatly missed.

PUERTO RICO—A FAIR REFERENDUM

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, legislation to permit the voters in Puerto Rico to determine in a referendum whether Puerto Rico should be a Commonwealth, a State, or an independent nation has been reported by the Energy and Natural Resources Committee and is now under consideration by the Finance and Agriculture Committees.

Recently, the Governor of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Rafael Hernandez Colón, gave an excellent address at Harvard University on the three essential conditions that any Federal referendum legislation must meet. As outlined by the Governor, these conditions are, first, that the three options must be clearly defined, so that Puerto Rico's voters are fully informed of the details of each option. Second, Congress must commit itself to implement the results of the referendum, so that the electoral process is not under taken in vain. And third, the three options must be fairly balanced, so that the results of the referendum will reflect the voters' true preference, not the short-term distortions of artificial and arbitrary incentives in the referendum legislation.

The Governor, who fully supports passage of fair referendum legislation, has thoughtfully articulated his concerns about the current bill. His views deserve careful consideration by all of our colleagues, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of his speech may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF THE GOVERNOR OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PUERTO RICO, HON. RAFAEL HERNÁNDEZ COLÓN, ON THE OCCASION OF HIS VISIT TO HARVARD UNIVERSITY, APRIL 19, 1990

I come before you as the Governor of the people of Puerto Rico with a mandate to seek self-determination from Congress, in order to choose our political future.

I also come before you carrying out an electoral mandate to demand on behalf of Puerto Rico broader self-government, respect for the sovereignty and political dignity of the Commonwealth relationship and full participation for citizens in Puerto Rico in all Federal social programs that provide a safety net for U.S. citizens in need.

I speak to you as the Governor of a people who speak Spanish as their native tongue, have a distinct culture and identity which they intend to preserve, and are unwilling to assimilate themselves under any circumstance.

In order for the people of Puerto Rico meaningfully to exercise their right to self-determination, three essential conditions have to be met.

First of all, the three options have to be clearly and unambiguously defined in the referendum now before the Congress. Congress has to express itself as to what each formula entails, and what transition schemes and measures are realistic and acceptable. The people need to know what they are voting for, in order to make an intelligent choice. They need to know what to reasonably expect from each status option in terms of taxes, fiscal arrangements, trade, citizenship, language, social programs, olympic representation, defense, transitional measures, and a wealth of related issues. For too long, myths and misconceptions have dominated the debate on political status in Puerto Rico, and it is about time that the people are told the truth, clearly and without reservations.

The second requirement for meaningful self-determination is a commitment from Congress that the results of the referendum will be implemented at the Federal level. We cannot repeat the sad episode of the 1967 referendum, where the vote was overwhelmingly in favor of enhancing Commonwealth status—more than 60 percent—yet, Congress did not act. Thus the 1967 referendum was inconsequential. It amounted to a beauty contest between the three options.

We cannot accept a plebiscite in which there is a possibility that the people of Puerto Rico vote in vain.

Third, if there is to be meaningful self-determination, the political status options must be of equal dignity and fairly balanced. If the options are unbalanced, if the dice are loaded, the choice will rest in the Congress, not with the people.

This is precisely the problem that is now faced in the U.S. Senate. The present version of S-712 is terribly, dangerously and unacceptably unbalanced.

First of all, the Senate bill is equivocal as to the political dignity of the Commonwealth relationship. In order to rectify that situation what is historically correct must be made clear: That the Commonwealth relationship stems from the concerted will of the people of Puerto Rico and the people of the United States acting through their elected representatives in a compact, that the government empowered by the Puerto Rican people is sovereign over matters in the Puerto Rican Constitution, and the U.S. Government is sovereign over matters in the Federal Constitution, and that this relationship is permanent and cannot be changed except by the mutual consent of the people of Puerto Rico and the Congress of the United States.

Any claim to whimsical power over the people of Puerto Rico on the part of the Congress is contrary to the compact and to the dignity of the relationship. The language of the bill must bear this in mind, because nothing in the bill must detract from the full dignity of the Commonwealth as an alternative to statehood or independence.

Secondly, the Puerto Rican people seek empowerment through this exercise in self-determination. The Senate bill is unbalanced because the demand for empowerment under Commonwealth for the Puerto Rican people was not met. Yet the bill provides full representation in the House and Senate plus a vote for the President and Vice-President under statehood, and the full powers of the Republic under independence.

Empowerment under Commonwealth—which does not contemplate voting participation at the Federal level—requires a distribution of powers between the Commonwealth and the Federal Goverment, different from that provided in the U.S. Constitution between the Federal Government and the States.

Empowerment under Commonwealth requires the institutionalization of a legal process so that the political will of the people of Puerto Rico through their elected representatives in the Commonwealth Government can express itself in an operative way consistent with vital Federal needs as to the Federal laws that may govern their lives.

The Senate bill provides for a fast tracking mechanism to bring resolutions of the Puerto Rican Legislature on the applicability of Federal laws before both Houses of Congress for a vote. This mechanism must be strengthened by criteria limiting congressional choice to matters vital to the United States.

Empowerment further requires immediately transferring powers now vested in the Federal Government to the Commonwealth Government so as to make this government more effective and responsive to the needs and aspirations of the Puerto Rican people.

The Senate bill provides additional powers in the following areas: Authority to impose tariff duties on foreign origin products and to seek preferential treatment for our exports under generalized systems of preferences programs, the ability to consolidate Federal programs to increase the effectiveness in the use of Federal funds, and the establishment of a mechanism to transfer Federal properties to the Commonwealth Government.

Other areas need to be addressed in addition to those recommended in the energy committee bill strengthening the international role of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico; establishing Puerto Rico as an open port for air carriers, in order for us to promote our economic development; granting Puerto Rico jurisdiction over its natural resources and historical patrimony; extending Puerto Rico authority to regulate maritime shipping, in order to assure the lowest possible rates; participating in the selection of Federal appointees to serve in Puerto Rico.

Thirdly, the Senate bill is unbalanced because it provides for parity in all Federal social programs for Puerto Rico upon admission into the Union, as a state. However, it denies that parity to the same U.S. citizens under the Commonwealth option.

The political effects of this are easy to understand. These programs target more than half of the Puerto Rican electorate. They offer tangible economic benefits to the following groups.

Nutrition assistance benefits 440,000 households. The monthly benefits for a family of four would climb from $199 to $331.

About 75,000 aged and 115,000 disabled persons would start receiving SSI, with average benefits of $260 to $430 a month, respectively.

Expanded medicaid health benefits would reach 2.1 million persons, at a cost of $900 million in additional Federal spending.

This offer by the Energy and Natural Resources Committee has already had an impact on the Puerto Rican electorate. For the first time in history, statehood has come out ahead in the polls in Puerto Rico, having gained 15 points since the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee's bill was reported out.

Asking these needy U.S. citizens to vote for statehood in order to have the full Federal safety net is grossly unfair. It constitutes in effect the denial of the protection of the equal protection clause of the U.S. Constitution. We cannot hold a meaningful referendum unless this inequity is redressed, and the needy U.S. citizens residing in the Commonwealth receive the same participation in Federal social programs.

A balanced bill must provide for equal protection for Puerto Rican U.S. citizens in all the Federal social programs.

Redressing these flaws of the Senate bill as to the dignity or Commonwealth, the scope of autonomy and equal protection in the social programs will set us upon a level playing field with balanced options. It will allow the Commonwealth option the political dimension it merits and to the people of Puerto Rico true self determination.

IRVING HARRIS—EXCELLENCE IN EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, one of America's most respected business leaders, Irving Harris, is also well known to many of us for his outstanding work on behalf of disadvantaged children in Chicago and across this Nation. As the president of Standard Shares and chairman of the executive committee of the Pittway Corp., he has had the foresight to recognize that the work force of the future is highly dependent on educating children today. For a generation, his vision and commitment have led to innovative partnerships between the public and private sectors that have had a dramatic impact on the Nation's policy toward children, especially the very young.

In 1966, as the war on poverty began, he established the Erikson Institute in Chicago. Today it is one of the top educational institutions in the Nation for training in early childhood development and infant studies.

In 1982, he established the Ounce of Prevention Fund, a public-private partnership for early childhood intervention programs. One of its greatest successes, the Beethoven project in Chicago, has become a national model for such programs. Based in the Robert Taylor Homes public housing development, the Beethoven project provides early, continuous and comprehensive services to poor children through age 5 and their families. This promising project provides the inspiration for the Federal Comprehensive Child Development Centers Act, adopted in 1988, which funds similar programs in a dozen sites across the country.

America owes an enormous debt to Irving Harris for his brilliant leadership on issues affecting children. Last December, he delivered an impressive address to the City Club of Cleveland on the subject of early education. His excellent remarks demonstrate his extraordinary vision and commitment on this issue. I believe that they will be of interest to all of us in the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EDUCATION—DOES IT MAKE ANY DIFFERENCE WHEN YOU START?

(Address to the Forum of the City Club of Cleveland delivered by Irving B. Harris, Chairman, The Ounce of Prevention Fund, December 15, 1989)

There is a widespread perception that public school education in our big cities has failed. Businessmen have come to recognize, particularly in the last eight years and with the leadership of the Committee for Economic Development, that this failure of public education threatens the very survival of American business against increasing worldwide competition. In the past two years, Fortune magazine has sponsored two Education Summits, bringing together the best thinkers they could find to discuss the problem and suggest possible solutions.

Governors of our various states have also become very interested because when they try to induce companies to locate new plants in their states, they hear from the executives of those companies—whether they are Japanese or American—that business is only secondarily interested in low taxes. Mainly, they are interested in the quality of available personnel. If they are going to build a plant that will last 40 years, they want to know where the labor supply is coming from and whether well-educated human resources will be there when they need them.

Some governors, like former Governor Thomas H. Kean of New Jersey and Governor Bill Clinton of Arkansas, see the education problem as threatening the very survival of our nation if we are to remain a broad based democracy. Governor Kean quotes Thomas Jefferson, "If a nation expects to be ignorant and free in a state of civilization, it expects what never was, and never will be." Governor Clinton recently pointed out that for 40 years we have waved the banner of democracy in the world and now, just as Communism is faltering all over Europe, ironically our own democracy is in great danger because of the imminent breakdown in our society. He observes a growing underclass, poorly educated with an increasing gap between high-income and low-income workers.

Owen B. Bulter, retired chairman of Procter & Gamble, asks whether we are aware that we are about to pass on to our children living conditions such as exist in Mexico City or Manila, where in order to be safe you have to erect high walls around your home and top them off with broken glass or barbed wire. Then, with the help of armed guards, you can almost feel safe. This may seem a little dramatic, but whether you are concerned about the quality of job applicants, about democratic government or about personal safety, all of us should be interested in the question of American education.

Let me quote a few statistics. George Bernard Shaw said, "The mark of a truly educated man is to be moved deeply by statistics." Last June, our high schools graduated 700,000 students who could not read their diplomas. Seven hundred thousand more dropped out before high school graduation, for a total of 1.4 million who are functionally illiterate. Since 18 years ago only 3.7 million children were born in the United States, this means 37 percent of these 18-year-olds, more than one-third of our nation's youth, are functionally illiterate. And with technology advancing all over the world, an employer now expects the average new employee who starts and stays with the company to experience five job changes over the next 40 years. Whenever the technology changes, each employee will have to learn a new job. This will require costly retraining. But even to start such retraining, the employee will have to have an ability to read and comprehend so that the training can take place. No longer is a strong back and a willing heart sufficient to stay employed in a company which has to compete against the technology of Germany, Japan, or Korea.

Well, how can we fix our poor educational outcomes? How about the simple, quick fixes? Let's require high school students to work harder. Don't allow students to have driver's licenses if they drop out of high school. Or, follow the state of Wisconsin's lead and withhold welfare payments from any parent whose child has more than two unexcused absences during a semester. Or, we can simply spend more money on education.

As we think about it, we realize that we already have a huge and costly educational system in this country which gets into gear when a child enters kindergarten. In 1986, we spent $264 billion on education for students age six up through graduate school. This year we'll spend $350 billion. That's an increase of $86 billion in just three years. Does anyone think that those $86 billion have improved education? No one that I know of! Incidentally, the federal programs for Head Start for children four years old, which were funded at $1.2 billion in 1986 are still funded at $1.2 billion in 1989. Head Start was launched 23 years ago by President Lyndon Johnson. In 1989, that $1.2 billion is sufficient to pay for only 18% of our nation's eligible four-year-olds.

As a nation, we fail to do enough for our children, early enough, to make a lasting difference in their later lives. Too little too late seems to be the golden rule of American education.

If the problem were that Americans were too short and you wanted to increase the height of our students, I doubt that anyone would seriously think that we should spend a lot of money to improve the eating habits of 16-year-olds in order to try to improve height. Common sense tells you that most of a child's growth has occurred before the age of 16. As a matter of fact, it's a little awesome to realize that all of us had attained one-half of our mature height by the time we were two and a half years old. That's right. If you're six feet tall now, you were already three feet tall when you were two and a half.

Professor Benjamin Bloom of the University of Chicago, an outstanding student of human development, points out that human growth occurs at a decelerating rate. He says if you really want to affect an adult's height, the most effective time to improve his nutrition and health is from the time of conception until he is two and a half. That's when the growth is greatest.

Professor Bloom also pointed out that human intelligence, our capacity to learn, grows at a decelerating rate. His research showed that by the age of four, more than one-half of our intelligence is in place. If you spend any time playing with young children, ages three or two or one, or even three months of age, you can tell from your own observation just how smart those kids are and how much they have learned in the few months that they have been alive.

T. Berry Brazelton, a respected pediatrician at Harvard, says he can tell by examining a nine-month-old infant whether that infant is likely to make it in school or fail in school, simply by observing how that child approaches very simple tasks, like playing with blocks. Learning patterns develop very, very early and while they can be changed by play therapy, it is not likely that patterns once learned will change much unless therapy occurs.

Recent brain research tells us that three months before we are born we already have in the back of our heads, 10 billion neurons. That's as many as we ever get. And over the next 21 months those neurons are interconnected with synopses so that by the time we are 18 months old, our central nervous system is very well developed. How it has developed makes a big difference in how well we learn for the rest of our lives. Again to quote Professor Bloom from his book Stability and Change in Human Characteristics, written 25 years ago, "General intelligence appears to develop as much from conception to age four as it does during the 14 years from age 4 to age 18." He also said, "Thus, general intelligence or general academic achievement must be manifestations of fundamental properties of the central nervous system as well as of an underlying pattern of basic habits, attitudes, and ways of relating to the world." Motivation is another word to describe "basic habits, attitudes, and ways of relating to the world." Motivation is an enormously important part of learning—and it is learned in infancy.

Getting back to those neurons, they are created at the average rate of 40,000 every minute, 60 minutes an hour, 24 hours a day, for the first 180 days after conception. It's shocking but true to realize that frequently in the very first few weeks of pregnancy, even before a woman knows that she is pregnant, she may have unwittingly damaged the central nervous system of her fetus by smoking cigarettes, drinking alcohol, or taking drugs.

Five years ago I picked up the New York Times one day and read an account of an initiative taken by the Superintendent of Schools in Minneapolis, Richard Green, who later went on to become Chancellor of the New York system and then died suddenly a year ago. In order to improve his school system, he did something radical. He decided he would not allow anyone to go into 10th grade unless that student had satisfactorily completed all his 9th grade work. He wanted to be sure that 10th grade classes would not be slowed down by students who were not capable of learning at the 10th grade level. He set up a matriculation test at the end of ninth grade and did the same thing for seventh grade, fifth grade, second grade, and kindergarten. And, much to everyone's surprise, 10% of the kindergarten class flunked—were considered "not ready" for first grade. The New York Times, as well as the parents, were shocked.

When I talked to a friend of mine who taught kindergarten in the Chicago Public School system, she said she wasn't surprised by that. As a matter of fact, in Chicago she thought the percentage of kids "not ready" for first grade would have been over 20%. She went on to say that she was an experienced teacher and could handle a class in which one child was "not ready." But she hastened to add, if she had two or three children who were not ready, she would have to shortchange the whole class. By "not ready" she meant a child who had a low span of attention or was hyperactive or had a hearing problem or a vision problem or was prone to violence, or had a learning disability. Just to satisfy myself, I spoke individually to five other teachers. Each used the same terms, said she was well-trained and could handle one child who was "not ready" without shortchanging the whole class. But then each quickly added that if she had two or three children in the class who were "not ready," there was no way she could avoid shortchanging the whole class. After further questioning, all of the five inner-city teachers told me they realized they were shortchanging the class every day, every week, and every year.

No wonder then, that when the Chicago schools were required by our legislature two years ago to test and compare the scores of graduating high school students to national norms, they found that more than half of Chicago's 58 high schools which were tested ended up in the lowest one percentile of the American College Testing Program universe. A.C.T. annually profiles students in 5,400 schools. One percent of 5,400 is 54. Thirty-five of Chicago's 58 schools which took the test were in the bottom 54. "Shortchanging," as a figure of speech, was not an exaggeration. It was true. (Incidentally, I do not believe Cleveland, Detroit, New York, or most of our big cities are in the A.C.T. sample.)

So, we spend $350 billion a year trying to educate children from the age of six up through university, while for the children at high risk of failure, we're missing the most important time for improving learning capacity, namely from the minute of conception until those children are four years of age.

Well, what about Head Start. Head Start is frequently a very good program, depending, of course, on how well trained the teachers are. Head Start works for many three and four year old children, although it seems to be too late for others. And that shouldn't surprise us. An even more comprehensive preschool program was set up in New Haven under the direction of Dr. Sally Provence at Yale some 20 years ago. She worked with 17 very poor children from the time the children left the hospital after birth to 30 months of age. She and a skilled team at Yale worked intensively with the children and with the parents and provided a great deal of family support.

Six of the fathers participated; 11 did not. The outcomes were excellent. All but one of the children did well in school. That one had a learning disability. In the follow-up study, not one of the children had been in trouble with the law or presented a behavior problem in school or at home. In addition, after 10 years, only two of the participating families were still on welfare, while over half of the control families were still not self-supporting.

The difference in outcomes for the boys in the experimental group compared to a control group was quite significant: their attendance in school was much better, as was their cooperation with their parents and teachers.

Another successful experiment with very early childhood programs was the federally funded Family Development Research Program which operated between 1969 and 1975 in Syracuse. It offered comprehensive services to 80 low-income families with children between 6 and 60 months of age. The major goal was, "The support of child and familial behaviors that sustained growth and development after intervention ceases." A population of expectant mothers and mothers of newborns was carefully selected and included only families with first, second, or third children. The families in both the research group and control group met the following definition of disadvantage:

1. Family income of $5,000 or less.
2. Mother with less than a high school education.
3. Mother having no work history, or unskilled or semi-skilled work history.
4. Father, if living at home, with high school education or less. (Eighty-five percent of mothers were single parent heads of houshold.)

In addition, their children must have had a normal birth defined as no cesarean sections, no severe toxemia, no difficult delivery, no birth complications, and birthweight of five pounds or more. By age five, children in the experimental program—boys and girls—showed statistically meaningful gains in their cognitive functioning compared to the 80 control children. Neither social nor emotional gains were measured because they were too hard to gauge. After age five, these 80 program children, all of whom were ready for kindergarten, were scattered among numerous public schools close to where they lived and not concentrated in any particular school.

From the longitudinal study undertaken when the Syracuse children were 15 years old, it was apparent to the program director that particularly for program boys, the peer pressure from their classmates had militated against their continuing to do well in school cognitively. The program girls retained their superior records, while the program boys did not.

At age 15 the principal measurable difference for the program boys was in their functioning in society. Out of the 65 experimental program children who could be found 10 years later, only 4 had been placed under supervision of the probation department, contrasted with 12 of the 54 control children who could be located, 6% versus 22%. This translated to an estimated cost to society for court processing, probation services, supervision and detention of $186 per child in the program group compared to an estimated $1,985 per child in the control group, more than 10 times as much.

Not only did the incidence of juvenile delinquency in the control group far exceed that of the program group, but so did the severity of their offenses. The four program children were mainly described as "ungovernable" while the offenses charged to the control group were more serious: burglary; assault, second offense; robbery, second offense; attempted assault, second offense; sexual abuse; criminal mischief; violation of probation; petty larceny. In other words, the difference was not only a tenfold higher cost in dollars to the probation department, but a clear warning of much heavier costs to come from later prison sentences.

One extremely good Head Start type program was carried out in Ypsilanti, Michigan. In that program a careful study of the experimental group who had had two years of a good preschool program coupled with home visiting were compared with a control group who had no preschool and no home visiting. Of the control group, 49% graduated from high school, while 67% of the experimental group finished high school. That's quite a difference, 18%. But when you think about it, it's still discomforting that 33% of the experimental group still did not finish high school and 31% of the experimental group, at age 19, were judged to be functionally incompetent. Again, home environment, shortchanging by the public school system, and probably peer pressure accounted for the failure of 33% of the experimental group.

Programs that attempt to make radical improvements in children's health, education and overall well-being must start very early, as early as the prenatal period. But we must be realists: these programs are difficult and costly to implement. They must be done but done right. They will require many, many trained people. At the present time, there is an enormous shortage of well-trained public health nurses, social workers and early childhood development specialists. Part of this shortage results from low salary scales because we do not value early education. We pay teachers in child care and preschool much less than we pay janitors.

We must train more teachers to work with infants and young children. As anyone knows who is an experienced teacher, teaching a two-year-old or a three-year-old is quite different from teaching an eight-year-old. Stated differently, a three-year-old is not just a short eight-year-old.

We should also be trying much harder to reduce radically the number of unintended births to poorly educated adolescents if we are to get a handle on the public school education problem in this country.

It's fair to assume that at least 880,000 babies were born this year at very high risk of educational failure. This includes 480,000 births to teenagers and probably an additional 400,000 babies born to women who have no plans and little capability to nurture and appropriately stimulate their children.

Approximately 3.8 million mothers will give birth to babies in 1989. Almost 3 million will be births where the child is intended and/or wanted—and where the mothers can and will nurture their babies and get them ready for school by age six. But the 880,000 babies born at high risk have little prospect of optimal development. The chances of these children becoming successful participants in our 21st century society is less than 50/50. And our society simply has no capacity to cope with this flood of unnurtured infants.

It's been traditional in America that it is the parents' responsibility to bring up their child so that the child is ready for school at age six. That has been regarded as a civic responsibility. The implicit contract that is made between the school and the parent is that the child is ready for school and wants to learn.

Unfortunately, from the standpoint of the school system, many parents frankly have little capacity to prepare their children for school. Many of these parents are living in poverty, but there are many other parents who are living in poverty who do an excellent job of preparing their children for school. Poverty is obviously a handicap and a terribly stressful condition, but it is by no means the sole problem or even always a problem. Of course, inadequate nurturing can also characterize some high-income families. Our society doesn't begin to know how to help children whose parents do an inadequate job of nurturing and stimulating the child in those critical first days and months and years of life, before the children get to school.

Every state has an agency which tries to cope with the most obviously severe cases of child abuse and neglect. None of them do it well. There is no way that we know of to satisfactorily substitute the state's care for the nurturing and love and special interest a parent or close relative brings to the child. In a society where almost all parents do a good job of raising their children, but an occasional child does come into the society who needs a lot of help, we're well enough organized to supply that help and cope with the rare problem child. But the fact is that we're overwhelmed today and don't begin to have the human resources or facilities, nor does any society have the facilities to handle all of the problem children that are currently being born in the United States. If you look critically at the failure in our educational system, you must conclude that the child's failure and the school's failure are largely determined before the child enters the educational system at age six.

Of course, it's going to help some if we have universal Head Start and we should have it immediately. In a nation which can spend $350 billion on education from the age of six up, it's absurd to say that we can't find the $8 billion to put into universal Head Start. We did find the $100 billion for bailing out the savings and loan industry. Our nation would survive without this, but it will not survive without fixing our educational system.

My argument is simple. Until we recognize where the problem is—long before age six, we will continue to see schools fail. The problem is in school readiness—the quality of children entering the system. To be ready for school, the children have to be healthy with appropriate language development, ready for the social experience of school, cooperative with other children, respectful of the teacher, and they must understand the importance of doing well in school.

When you are in manufacturing and are responsible for quality control, it's suicide to wait until the product is manufactured and shipped and in the customer's hands to find out that you have a problem of poor quality. Of course, you have to be sure that everything that you have done to process the parts and raw material is of high quality. But, over and above that, it's essential that you carefully inspect the purchased components at the time they come into your warehouse to make sure that the components you are putting into your product are 100% free of defect.

I realize children are not inanimate components, but the analogy does apply. If a child appears in school at age six, apathetic, unable to learn to read with the rest of the class, and/or disruptive, or prone to violence, or suffering from a severe learning disability, the teacher cannot be expected to perform miracles.

If the class has several problem children then, in addition to the classroom teacher, these classes need child development specialists to work with these problem children. Otherwise they will slow down the whole class and learn little themselves.

We should also try to figure out a way to guarantee the health and early stimulation and nurturing of every child born at high risk. We've been trying to do that in the Beethoven Project in the Robert Taylor Homes in Chicago and so far I can only say it's a tough assignment. We are making very slow progress. Programs like Beethoven—and as a result of Senator Ted Kennedy's initiative, there are now 20 such programs across the country—must be regarded only as experimental.

America has become a great country by being practical and by solving problems. We have a lot of work ahead on our education system, but we are bound to fail unless we recognize that we must go way back to the very earliest days of life. That's when education really starts. That's when intelligence and learning ability are shaped.

Children born to teenage mothers are especially vulnerable. Teenage pregnancy continues to be an important and costly problem. In an Illinois study, done by Northwestern University for the Executive Service Corps in 1985, we learned that annually it costs the people of Illinois $853 million to pay for the 23,000 children of teenagers, and that includes only the costs until the child reaches the age of five. Incidentally, the number of births to teenagers in Illinois dropped consistently from 1980 until 1986; but in both 1987 and 1988, there was an increase. In percentage terms, there was an even greater increase in babies born to girls 14 years of age and younger.

According to a study by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, in the United States, more than 90 of every 1,000 teenage girls have babies every year. This rate is more than six times the rate of the Netherlands and up to three times the rate of other industrialized countries, including France, England, and Sweden. Greater promiscuity is not the reason for these rates. U.S. girls don't engage in sex earlier or more frequently than girls in western Europe. The main difference is our attitude toward sex. The one million pregnancies that occur to teenagers in the United States each year are due to many factors including a lack of openness about sex and restrictions on teenagers' access to information on contraception in school and to low-cost contraceptive devices themselves.

Some years ago, most people swept this issue under the rug. Today, with the rate of teen pregnancies again showing an increase, the huge costs to society are attracting more attention. The issue has shifted from backyard whispers to newspaper headlines and legislative debate. Teen pregnancy is no longer a solely private matter. First of all, it is a health problem because pregnant teens, still children themselves, are much less likely to obtain prenatal care, greatly increasing the chance that their babies will be medically endangered and born with inadequate central nervous systems and other birth anomalies. Teen pregnancies also presents a problem for our educational system. Not only do the mothers frequently drop out of school, but their children are more likely to have developmental delays. A substantial number of the public schools' problem children were born to mothers who began their childbearing unexpectedly as unwed teens, unprepared to be mothers.

There are no simple solutions. It is difficult to get high-risk pregnant women to obtain prenatal care. If you think about it, prenatal care not only requires the geographic availability of a doctor and financial or insurance coverage, it requires motivation. Doctors cannot inoculate a pregnant woman for prenatal care. Not only must she see the doctor, but she must also come in regularly and carry out the imperatives of good prenatal care. These include sound nutrition, no smoking, avoidance of alcohol, and absolutely avoidance of drugs. Drug abuse is, of course, the worst risk for the fetus. While the mother may excrete the forbidden drugs in about one day's time, the baby, growing in the sac of amniotic fluid, with just one maternal usage, will be bathed in the drugs for up to five days. With neurons being created at the rate of 2.4 million an hour, living in a drug-drenched environment for five straight days can be devastating to the development of the central nervous system and is likely to produce lifelong handicaps. Daily, we read the horror stories of cocaine babies—more than 400,000 were born this year alone.

Health and educability are intricately intertwined. Brain damage and developmental delays can create both educational and economic problems for the unborn baby. Educationally retarded youngsters are more likely to drop out of school and end up unemployed or unemployable, consigning themselves and any future children to life in poverty. Perhaps most important is the cost to our public school system. Developmentally delayed or brain damaged children present a momentous challenge. We've known for years that if a child reaches kindergarten one or two years behind his classmates, that child will probably fall three or four years behind in the next half dozen years. Until recently, however, it has not been recognized that the presence of more than one child with learning disabilities or disruptive behavior in a classroom subjects the full class to continuous disruption.

Success in school requires a teacher eager to teach, children prepared to learn, and parents who urge their children to work hard and succeed in school. When more than an occasional student is not ready for school, little learning takes place. When more than 5% of the children are not ready for school, the tipping point is probably reached causing the whole school culture to change. Public education by definition means we do not have the luxury of closing the school door to those unprepared youngsters whose unpreparedness is contagious. In Chicago, nearly 20% of our best prepared school children attend special magnet schools or private schools leaving the inner-city public schools with somewhere between 10% and 30% of their students "not ready" for school. Public schools have 80% of the population and 100% of the problem kids.

To start to prepare these children for school long before kindergarten is a daunting task. It will require a much more successful effort on the part of parents and society than we have yet been able to mount. This certainly will entail a plan to improve the health of the pregnant woman and the health of children from conception until age six. We simply have to recognize and act on our understanding of the lifelong links between health and educability of the child.

Let me conclude with a quotation from Gilbert W. Kliman and Albert Rosenfeld's book entitled Responsible Parenthood. In the preface they wrote, "Thus the book became emphatically addressed not only to parents and would-be parents, but also to nonparents. It makes a real difference to you whether my child turns out to be, say, a dedicated teacher or a narcotics peddler. If my child is retarded or delinquent, you—without having any vote in the matter—help foot the bill or could be one of his or her victims. All children are everyone's children, or should be; and all adults, in addition to being the specific rearers of their own biological offspring (of those they choose to adopt), are in a real sense surrogate parents for all children."

The Ounce of Prevention Fund, established in 1982, is a public-private partnership which promotes the well-being of children and adolescents by working with families and communities to develop positive opportunities and the capacity to enjoy them. In recognition of the critical importance of the family in determining the future for its children, The Ounce of Prevention Fund focuses on strengthening positive relationships within the family and enhancing the family's capacity to care for its members. The efforts of The Ounce of Prevention Fund are targeted specifically in communities with limited resources and include the creation of positive alternatives through systemic change. All Ounce programs are based on the conviction that it is more caring and effective to promote healthy child development than to treat problems later in life.

JAMES HOLGER—OUTSTANDING CHILEAN DIPLOMAT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, at the end of this month, Chilean diplomat James Holger leaves his position as Director of the United Nations Information Centre in Washington and begins an auspicious new period of service for his country as Chile's Deputy Permanent Representative to the United Nations.

I commend Mr. Holger for his strong commitment to the United Nations, and for his noteworthy accomplishments in his current position. Since August 1988, when United Nations Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar appointed him as Director of the Centre, Mr. Holger has provided valuable assistance to many of us in Congress on issues relating to the United Nations. Before taking that position, Mr. Holger had served as the Secretary General's Special Representative in Cyprus, where he worked tirelessly to advance the cause of peace in that troubled land.

Before joining the United Nations in 1977, Mr. Holger served as Chile's Deputy Permanent Representative to the United Nations, the position he now resumes. He also served in the Chilean delegation at the Organization of American States and in the Chilean Embassies in Washington, Moscow, Bern and Berlin.

Last month I had the honor of visiting Chile for the inauguration of President Aylwin and witnessing the return of democracy to that country. The battle against dictatorship has been won, and Chileans now have the priceless opportunity to rebuild a just, fair and democratic society. In this endeavor, Chile will need the dedication and service of all its citizens. Mr. Holger is among the ablest of true Chilean patriots and diplomats, and his experience with the United Nations will serve his country well as that nation takes its place among the democracies of the world.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE MASSACRE OF ARMENIANS IN THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, for thousands of Armenian-Americans, today is a solemn day of remembrance for their relatives who died as part of a massacre against Armenians in the Ottoman Empire back in 1915. While the Senate has not adopted an official remembrance of this occasion, I think it is important that we do not forget the significance of this day in the hearts of many Armenian-Americans. Their memories are painful, their suffering great. What happened to their grandparents and great grandparents is indisputable. They were murdered because of their ethnicity.

The United States has always stood against such violence and brutality. We, as a beacon of freedom for the rest of the world, have had a special responsibility to remind ourselves, our children, and the world of such atrocities, in the hope that they never happen again. The massacre of Armenians must never be forgotten.

So I stand with my Armenian-American friends on this day in remembrance of the suffering and tragedy that has befallen their parents, friends, and relatives, and pledge never to forget how cruel mankind can be to one another, and work to prevent such atrocities from happening in the future.

THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE: AN UNRESOLVED TRAGEDY

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, today marks the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide, in which an estimated 1.5 million Armenians in the Ottoman Empire were tragically and senselessly killed. Between 1915 and 1923, the empire's rulers pursued a deliberate campaign based upon religious, political, and cultural intolerance, to eliminate the Armenian people through deportation and death. Some have questioned whether or not to apply the term "genocide" to the terrible events of those years. I have come to the conclusion that the Ottoman Empire embarked on a policy of mass extermination, and the preponderance of historical evidence compels us to use the word "genocide."

In remembering the genocide's victims, I believe it appropriate also to call attention to the strife plaguing our Armenian friends today. As the world focuses on the situation in Lithuania, we must not forget about the past and present suffering of the Armenian people.

The Armenian people still are reeling from the December 1988 earthquake which killed and injured scores of thousands; political tensions in the Soviet Transcaucuses run high; and an economic blockade of Armenia has had a detrimental effect on earthquake recovery efforts. At the heart of the conflict in the Transcaucuses is the dispute between Armenia and Azerbaijan over the disposition of the territory of Nagorno-Karabagh. The region has been subjected to Azerbaijani control, despite the fact that the vast majority of the population is Armenian. This untenable situation has led to the continued persecution and victimization of the Armenian people.

I was in the Soviet Union in January when the undercurrent of discontent about the issue burst into full-fledged conflict. I met with Armenian refugees and was truly horrified at the accounts of the brutality and violence that they suffered. These incidents take on a deeper meaning in light of the terrible events that we commemorate today. This day serves as a reminder that we cannot remain silent. I am convinced that the Soviet Union must take steps to resolve this difficult issue if it wishes to avoid the inevitability of further escalation.

Mr. President, undoubtedly the Soviet nationalities problem will be an item for discussion at the upcoming summit meeting between Presidents Bush and Gorbachev. Clearly we must express our firm views about the Baltic States to the Soviet leadership, but I would hope that the issue of Nagorno-Karabagh will not be overshadowed. As the Vice President of the Supreme Soviet of the Armenian Republic told me in a recent letter, the issues of justice and human rights in Armenia are "no longer matters of mere principle or abstract ideals. People's lives and the survival of the Armenian people, their culture, language, and religion, depend upon the observance of human rights and constitutional guarantees of equal protection, local autonomy, and democratic decision making."

I urge the administration and my colleagues to heed these words, and I will ask unanimous consent that the full text of Vice President Kazaryan's letter be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, despite a long history of tragedy and persecution, the Armenian people possess a unique and commendable moral strength and a proud spirit. I had hoped that the Congress would have had the courage to pass Senate Joint Resolution 212 to designate April 24, 1990, as a national day of remembrance of the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide.

I note that President Bush made appropriate remarks this weekend about the Armenian people's resiliance and courage in the face of great suffering. I do regret, however, that the administration did not see fit to fulfill its earlier promise to support a genocide resolution. Had such support for Senate Joint Resolution 212 been forthcoming, I believe the chances of its consideration and passage would have increased significantly. The Senate's failure even to consider this resolution was demeaning to the victims of the genocide, and a crushing blow to all Armenians and to those who are committed to the pursuit of human rights.

Today, I join with those who choose to keep the memory of the Armenian genocide alive. In so doing, we come a step closer to ensuring that such a tragedy never again will confront the Armenian people.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter to which I referred to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VICE PRESIDENT OF THE SUPREME SOVIET, ARMENIAN S.S.R.,
Yerevan, April 7, 1990.

Hon. CLAIBORNE PELL,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR PELL: I was honored to meet with you on April 5th to discuss some of the important issues facing Armenia, the democratic movement in the Soviet Union, and the positive role the United States could play in shaping a brighter future for all of our peoples.

While our immediate situation is grave, I would like to look beyond the current crisis to long-term, mutually beneficial cooperation between our countries through private investment, joint ventures, aid for economic development, and educational and scientific exchanges. Though my country is temporarily devastated and there are over 500,000 earthquake homeless and 250,000 refugees from Azerbaijan, I hope one day that we will be a thriving democracy.

These economic and refugee problems are inseparable from the political suppression in the region. In Azerbaijan, Armenians have been persecuted for seven decades and now over 50% of the 475,000 Armenians who lived in Azerbaijan have been driven from their homes in Baku and their native lands in and around Karabagh. Refugees from the earthquake zone and from Azerbaijan have filled the streets and buildings of my country. The continuing refusal of Moscow and Azerbaijan to respect the democratic will of the Armenian people of Karabagh, expressed through 70 years of peaceful protest, constitutionally guaranteed referenda, and popular petitions, has brought needless repression, bloodshed and economic devastation to the region. Just recently, I visited the villages of Kamo and Azat on the northern border of Karabagh. As the Soviet troops looked on, the Armenians of those villages were deported in response to Azeri death threats.

Over the past two years, the Azeri blockade of Armenia has strangled our economy, obstructed earthquake reconstruction, and prevented the arrival of assistance from the United States and other nations abroad. For whatever reason, Moscow has been unwilling or unable to end the blockade. This past winter we suffered severe shortages of fuel, food and raw materials. We urgently need to establish direct transportation and communication abroad and to explore environmentally sound sources of hydroelectric, geothermal and solar energy. We would welcome your assistance in these endeavors.

We ask you to speak out about the suppression of the democratic movement, the deportations, Armenian political prisoners such as Arkady Manucharov, and the reunification of the artificially separated province of Karabagh with Armenia. These are no longer matters of mere principle or abstract ideals. People's lives and the survival of the Armenian people, their culture, language and religion, depend upon the observance of human rights and constitutional guarantees of equal protection, local autonomy, and democratic decision making.

Economic development and respect for human, civil, and political rights are the surest means to the peace and stability which benefit all peoples. We beg you not settle for a counterfeit peace based on oppression and terror like that which we have suffered during the past seventy years. History has presented us all with a unique opportunity to establish just societies based on the will of the people and respect for laws. We seek no more than that the aspirations expressed in your Constitution, in our Constitution, and in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights be enjoyed by all peoples who seek freedom and democracy. And like you, we will settle for no less.

I invite you to visit my country, to see the current conditions for yourself, and to learn firsthand of the willingness of my people to help themselves to a better future.

Sincerely yours,

RAFAEL KAZARYAN,
Corrsponding Member, Armenian Academy of Sciences, Karabagh Committee Member.

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, 75 years ago, on April 24, 1915, the blood red skies dawned over Armenia, when the Turks rounded up over 200 Armenian religious and political leaders and killed them.

This carnage was only the beginning of an organized campaign to systematically liquidate the Armenian people in Turkey—but no one was prepared for the wholesale slaughter of men, women, and children that was to follow.

From 1915 to 1923, 1½ million Armenians were killed. They suffered slow, painful deaths—after long death marches in the desert, by starvation and disease, at the stake, or by the sword.

Another ½ million Armenians were exiled from their homeland of 3,000 years, torn from the roots of their forefathers for all time.

Henry Morgenthau, the U.S. Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire in 1918, warned the world that "The whole history of the human race contains no such horrible episode as this."

The Armenian genocide was the beginning of the bloodiest century in the history of man. Hitler looked to the Turks and discovered the blueprint for the Holocaust when he asked the chilling question: "Who remembers the Armenians?"

In the same way, Stalin successfully carried out the extermination of 7 million Ukrainians during the 1930's, and Pol Pot butchered to death 5 million Cambodians in the 1970's.

Incredibly, some still argue today that there really was no Armenian genocide, no massacre, only casualties of war.

But history—and your determination to keep the Armenian spirit alive and burning—make it terribly clear that the Armenian nation was butchered at the hands of its bloodthirsty tyrants.

Just last week, the Soviets admitted that they were responsible for the massacre of 15,000 Polish officers in Katyn, and the East Germans admitted their responsibility for the Holocaust.

When will the Turks finally admit their responsibility for the vicious slaughter of 1½ million Armenians?

We must remember the Armenians, to teach our children and theirs that remembering the past can light the path to the future. I was proud to cosponsor the Senate resolution designating April 24, 1990, as "National Day of Remembrance of the 75th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide of 1915–1923."

The genocide of the Armenian people stands as one of the most heinous crimes against humanity the world has ever known. The horror that the Armenian people suffered 75 years ago should have warned the world of man's inhumanity to man.

The resolution to commemorate the Armenian genocide will help bring all Americans together in greater understanding of this momentous tragedy—one which we can never forget, one which can never be denied, one which can never be permitted to occur again.

ARMENIAN MARTYRS DAY

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today marks the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide.

As one who cosponsored and voted for the Armenian Genocide Day of Remembrance resolution, I had hoped that we would observe today's anniversary under the terms of that resolution. But that is not to be the case.

Nevertheless, today many Members of both Houses of Congress are expressing in their own words their recognition of Armenian Martyrs Day. In this regard, it is interesting to note that nearly 100 historians and social scientists have been meeting these past few days in Yerevan, capital city of the Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic at the International Scholarly Conference on the Armenian genocide.

These scholars from 16 nations, including the United States, have been presenting the results of their research and exchanging information on the Armenian genocide. The conference participants have reaffirmed the reality of the Ottoman Empire's slaughter of over 1 million Armenians. When we debated Senate Joint Resolution 212, the Armenian Genocide Day of Remembrance a few weeks ago, some who opposed it argued that the evidence of an actual genocide against the Armenians at the hands of the Ottoman Turks was unclear. I encourage those who doubt the evidence of the genocide to take a careful look at the results of the just-concluded conference in Yerevan.

Mr. President, I have often stated that recognition of the Armenian genocide is no insult to contemporary Turkey. This day of recognition does not disparage Turkey. It is simply a day for honoring the victims of the genocide that occurred in the Ottoman Empire 75 years ago. Today's leaders of Turkey would do their nation a great service by setting aside their opposition to the recognition of this genocide. Turkish esteem in the eyes of the rest of the world would be enhanced if they would take this simple step. It would add credibility to their proclamations of respect for human rights.

We remember the past and the victims of historical outrages not to insult current nations or nationalities, but to demonstrate our commitment not to tolerate a reoccurrence of such tragic, brutal holocausts.

In the act of remembering the victims of the Armenian genocide, we honor all who have suffered unfairly, as they did. Our remembrance of them also is an expression of our hope that no human being shall ever again be forced to suffer as they did.

ARMENIAN MARTYR'S DAY

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise today to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide—in which 2 million Armenians were slaughtered at the hands of the Turkish Ottomans. This commemoration is being held in the shadow of continued persecution of the Armenian people.

Here in Washington, we see the Government of Turkey once again exerting its considerable influence to deny Armenians a place in world history regarding the genocide. In Armenia, we see the Armenian people's efforts to rebuild after the disastrous earthquake being thwarted by Azerbaijanis who are blocking international relief efforts. And, in Soviet Azerbaijan, we see Azeri efforts to terrorize the majority Armenian population.

Surely, the Armenian psyche has been jarred and Armenians must feel a sense of tremendous loss and betrayal. But together, we must persevere because, to a greater extent than ever before, Armenian issues are in the forefront of international attention.

The anguish suffered by the relatives and descendants of the victims of the genocide, is intensified by the long-standing refusal of the Turkish Government to acknowledge that the Armenian genocide ever occurred, in the face of clear and ample documentation to the contrary.

The Senate's efforts to correct the record by passing the resolution designating April 24 Armenian Martyr's Day—were again unsuccessful. But we will revisit this issue—again and again until we prevail, for as history has shown us, to tolerate genocide is to invite its repeated use. We know that the Armenian genocide was not the last, but the first of many attempts to exterminate peoples in this century, including—6 million Jews under Hitler, untold numbers of Soviet citizens in the Gulags under Stalin, and countless Cambodians under Pol Pot.

The entire world must speak with one voice in condemning the crimes committed by the Turks, for they were not simply crimes against the Armenians, but against all mankind. Together, we must work to preserve that truth about these tragedies so that future generations might be spared the horrors of the past. Just as the world knows of the crimes against Jewish and other peoples, together we will ensure that future generations know of the atrocities endured by the Armenians and will prevent history from repeating itself.

In my own State of Michigan, the Armenian community has made an important contribution to this effort by establishing the Armenian Study Center at the University of Michigan in Dearborn, which will help to balance, with objective scholarship, the efforts of those who seek to alter history by denying the significance of the Armenian genocide.

Always mindful of the past, we must also look ahead to the future. We must prepare for it, and we must be inspired by the promise it holds. Like the beautiful Mount Ararat—Ah-rah-rat—the symbolic heart of ancient Armenia—Armenian-Americans can bring hope to those in the homeland, and some measure of meaning to the suffering endured by the victims of the genocide.

And, so we must continue to spread the word—to share the riches of the Armenian culture and an appreciation for the suffering the Armenian people have endured.

PREJUDICE IN AMERICA

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague and friend, PAUL SIMON, recently spoke on the subject, "Our Mission To End Prejudice in America," At his alma mater, Dana College, in Blair. NE.

I believe my colleagues will find Senator SIMON's remarks as perceptive and enlightening as I found them. I ask unanimous consent to reprint his remarks in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUR MISSION TO END PREJUDICE IN AMERICA

(Remarks of Senator Paul Simon, Dana College, Blair, NE, Apr. 22, 1990)

Why have a gathering like this?

My involvement started with reading a review in the New York Times of Dr. Leo Goldberger's book, "The Rescue of the Danish Jews." After reading this real-life story with its heroes and villains, it occurred to me that something appropriate should happen in this country to honor those who stood courageously, and to remind all of us that times may arise when we must stand courageously.

Reading this book added to my knowledge of a less than glorious human history. Anti-semitism did not erupt suddenly in Germany sixty years ago, but has been a part of the cultural heritage of two millennia, imposed primarily by those of us who call ourselves Christians. From the 4th century on, the history of the Jews is both heroic and grim. And through these centuries the brutality that erupted from anti-semitism was defended—in the name of religion.

Here at a college of Lutheran heritage, we must note that Martin Luther and other Catholic and Protestant leaders of the 16th century, including otherwise enlightened leaders like Erasmus, expressed attitudes toward Jews that we now read with wonder and repugnance.

Even a tyrant like Hitler fooled many. Listen to Christian theologian Emmanuel Hirsch of Germany. "No other people in the world has a leading statesman such as ours, who takes Christianity so seriously. On May 1st when Adolf Hitler closed his great speech with a prayer, the whole world could sense the wonderful sincerity in that."

While the ominous silence of Lutherans and Catholics in Germany is disquieting, the confusion of personal morality and public morality afflicted U.S. Christian leaders also. In 1934 Baptists held their Fifth World Congress in Berlin. After that meeting one U.S. Baptist leader wrote: "Chancellor Adolf Hitler gives . . . the prestige of his personal example since he neither uses intoxicants nor smokes." And the president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville cautioned, "against too hasty judgment of a leader who has stopped German women from smoking cigarettes and using red lipstick in public."

Most of the early colonies of our country prohibited Jews from holding public office.

We did not have ghettos in the same way that most of Europe had, but communities of Protestants, Catholics and Jews tended to gather in clusters in rural America, or in neighborhoods in urban America. We often were isolated from each other by language, culture and religion. Believing ill of one another came easily. Defending one another did not come naturally. That was true as late as half a century ago. Read David Wyman's book, "The Abandonment of the Jews," about the early World War II years, and the story of both U.S. Christians and Jews failing to stand up. It is not plesant reading for either Christians or Jews.

Support for Israel has too often been lacking among Christian leaders. Neither Christians nor Jews should be expected to provide uncritical support of Israel, but sometimes the silence, and sometimes the criticism, bear overtones that echo part of a Christian heritage that is not good. Christian politicians generally support Israel, but that is sometimes an outgrowth of self-interest rather than conviction. Having Christian church leaders who speak out for the security of Israel, as well as peace in the Middle East, should be more common than it is. I do not suggest that all lack of support for Israel is anti-semitic, but sometimes it is.

As Jews faced the Nazi threat in Europe, the most prominent church leaders to speak up in their defense were an Orthodox patriarch in Bulgaria and the Lutheran bishops of Denmark. There were some others, less prominent, and isolated voices like Dietrich Bonnhoeffer in Germany, but the resounding voice of compassion that we might have expected from every branch of Christendom did not emerge.

We gather here to honor a people who did show compassion and courage, to heed Elie Wiessel's constant admonition: "Remember." But I hope we can do more than that. On this fiftieth anniversary of the invasion of Denmark, we must probe the question, "Why in Denmark alone were almost all the Jews saved?" We must learn lessons that will help all humanity. Today is Earth Day. It is also Holocaust Memorial Day, known in Hebrew as Yom Hashoah, a day to remember the six million Jews killed by the Nazis. In two days the Armenian community will note the 75th anniversary of the massacre of 1.5 million Armenians by the Turkish government of that day.

Can we make this earth safer for its inhabitants?

I believe we can.

When I read Isaac Singer's account of his early life as the son of a rabbi in Poland, I found at least a few parallels to growing up as the son of a Lutheran minister. My parents were active in what we called "race relations," but despite that, in my earliest years my sense of the order of creation was, first there was God, then the angels, then the Missouri Synod Lutherans, and everyone else trailed pretty far behind. I'm sure my parents did not tell me that, but that was my impression. Gradually my outlook changed, but there are those in every heritage who somehow do not have the opportunity to grow out of those early attitudes.

My early years were in the State of Oregon, and I remember in 1942 the President ordered 120,000 Japanese-Americans and their relatives living in California, Oregon and Washington to sell all of their property in one to three days, and to put all of their possessions into one suitcase. They were then shipped off to camps in the interior of the United States. My father spoke out against this on a local radio station, KORE. Because of the patriotic fervor of the times, he took some abuse. Perhaps it is simply the flawed memory of someone who was then thirteen, but I do not recall others standing up. Where were the Christian and Jewish leaders? They were largely silent. Where was the American Civil Liberties Union? It was silent. Where were members of the bar, who should be special guardians of our basic civil liberties? They were, for the most part, silent.

I mention this to suggest that the battles for civil liberties are not fought only in Germany and Denmark. They are fought over and over in every society, and unless the traditions of understanding and tolerance and respect for civil liberties become deeply rooted, abuses are likely to take place, and those who object to the abuses are the remnant who keep civilized conduct from spilling over into uncivilized conduct.

There is the noble and the beast in each of us, and we need people who appeal to to the noble.

What can each of us do?

The answers in part are so obvious that they may seem trite.

They start with things as simple as the language we use to describe groups, and the jokes we tell. Jokes that make fun of Jews or Catholics or African-Americans or Asian-Americans or Poles or Italian-Americans are not funny. What we avoid doing is important.

What we constructively do is even more important.

We can build bridges, and I hope these days at Dana College will. It would take no great effort for a Jewish congregation to have an exchange program with a Lutheran congregation, but few have done that. It should take place in Omaha, yes, but there should also be a rural Lutheran or Catholic congregation exchange with an urban Jewish congregation in Omaha or Lincoln.

Here at Dana College, with its Christian heritage, there should be Jewish faculty representation, and more than an occasional Jewish student. Special efforts should be made to see that right on this campus there is more than a one-time seminar, but constant bridge-building that will never leave students for the remainder of their lives. I have twice spoken on the campus of Brandeis University, a school proud of its Jewish heritage. Brandeis has managed to survive that experience. Brandeis is careful to make sure that its faculty and student body, while predominantly Jewish, also reflect other cultural streams of this nation and world.

Are students at Dana learning about the Holocaust? About the slaughter of the Armenians? They should be, on this campus, and on all campuses.

Scholarships at Dana for those of Jewish heritage, as a special tribute to the Danes who rescued the Jews, would be appropriate.

Here at Dana College you have an art istructor whose talent is recognized throughout the region. His work welcomes visitors to the Omaha airport.

Why not commission him to do some form of sculpture that pays tribute to the Danes who have saved the Jews, a work that would have a prominent spot on this campus with its Danish heritage? Each day students and faculty and visitors would be reminded of how thin the veneer of civilization is, and how those with courage can make a difference.

But our reach for understanding must go beyond Christian-Jewish relations, important as they are. I have traveled a good deal in my life, but when the hostages were taken in Iran, I suddenly found myself reading about Sunni Moslems and Shiite Moslems, and realized that through my education and experience I had learned about the various divisions of Christianity and Judaism, but I knew amazingly little about the beliefs of moslems and Hindus and Buddhists and others. I have no easy formula to solve this, but just as isolation of Jews and Christians is not healthy, so our failure to understand others is not helpful. I do not suggest that we should in any way diminish the importance or the quality of the heritage that each of us has, but that we should do more to understand others.

Finally, we should ask our government to lead in the struggle for human rights, to reflect the best in our heritage. Our actions and our words should signify an interest in non-violent solutions to problems, built on a base of understanding and recognition of the rights of all. That must be our stand in Portland, Maine, and Portland, Oregon, in South Africa and the Soviet Union, in Cambodia and China, in El Salvador and Chile.

When the centuries-old specter of antisemitism rears its head in the Soviet Union, as it has, our government should not hesitate to ask the Soviet leadership to speak out more firmly, not to repress freedom of speech, but to stress the importance of understanding and tolerance, and the dangers of intolerance.

While we gather in peaceful Blair, Nebraska, to pay tribute to some courageous people, and to learn from them, in Ireland, Catholics and Protestants fight; in Lebanon, Christians and Moslems struggle among themselves and with each other; in Israel, Arabs, and Jews too often provide tragedy instead of hope; in the Soviet Union, Christian Armenians and Moslem Azerbaijanis live in tension; in Kashmir, Hindus and Moslems are killing each other.

It is easy to look around our world and become pessimistic.

But today we honor people who give us hope. We must learn from them.

For many years Senator Jacob Javits served the nation. He lost in a New York primary, and shortly after his loss it was discovered that he had Lou Gehrig's disease. You could see this once-vital and strong man gradually deteriorate. Several weeks before his death he was pushed into my office in a wheel-chair, wearing a device around his chest to keep him breathing. Immediately his attendant plugged a cord into an electric outlet to keep the breathing apparatus functioning. And then Senator Javits started lobbying me on a bill that interested him.

When we finished talking about that matter, I turned to him and said, "Jack you're an inspiration."

I shall ever forget his reply: "Paul, you have to have a mission in life." He was right. And part of our mission must be to build understanding, so that never again will any people have to be rescued because of their heritage.

ARMENIA GENOCIDE REMEMBRANCE

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to acknowledge the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide which took place during the final years of the Ottoman Empire.

In the 8 years between 1915 and 1923, some 1,500,000 people of Armenian ancestry are reported to have died at the hands of their Ottoman rulers. We must not allow atrocities on this scale to pass through history unacknowledged.

There are those who wish to deny the facts, to deny that tremendous Armenian suffering took place under Ottoman rule; but the historical evidence documents the tragedies that befell the Armenians of the Ottoman Empire. Kemal Attaturk himself was quoted in the Los Angeles Examiner on August 1, 1926, as saying that the responsible Turks "should have been made to account for the lives of millions of our Christian subjects who were ruthlessly driven en masse from their homes and massacred."

President George Bush stated in October 1988, that "The United States must acknowledge the attempted genocide of the Armenian people in the last years of the Ottoman Empire, based on the testimony of survivors, scholars, and indeed our own representatives at the time, if we are to insure that such horrors are not repeated."

Indeed. That is precisely the purpose of Senate Joint Resolution 212, of which I am a cosponsor. That legislation, introduced by Senator DOLE, would have designated today, April 24, 1990 as the national day of remembrance of the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide of 1915-23.

While the resolution was successfully blocked in the Senate, the debate over the resolution may have raised public awareness of the Armenian suffering in a way that the resolution itself would not have done.

LAUNCH OF HUBBLE SPACE TELESCOPE

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, today, after years of anticipation, the United States has launched the Hubble space telescope into permanent orbit around the Earth.

This mission, more than most, demonstrates the scientific value of the U.S. Space Shuttle Program, not just to scientists and astronomers, but to every individual who thirsts for knowledge and a broader understanding of our universe.

Because it will operate above the distorting effects of Earth's atmosphere, the Hubble space telescope will provide clearer pictures of our solar system, and our universe, than any Earth-based telescope ever could. It will allow all of us to become more familiar with our universe and the wonders it holds.

Yet the Hubble telescope is much more than an expensive camera. It is one of the most technologically advanced and sensitive scientific instruments ever developed.

This instrument will allow scientists to look further out into the universe than ever before, enabling them perhaps to measure the size of the universe itself. It will allow for the detailed study of other galaxies and perhaps the discovery of other planets in the universe which might support life.

Not only will this fantastic instrument bridge the gap of distance, it will also bridge the gap of time, enabling us to look into the past. The Hubble space telescope might be called the first time machine ever developed by man. For it will view images from billions of years ago and look to the very birth of our universe. It also may provide important insight into what lies ahead in our future.

But Mr. President, the most important feature of the Hubble space telescope will be its ability to study things that we don't yet know exist, to make discoveries the nature of which we cannot yet anticipate.

Today's launch reaffirms the importance of the U.S. Space Program. It demonstrates the need for further development in both manned and the unmanned space exploration. For although the Hubble telescope is perhaps the most advanced unmanned spacecraft ever developed, its success rests in the hands of the five astronauts sent today to deploy it. I wish them luck and success.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

FAVORED-NATION STATUS FOR HUNGARY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 1594, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1594) to extend nondiscriminatory treatment to the products of the People's Republic of Hungary for 3 years.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Pending:

(1) Packwood amendment No. 1492, to prohibit the export of unprocessed timber from Federal owned lands.

(2) Heinz amendment No. 1505, to extend the suspension of import duties on synthetic rutile.

(3) Heinz amendment No. 1506, to extend the suspension of import duties on needlecraft display models.

(4) Heinz amendment No. 1507, to grant duty-free treatment to 3-amino-propanol.

AMENDMENT NO. 1492

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will now be 1 hour of debate on the Packwood amendment, No. 1492.

The Senator from Oregon is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thank the Chair.

Would the Chair please warn me if I get to 9 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I thank the Senator from Oregon. He will be warned.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, it is my intention before the 10 minutes are out to simply sit down and hope that in the intervening hour, between the time when we are on this and when we vote, an agreement can be worked out that is satisfactory to all sides. At the moment, there is some difference over the treatment of State lands between the State of Washington and all of the other States involved. And there is an issue involving what is known as indirect substitution. That is a contentious issue.

I read the list of sponsors the other day. The amendment has 22 cosponsors, left to right philosophically and from Connecticut to California geographically. What we are trying to do is to ensure that there be an adequate timber supply for mills in this country. At the moment we are terribly short of timber and we import, therefore, 30 percent of our lumber from Canada. We simply do not make enough lumber in this country to serve our needs.

One of the reasons we are short is because we export out of the Northwest about one log in four that is cut, export it overseas. It is not used for lumber here.

One of the issues involved in export is the issue of substitution. Direct substitution is where you own timber of your own. You are Weyerhaeuser. You sell your timber overseas for a handsome price. You then turn around and cut timber off the public lands to run off your mill that you could have run your own private timber through. That is called direct substitution and, in effect, it encourages export.

Indirect substitution is simply a variant of that. Indirect substitution says that you are Weyerhaeuser. You sell some of your private timber overseas. You then buy timber that somebody else has bought off of public lands, buy it from an intermediary. That is indirect substitution. It has the same effect of encouraging the export of logs.

My bill would eliminate both. There is some difficulty with the State of Washington in working out language on indirect substitution, and I am hoping that can be worked out before we have to vote on this.

There is a second issue involving what we call tributary areas. Logs, by and large, are only hauled—and they are all hauled by truck for all practical purposes—they are only hauled so far. Beyond a certain distance it simply is not economical to haul logs and mill them.

We have what are called tributary areas. I will give an example. In Oregon we have a national forest around the town of Klamath Falls, and we have a port of Coos Bay that exports logs. They are so far apart, however, that no logs from the Klamath Falls area go out of the port of Coos Bay. It would not matter whether you are exporting or not exporting. The logs from Klamath Falls do not go to Coos Bay. But from Eugene and Springfield, which are adjacent cities, and Coos Bay, you have tremendous commercial traffic going back and forth in the hauling of logs. Logs cut in the Springfield area are hauled down to Coos Bay and shipped out. They would be in the same tributary area in my bill and you would not allow substitution in those areas.

Klamath Falls and Coos Bay are not in the same area.

We are having a little difficulty working out with the State of Washington language on tributary areas. And those are the two principal issues.

I will, therefore, when I finish, yield back the rest of my time and let the time run on the bill in the hope that in the next hour—and our staffs are meeting right now—some agreement can be worked out. If not, I will go ahead and ask for a vote on my amendment. But if it can be worked out, I will be happy to accommodate everybody and will offer an amendment at that time.

With that, I yield back the remainder of my time of the 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has only used about 4 minutes.

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is fine. I will yield back the rest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time now begins to run on amendment 1492.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I will put a quorum call and ask unanimous consent the time be charged equally against both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeed to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, is the Senate transacting morning business or has the pending business been laid down?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the Packwood amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak out of order for not to exceed 8 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 8 minutes.

SITUATION IN LITHUANIA

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the situation in Lithuania has taken on importance from a number of perspectives. I am confident that most, if not all, of my colleagues are following it daily with increasing concern. None of us wants a crisis in Lithuania that would involve bloodshed and a new forced occupation by Soviet forces. No one wants the clock to roll back to the days that we lived through during the cold war when Russian tanks and troops rolled through Eastern Europe crushing one independence movement after another, and we stood by, watching, exercising no apparent influence, while the Soviets shored up the prison house that Stalin constructed after World War II. Lithuania, as a simple reading of history shows, was forcibly incarcerated in that prison house through a cozy arrangement between Hitler and Stalin. Lithuania was a sovereign, independent nation, just as its sister Baltic countries of Estonia and Latvia were, prior to World War II. In this sense, they are in an entirely different category than the Soviet Republics of the Ukraine and Azerbaijan, for instance. This is clear to everyone here, and to everyone in Moscow.

Soviet Politburo member Alexander Yakovlev publicly admitted as much, in an important speech on August 18, 1989.

I commend the Soviets for this admission. But the activities of the Soviet leadership in Lithuania of late clearly contravene the logical implication of such an admission. So far the United States has been standing by, watching, murmuring polite disapproval and waiting anxiously. Surely we do not want to let Lithuania get in the way of the overall United States-Soviet relationship. Surely we do not want Lithuania to get in the way of a START Agreement. After all, what is important here?

I suggest to my colleagues that we all have to ask ourselves what is important here. No one can be sure what specific effect American actions will have on the dynamics of the Soviet leadership. Will increased pressure from the United States to do what is right in Lithuania have an adverse effect on Mr. Gorbachev's fortunes, ushering in a new draconian Darth Vader four-star military marshall who will fuel up all the tanks again? That is a fear being expressed. There are some who act as if they think the independence of Lithuania and Mr. Gorbachev's survival as a leader are mutually exclusive. We want to help Mr. Gorbachev out. We want to give him time, the benefit of the doubt. He is the Man of the Decade, according to Time magazine. He has, in fact, done much to deserve such an accolade. Eastern Europe was a series of economic basket cases serving as a drag on Soviet economic development, strangling the Soviets' ability to put their house in order. Mr. Gorbachev was the first Soviet leader to act on the recognition of that reality. His efforts to reform his own economy have been saluted by everyone. Although the results have been meager so far, he has done much to be commended for.

But, Mr. President, there comes a time that we dare not stand mute in articulating and acting upon the principles that are the foundation stone of this Nation. The overriding principle is the self-determination of independent peoples. There is a price that we inevitably will pay, and that others, including the Lithuanian people, may pay, for our standing mute for too long.

If we are sending messages to the Soviet leadership, then I have one that we might think about. I would oppose extending any new economic benefits and rewards to the Soviet leadership at the same time it is starving Lithuanians of food and fuel. The Soviets want us to forget about the fact that they forcibly occupied and annexed three independent nations and now are ratcheting up the pressure on these nations for reasserting that independence. I certainly think it is wrong to extend MFN trade treatment to the Soviets, and wrong to endorse any new trade agreement with the Soviets while Lithuania is denied its rightful status. But some people here are too worried to call attention to Soviet behavior, too concerned about calling attention to the denial of food and fuel to Lithuania. Should we be providing any kind of food assistance to the Soviet Union while food is being used as a weapon against Lithuania? I think not.

Some people are concerned about putting pressure on Gorbachev. Ask the Lithuanians about the sensitivity of Mr. Gorbachev to pressure. Are we going to sign up to the caricature of Gorbachev as the victim of the backroom hardliners? Gorbachev the good guy? Let us have a little less handwringing. America will never go wrong in firmly articulating the principles that we believe in, particularly since they apply so directly to the recent history of Lithuania and the current political situation there.

In order for the Soviet Union to win MFN trade status with the United States, it has to pass two congressional hurdles. First, a waiver of the Jackson-Vanik law by the President can be wiped out by an act of Congress, a provision which is embodied in this legislation authored by the Senate Finance Committee. I commend the committee for correcting a constitutional defect in that law in this measure before us. Second, a new trade agreement must be concluded between the United States and Soviets, and that agreement must be approved by the Congress. I would oppose dropping either congressional hurdle to giving the Soviets MFN treatment. I oppose extending any new economic benefits to the Soviets so long as they continue to frustrate the legitimate status of Lithuania as an independent nation, or so long as a clear and fair road through negotiations has not been established to the satisfaction of the very reasonable Lithuanian leadership which would result in that conclusion.

JUDICIAL TAXATION

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, like my colleagues in the Senate, I spent the better part of last week and some time the week before at home in Mississippi, and I found people are plenty mad about their taxes. After all, April 15 is the famous date, and frankly I am disgusted about it, too, having just been dealing with my own income tax problems.

Now we find that the Supreme Court has said in a 5-to-4 decision handed down on April 18 that Federal judges have the right to raise or direct that taxes be raised.

Now, this is one further outrage to an already ridiculous problem. There are some Members of this august body who continue to say we do not have enough revenue coming into the Federal Government. I would like them to go back to their States and ask the people if that is what they think. I think they have about had it.

On a television program over the weekend one commentator said this is what the Boston Tea Party was all about. It is called "taxation without representation." Federal judges with life tenure, who are not elected to that position, are now getting into an unprecedented area, saying, "We can raise taxes." I have heard it all now.

So this decision would substantially increase the authority of the judicial branch beyond any bounds heretofore imagined and threatens the delicate checks and balances on which our Government was founded.

For this reason, I am cosponsoring Senator HUMPHREY'S S. 34, which prohibits the judicial branch from creating or raising taxes. Under this decision of last week, the power to tax rightly belongs to the legislative branch, the body closest to the people. The concept is inherent in our Constitution and was clearly intended by its framers.

While arguing for the ratification of the Constitution in the Federalist Papers No. 78, Alexander Hamilton left no doubt as to the Judiciary's limited powers. Here is what he said:

> The legislature not only commands the purse, but prescribes the rules by which the duties and rights of every citizen are to be regulated. The judiciary, on the contrary, has no influence over either the sword or the purse; no direction either of the strength or to the wealth of the society; and can take no active resolution whatever. It may truly be said to have neither force nor will, but merely judgment; and must ultimately depend on the aid of the executive arm even for the efficacy of its judgments.

Our Founding Fathers had no intention of granting the judicial branch of Government the power to tax, and to grant such power 200 years later would be, as Justice Kennedy wrote in his dissenting remarks, "an expansion of power in the Federal judiciary beyond all precedent."

As an appointed official, these judges would be completely insulated from the public will. While this is appropriate for the equitable dispensation of the law, it is grossly inappropriate for the levying of taxes. We can see very clearly where a judge would get involved in his own preferences or political views, without any accountability. If they could raise taxes in this instance, it could go to other areas, including public funds for hospitals and prisons, and in this particular case, it directed the doubling of property taxes in Kansas City to ensure that high schools would be equipped with swimming pools, planetariums, broadcasting systems, movie studios, and even a model U.N. with translation facilities. Boy, that is very nice. I wish we had one high school in my State of Mississippi with just one of these added features.

So clearly this is a decision that is very contrary to all that our Founding Fathers had in mind.

My colleagues from Missouri, Senator DANFORTH and Senator BOND, have offered a constitutional amendment to clarify the judiciary's role. I know that Senator DANFORTH does not like changing the Constitution at all, a point he has eloquently made in this body before, in fact I am sure in the 101st Congress.

However, I am hopeful a statutory response will sufficiently restrict the courts' ability to tax. It is my understanding that Judge Robert Bork has stated he believes S. 34 would restrict Federal courts from levying taxes, However, it is imperative that we take action to stop this new raid by Federal judges. I also support S. 34, but if it proves to be inefficient, I would certainly look to a constitutional amendment to do the job.

We have judges running the telephone systems in this country, running the prisons, running hospitals, and now they want to raise taxes to impose their wills. This is the outrage of the week.

FAVORED-NATION STATUS FOR HUNGARY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAUCUS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, after consulting with the managers, to temporarily set aside the pending amendment so that I might present an amendment, and I ask further that the time nonetheless continue to run and be charged equally, and that I be permitted to proceed for not to exceed 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1510

(Purpose: To continue the temporary suspension of the duty on certain aromatic couplers and couple intermediates)

MR. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] proposes an amendment numbered 1510.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIXON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert:

That headings 9902.29.01 and 9902.37.07 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States (19 U.S.C. 3007) are each amended by striking out "12/31/90" and inserting in lieu thereof "12/31/92".

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, this amendment would extend a duty suspension on color couplers and coupler intermediates used in the manufacture of photographic sensitized material. The suspension is currently scheduled to expire at the end of this year; the amendment would extend suspension until December 31, 1992. These chemicals are used in the production of medical x-ray products and lithographic plates. It is my understanding that the extension of the duty suspension is not controversial and that the International Trade Commission has been consulted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further discussion about the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, the amendment has been cleared on this side.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado has also been cleared on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1510) was agreed to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I thank the Chair and I thank my colleagues.

Is it the desire now of the managers that we go back to a quorum call?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a quorum call and the time be charged equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FOWLER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, has time run out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

AMENDMENT NO. 1511 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1492

(Purpose: To restrict exports from certain State lands)

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] proposes an amendment numbered 1511 to Amendment No. 1492.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

TITLE V—FEDERAL TIMBER EXPORT RESTRICTIONS

SEC. 501. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Federal Timber Export Restrictions Act of 1990".

SEC. 502. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to make permanent the current Federal policy of restricting the export of unprocessed timber from Federal lands;

(2) to review and revise Federal policy with respect to the ability of timber operators to acquire and mill Federal logs in lieu of exported private logs;

(3) to promote the conservation of forest resources consistent with Federal resources management plans;

(4) to help relieve the critical short supply conditions in industries which rely on an adequate timber supply; and

(5) to effect measures aimed at meeting those objectives in conformity with the obligations of the United States under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

SUBTITLE A—FEDERAL LANDS

SEC. 511. RESTRICTIONS ON EXPORTING OF UNPROCESSED TIMBER.

Notwithstanding the Act of April 12, 1976 (16 U.S.C. § 616, 44 Stat. 242), and except as permitted by section 513 or 514 of this Act, no person who acquires, either directly or indirectly, unprocessed timber originating from Federal lands shall—

(1) export such timber from the United States;

(2) sell, trade, exchange, or otherwise convey such timber to any other person for the purpose of exporting such timber from the United States; or

(3) use, or assist or conspire with any other person to use, such timber in substitution for unprocessed timber originating from private lands exported or to be exported from the United States.

SEC. 512. INFORMATION GATHERING.

(a) REQUIREMENTS OF PERSONS ACQUIRING UNPROCESSED TIMBER.—In accordance with regulations issued under section 523, each person who acquires, either directly or indirectly, unprocessed timber originating from Federal lands shall report the disposition of such timber to the Secretary concerned on a quarterly basis.

(b) REQUIREMENTS OF PERSONS CONVEYING UNPROCESSED TIMBER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with regulations issued under section 523, each person who sells, trades, exchanges, or otherwise conveys to another person unprocessed timber originating from Federal lands shall identify in writing the origin of such timber to that other person.

(2) ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.—The person to whom such timber is conveyed under this section shall submit to the Secretary concerned, in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe—

(A) written acknowledgment of receipt of the written identification of the origin of such timber under paragraph (1), and

(B) a written agreement to comply with all of the prohibitions in section 511.

SEC. 513. EXCLUSIONS.

(a) EXEMPTION FROM PROHIBITION ON SUBSTITUTION.—The prohibitions contained in section 511 shall not apply to a person if, before the unprocessed timber otherwise subject to the prohibitions is obtained—

(1) that person applies to the Secretary concerned, in such form as is prescribed in regulations issued by such Secretary, for an exemption of the prohibitions contained in section 511;

(2) that person demonstrates in such application that the Federal lands from which the unprocessed timber will be obtained are not located in the same geographic area—

(A) from which that person exports any other unprocessed timber from private lands; or

(B) from which that person has exported unprocessed timber from private lands in the preceding 5-year period; and

(3) the Secretary concerned grants the exemption.

(b) DETERMINATION OF GEOGRAPHIC AREAS.—The Secretary concerned shall determine the boundaries of geographic areas for purposes of subsection (a)(2) in accordance with the procedures for rulemaking set forth in section 553 of title 5, United States Code. The Secretary shall consider whether persons other than the applicant for the exemption engage in commerce in unprocessed logs between the two geographic areas involved. Such commerce shall be sufficient to deny the exemption. Any such determination shall be reviewed at least once in each 2-year period. The Secretary concerned shall publish notice of such review in the Federal Register, and shall give the public an opportunity to comment on such review.

SEC. 514. SURPLUSES.

(a) DETERMINATIONS BY SECRETARIES.—The prohibitions contained in section 511 shall not apply to specific quantities of grades and species of unprocessed timber from Federal lands which the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior determines to be surplus to domestic manufacturing needs.

(b) PROCEDURES.—Any determination under subsection (a) shall be made in regulations issued in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code. Any such determination shall be reviewed at least once in every 3-year period. The Secretary concerned shall publish notice of such review in the Federal Register, and shall give the public an opportunity to comment on such review.

SUBTITLE B—SANCTIONS; DEFINITIONS; EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 521. PENALTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any person who violates this title or any implementing regulation, or counsels, procures, solicits, or employs any other person to take an action in violation of this title or such regulation, shall be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary concerned of not more than $10,000 for each violation.

(b) KNOWING VIOLATIONS.—Any person who knowingly violates this Act, or any implementing regulation, shall be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary concerned of not more than $1,000,000 or three times the gross value of the unprocessed timber involved in the violation, whichever is greater.

SEC. 522. DEBARMENT.

If the Secretary concerned finds, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing on the record, that a person has violated this Act or any regulation issued to carry out this Act, such Secretary shall issue an order prohibiting that person from entering into any contract for the purchase of unprocessed timber from any Federal lands for a period of not more than 5 years. Such a person shall also be precluded from taking delivery of Federal timber purchased by another party for the period of debarment. Such an order shall be subject to review in an appropriate District Court of the United States.

SEC. 523. REGULATIONS.

Within 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior shall, in consultation, each prescribe new coordinated and consistent regulations to implement this Act on lands which they administer.

SEC. 524. DEFINITIONS.

When used in this title, the term—

(1) "acquire" means to come into possession of, either directly or indirectly through a sale, trade, exchange, or other transaction;

(2) "affiliate" of another person described in paragraph (4) of this section is a person that—

(A) controls or has the power to control such other person,

(B) is controlled by or is subject to control by such other person, or

(C) with such other person is controlled by or is subject to control by, a third person, except that in determining whether persons are affiliates, all appropriate factors shall be considered including, but not limited to, common ownership, common management, and contractual relationships:

(3) "Federal lands" means lands administered by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Defense, and located west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States, excluding lands held in trust by the United States for the benefit of any Indian tribe or Indian individual:

(4) "person" means an individual partnership corporation association or other legal entity and shall include subcontractors and any subsidiary, parent company, or other affiliate;

(5) "private lands" means lands held or owned by a person but does not include lands held or owned by the United States, a State or political subdivision thereof, or any other public agency;

(6) "Secretary concerned" means the Secretary administering the Federal lands from which the unprocessed timber is removed;

(7) "substitution" is the practice of purchasing or otherwise obtaining timber from Federal lands west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States while at the same time exporting, or selling for export, timber from private lands west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States; and

(8) "unprocessed timber" means timber as defined by the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 523 of this Act.

SEC. 525. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), this title shall take effect 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, but shall not apply with respect to timber removed pursuant to timber sale contracts entered into before the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) EXEMPTION FROM SUBSTITUTION.—Section 511(3) shall take effect 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act. During such 1-year period, section 511(3) shall not apply with respect to the acquisition of unprocessed timber from Federal lands by a person who, in accordance with regulations of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, demonstrates to the appropriate official that the Federal lands are in a tributary area as defined by the current regulations.

TITLE VI—STATE LANDS

SEC. 601. RESTRICTION OF EXPORTS OF UNPROCESSED TIMBER FROM STATE LANDS.

(a) AUTHORITY TO PROHIBIT EXPORTS OF UNPROCESSED TIMBER.—The Secretary of Commerce shall prohibit or otherwise restrict the exportation from the United States of any unprocessed timber harvested from land owned or administered by a State (or any political subdivision thereof), based on the recommendation of the Governor of that State, but only if the Governor of that State has certified that the State supports such prohibitions or restrictions based on—

(1) a statute enacted by the State legislature;

(2) a statewide voter initiative; or

(3) an existing State statute.

This subsection shall not apply if the Secretary of Commerce finds that there are not in effect restrictions on the exportation from the United States of unprocessed timber from land owned or administered by the Federal Government.

(b) ABILITY OF SECRETARY TO REMOVE OR MODIFY EXPORT RESTRICTIONS.—The Secretary of Commerce may remove or modify such prohibitions or restrictions on the exportation from the United States of any unprocessed timber harvested from land owned or administered by a State (or any political subdivision thereof) if the Governor of such State modifies that State's certification consistent with the requirements of paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (a).

(c) SUBSTITUTION.—Each State may adopt provisions with respect to substitution.

SEC. 602. DEFINITIONS.

When used in this title, the term—

(1) "State" means any of the several States located west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States:

(2) "State lands" means lands of a State or any political subdivision thereof; and

(3) "unprocessed timber" means timber as defined under the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 523 of this Act.

SEC. 603. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This title shall take effect upon the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, we are dealing with the subject of log exports. The original amendment related to exports from Federal lands, and the reason that at the time of offering it, I did not include extending that to State lands was that I was hoping an accommodation could be reached involving those States that do export some timber. We have been waiting this last hour in the hopes that an accommodation could be reached. It appears that it has not been totally reached yet, so I am submitting this amendment which would extend the Federal ban to State lands in some States.

At the moment, the States of Oregon, California, and Alaska have statutes on their books that prohibit the export of logs from their State lands. Those laws, however, are unconstitutional, according to a court decision of several years ago, because they said that only Congress can make policy involving foreign commerce, which is correct. Therefore, the States cannot act. We can delegate it to the States if we want to, but the States cannot act.

So, in my hope that we could work out an agreement that would also accommodate the State of Washington, I did not, at the moment the bill was introduced, put in a provision relating to State lands. This simply extends it now to State lands. It does not touch the State of Washington. We simply leave them alone and this bill says that the Secretary of Commerce shall have the power to prohibit exports from State lands if a Governor of that State petitions, and such prohibition or restriction in the State is based on, one, a statute enacted by the State legislature, two, a statewide voter initiative or, three, an existing State statute.

It would still be my hope, perhaps before we are done with this bill or done with the week or the session, that we can work out an accommodation that would fit the unique problems of the State of Washington, also.

What we have, therefore, before us is an amendment that does the following: One, writes into permanent law the prohibition of exports of logs from Federal lands west of the 100th meridian—that is roughly North and South Dakotas—and then draw a line west of that; two, it phases out direct substitution over the life of existing timber sales contracts. Those are normally not longer than 3 years.

Direct substitution is where a private company exports its own timber overseas; then, not having enough timber to run through its mills, buys public timber to run through its mills. That is direct substitution.

The bill also eliminates indirect substitution which is very closely allied to direct substitution. Indirect substitution, as the name implies is where a company sells its own private timber overseas; it then turns around and buys timber from a third party who has bought timber off public lands. It, in essence, is a strawman intermediary, the same as direct substitution. All we are doing is prohibiting a company doing something indirectly what it cannot do directly.

Then we have added, as this last provision, those States that have already chosen to attempt to ban export of logs from State lands. In the West, there are great quantities of State forests. The Secretary of Commerce may allow them to do so.

Why the necessity for these bills? Here, in a nutshell, is the reason. The United States is short of timber. We import about 30 percent of all the softwood lumber we use in this country. I had printed in the RECORD the other day a letter from the Chief of the Forest Service in which he said, yes, that is true, we import about 30 percent of the lumber in this country, almost all of it from Canada, almost all of it the same species we export—fir, spruce and hemlock; we import mostly fir, spruce, and hemlock. It worsens our balance of trade because specie for specie, age for age, a finished piece of lumber is worth more than raw logs. The more we sell of logs overseas is more than lost by buying the equivalent amount of lumber from Canada. The companies own the timber; they do not own the lumber. We are 30 percent short.

Not only that, it is now projected, with the new Forest Service plans in the West, which should be into effect by the end of this year, and if we have a decision to set aside great quantities of public land because of the spotted owl issue, we will probably be 35 to 40 percent short of lumber in this country.

My bill would help alleviate that situation somewhat if we ban the export of logs off public lands.

I say "somewhat" because I think, Mr. President, that we should also ban the export of logs off private lands, but I have not put that in this bill. I understand the difficulty that creates if I were to put it in, and that is a battle for another day.

In the Northwest, we export about one log in four overseas. Of the total exports of this country, only about one-quarter are public. By that I mean off Federal or State timber lands. Three-quarters is private. Of the three-quarters, the overwhelming preponderance is Weyerhaeuser. Most of it they are exporting out of the State of Washington. Washington, in addition, exports great quantities of timber off their State public forests. So I understand the unique problem they have. Not only do they export more State timber than all the rest of the country put together, Weyerhaeuser exports more private timber than all the States put together. Clearly, it creates a unique problem for the State of Washington which I sympathize with and it is a problem that is unique to that State and left them out of the State provision of this bill as it affects State lands, and now as it affects Federal lands.

I expect that Congress will adopt my amendment or something very close to it when this bill goes to the House. Sentiment is building rapidly. I will read you the nationwide to-date organizations that support this bill: the National Audubon Society, the National Wildlife Federation, the Sierra Club, the Wilderness Society; the four principal environmental groups.

From labor: the AFL-CIO, the Association of Western Pulp and Paper Workers, the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, the International Woodworkers of America, and the Industrial Union Department of the AFL-CIO.

The trade associations: the Western Building Material Association, the National Lumber and Building Material Dealers Association, the North American Wholesale Lumber Association, the Southeastern Lumber Manufacturers Association, and the National Home Builders Association.

As to the Federal part of this bill, the administration supports it. It is not very often that you are going to get a coalition that includes environmentalists, labor, business, and the administration all on one side of the bill.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will vote overwhelmingly to adopt this amendment so that we can send to the House a message that the Senate feels very strongly about this bill.

I thank the Chair. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who controls time in opposition?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] be in control of the time in opposition to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, the Senator from Washington controls the time.

Who yields time?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I will request time from the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I will grant such time as the Senator from Washington needs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington [Mr. ADAMS] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am going to vote in support of the Packwood amendment, and I do this because we are going to face in the Pacific Northwest, later in this year, as was well stated, a great shortage of timber supply, and this will assist in making some additional logs available for our small mills and for the people who would otherwise be unable to bid against the Japanese in order to obtain a timber supply for their mills.

I am disappointed we have not been able to accommodate and work out some of the very technical parts of this. I compliment not only Senator GORTON but a number of others from the House side who have worked with my staff and with others to try to take care of certain contracts that have run, for some of them, nearly 100 years, where they were guaranteed a timber supply.

Mr. President, I do believe we should stop exporting these logs from Federal lands to Japan and to Asia. I have changed my position on this, as I indicated in an earlier speech that I made on this floor, since the time back in the 1970's and in the middle 1980's when we had a gigantic depression in the Pacific Northwest, because we had a surplus of timber available from the blowdowns that occurred in the great storms and the Mount St. Helens eruption. We needed to have a market overseas.

But we are now in a position where we are short of timber available for our mills in the Pacific Northwest. The ban on export of logs from Federal lands, I have supported as a member of the Appropriations Committee and as a Member of the House of Representatives, voting on a rider on that appropriations bill for over 20 years. So I am in complete support of and have been very consistent with that position.

I also believe that direct substitution should now be over. There was once a time when this needed to be worked out. It was carried out by Senator MORRIS and Congresswoman HANSEN. But that time has changed, as times have changed.

Our State has a different rule on the export of logs from public lands that belong to the State because our schools are funded by State lands, but this amendment that has been offered by Senator PACKWOOD applies only to the Oregon lands where they have a different rule.

Our State may or may not change that rule on export of logs from public lands, but I rise today to say I am hopeful, as this bill moves to the House and later to conference, that we will accomplish the purpose of keeping our natural resources, which are in short supply, on our Federal lands available for our local mills, and that we will be able in the course of this pursuit to practice conservation and to keep our industry alive.

So I will support the amendment of the Senator from Orgeon, though it applies really only to the Orgeon lands; but most important, the underlying amendment which he has offered, because the concepts are there. There may be later changes in this as the bill moves to the House and as it comes back because there are technical difficulties, and that is why we were working on them for the last week and on which we spent an hour this morning.

So I hope we will agree to this amendment—I intend to vote for it—and that the bill will proceed to the House of Representatives, where they will work their will.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. President, any thoughtful and intelligent discussion of this amendment should begin with a description of the nature and the extent of the problem faced by the forest products industries in the Northwest.

Beginning 2 or 3 years ago with the outlines of forest plans for various of the national forests in both Washington and Oregon, it became evident that the timber base upon which a wide range of privately owned smaller mills—that is to say, mills primarily without a land or timber base of their own—would be severely constrained.

The senior Senator from Washington and both Senators from Oregon are already well aware of the kind of objections from small communities which were coming to the offices of each of us as early as the beginning of last year just as a result of the plans proposed by the Forest Service itself.

On top of those Forest Service plans, which moved substantially away from the use of the national forests in the Pacific Northwest toward preservationist policies, has come the controversy over the spotted owl and the possibility—perhaps it is more appropriate to say the probability—that it will be listed as a threatened species at the very least in the Pacific Northwest.

Within the course of the last month, Mr. President, a commission appointed pursuant to the requirements of the Endangered Species Act has recommended an additional set-aside for spotted owls, very extensive in nature. In fact, for the first time in this controversy, it has asked for the set-aside not only of Federal Forest Service lands but of lands owned by both the States of Washington and Oregon and by private companies as well.

A representative of the Commissioner of Public Lands for the State of Washington has told me that the cost for the preservation, or perhaps the creation of areas in which they do not exist now, of a single pair of spotted owls will be $800,000 per year on one of the State forests located near the capital of the State of Washington.

That cost, of course, will come directly out of the pockets of people in traditional rural communities whose livings have been based on the forest products industry for a period of time longer than the existence of the State of Washington as a State, and perhaps a similar length of time in the State of Oregon.

As recently as 8 or 9 months ago, this Congress, in passing the Hatfield-Adams amendment, called for a year during which we could study the long-range implications of this listing, and of our preservationist attempts at preserving a cut of between 3.7 and 3.8 billion board feet from the forests of Washington and Oregon.

If the report pursuant to the Endangered Species Act becomes the policy of the Federal Government, that Federal cut will drop to no more than 4.5 billion board feet and perhaps as low as 2 billion board feet. As a consequence, the States of Washington and Oregon, from the Federal forests, will be losing perhaps as much as 40 percent of the historically allowable cut.

The time for debate over the impacts of these proposed threatened species, the time for debate over the future of those Federal forests is not today. In fact, my own view is that the time for debate over this amendment is not today because it deals with such a relatively minor portion of the problem itself.

In addition to that more or less traditional cut of something under 4 billion board feet, about two-thirds of which takes place in Oregon and one-third in Washington, there are two other sources, of course, of timber for the industries of the Pacific Northwest. One is on State-owned land. Again, perhaps because the State of Washington is younger and more recent in the Union than is the State of Oregon, there is far more State forest lands in the State of Washington than in our neighbor to the south.

Recent cuts on Washington State lands have been about 800 million board feet a year; in Oregon, as I understand it, a little over 100 million board feet per year. In the State of Washington particularly, as the Senator from Oregon has pointed out, cuts on private lands exceed by a wide margin those on all public lands combined. He could speak to that ratio in the State of Oregon. Certainly cuts on private lands are very large. They are probably not as large a ratio as they are in the State of Washington.

In addition, the State of Washington has a unique problem or challenge in this connection. Unlike Oregon, California, Idaho, and Alaska, the constitution of the State of Washington requires that the great bulk of the State lands be held in trust for the school construction fund and, therefore, sold to the highest bidder, whether the highest bidder proposes to process them in the State or in some other place.

As a consequence, unlike the other States, there is no Washington statute. In fact, without an amendment to the constitution, there could be no Washington statute limiting or restricting the way in which those logs could be sold. The Governor of the State quite recently has changed his views on this subject, but no legislative action has been taken to submit the question to a vote of the people of the State of Washington.

Last year, Mr. President, the States of Washington and Oregon's delegations, both in the Senate and the House of Representatives, were successful in getting temporary relief for our forest products industry in the form of the Hatfield-Adams amendment. That amendment was supported in a greater or sometimes lesser degree of enthusiasm not only by all four of the Senators from the two States, but by the House Members on both sides, with the exception, I believe, of one or two of the Members from Oregon, who feel that it did not go far enough, that it did not provide enough timber for use in the State of Oregon.

I feel very, very strongly that it would be far the better course of action for us to deal with all of these challenges at the same time under the same circumstances and on a basis of unanimity between the two States' delegations. I regret to say that is not the case in connection with this amendment.

Because of the peculiar nature of State lands in the State of Washington, because of their importance in the State of Washington, our congressional delegation, both House Members and Senate Members, have discussed this subject at great length. It was just last Thursday morning that the delegation unanimously gave to Congressman SWIFT and myself the right to propose to Oregon an overall solution to this problem, which we felt could and should meet with the approval of both delegations.

The distinguished junior Senator from Oregon, on the same day, despairing of action on this subject, proposed most of the amendment which is now before us. It has not been changed, as I understand it, in the slightest with respect to Federal lands. It does impact State lands in States other than the State of Washington.

The Senator from Oregon said that he left Washington out with respect to the State land section of it. Had he left Washington out with respect to the Federal land section of it, in order that that matter be settled by the State of Washington, I would, of course, support him and would have no objections to this course of action at all. But it did seem to me that we ought to deal with the entire problem on the basis of unanimity or divide it into its constituent parts looking for unanimity on those.

With respect to the provisions in the Packwood amendment on Federal lands, we are dealing with three concepts which are so obscure that I am not certain that I trust myself to describe them with complete accuracy except to say that they are dealt with with a very sharp sword by the Senator from Oregon in this amendment. For close to 20 years the export of raw logs from Federal lands, national forests, and Bureau of Land Management lands has been prohibited year by year as a rider to the Appropriations Act.

One major portion of the amendment of the Senator from Oregon here is to make that ban permanent. But in that annual ban, there has always been a set of exceptions, exceptions which are essentially removed by this amendment. The first is called direct substitution. Again, direct substitution is something which is far more applicable, or may be completely applicable only in the State of Washington. The principal of direct substitution grants an exception to the prohibition of any company which sells its private timber unprocessed overseas to bid on and to use Federal timber in its own mills. That exception is for the Simpson Mill in Mason County, WA, and comes from a 40-year-old contract for a sustained management of a sustained yield unit of Simpson properties. The Simpson Mill has kept its part of that agreement. The unions which work at that Simpson Mill do not want it arbitrarily cut off for fear of what would happen to their jobs, and I think it should be continued, and it would be continued in any Washington-only bill.

The second subject of this amendment deals with so-called tributary areas, those areas which are primarily designed to support a particular mill and for which, as long as there is no export from those tributary areas, a mill owned by a company which exports elsewhere can still get Federal timber.

This is a controversial issue. It is solved in what I think is a peculiar and undesirable fashion by the Packwood amendment because it in effect allows the definition of tributary to be made by competing mills rather than by the business practices of the mills which historically have used the timber. And this binds too tightly and will cost a considerable number of jobs in mills in the State of Washington.

Finally, and perhaps least important, from the point of view of the number of board feet of timber concerned, is something which is called indirect substitution. Under that exemption to present law, a mill which does not export timber, which bids and is dependent on foreign service timber, may sell some portion of what it purchases from the Forest Service, generally speaking, species and sizes which it cannot use in its own mill, to companies which do in fact export their own privately owned timber, as long as the timber from the Federal land is utilized and processed in the United States.

This is a matter which is for the convenience, generally speaking, of the domestic seller. It is not an exemption which results in any timber cut on Federal lands from being processed overseas. And while it pretty clearly has been misused by some companies, I think it is appropriate to retain at a level of approximately 50 million board feet per year in the State of Washington, simply because, without it, a number of mills will either have to close down completely or slow production and cause increased unemployment, rather than to decrease that unemployment.

When we start from the proposition that in the State of Washington alone, on public and private lands combined, we harvest close to 3 billion board feet of timber per year, 50 million of that seems to be de minimis at best. I regret that we have not been able to reach agreement on that subject.

What is proper policy, Mr. President? It seems to me proper policy should recognize history, should recognize longstanding business practices, should act decisively to increase the supply of timber from the State and Federal lands, to mills which are deprived of it by actions of the Federal Government, primarily through their policies on the national forests, and should bring together all of the parties, rather than to divide them.

As I look and try to total the membership of the House of Representatives from the State of Washington, I think probably seven out of eight will not like, in its present form, the Federal provisions of the proposal by the Senator from Oregon. I have no doubt, as does the senior Senator from Washington, that at some point or another in the relatively near future, there will be a policy which can unite the delegation from the State of Washington, both on these substitution rules with respect to Federal timber and with respect to State timber.

My own views, like those of my senior Senator, have changed quite substantially during the course of the last year and the crisis which is facing the State of Washington. I believe that the lion's share of timber on State lands in the State of Washington should be reserved, and directly by Federal action, because they cannot be reserved by any kind of State action, though I believe it requires very careful drafting to see to it that we do not incur unintended consequences.

But I must emphasize in concluding these remarks, as I did beginning these remarks, that all of these efforts combined are modest in comparison to the challenge we face, a challenge which is created by Federal policies on Federal lands and which can only be cured when we make a determination, in the view of this Senator, that we are going to take some portion of our federally forested lands in the Pacific Northwest and reserve them primarily for timber production, just as we have reserved large portions for wilderness purposes, and will be in the process of reserving others for the preservation of ancient forests.

The people of our States deserve continuity and clarity on the part of Federal policy. They deserve to be able to continue in a highly constructive and, I think, environmentally sound form of business. They can do this best if we take the entire problem as one challenge and work on it together and solve it together in one bill, much more broad and larger than this one.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Senator GORTON is absolutely right in terms of timber supply in the Northwest. We have not started down the road yet to the final solution. The law against banning is a partial solution. There are bigger issues coming in terms of endangered species and old growth, in some cases, and second growth. But this amendment will go partially down the road toward solving the problem. I might say I do not know if anyone else wants to speak. If the Senator from Washington wants to yield back his time, I am prepared to do so.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, were the yeas and nays requested for the secondary amendment or for the first degree amendment?

Mr. PACKWOOD. They were asked for the second amendment. The second amendment includes the first amendment, so that Federal and State are both on one vote. I would not plan to ask for a subsequent vote on the main amendment, because the secondary amendment is the main amendment plus the State land.

Mr. ADAMS. I thank the chair.

Mr. PACKWOOD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time be changed equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will hold off on that for just a minute, it is my understanding that there is a ceremony on the Holocaust that will take place very shortly after 12 o'clock. If all time is expired on this, and if the Members want no further time, it would be of assistance if we could proceed to vote.

I understand that we have some others. Would 3 o'clock be acceptable, that we may have a time certain, a unanimous consent that it be set at 3 o'clock?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we have the vote on the second amendment of the Senator from Oregon at 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Hearing none, it is so ordered. The vote on the Packwood amendment will occur at 3 o'clock.

AMENDMENTS NUMBERED 1505, 1506, AND 1507

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the body that the question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, amendments en bloc, numbered 1505, 1506, and 1507.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I am a strong supporter of free trade. But I am today planning to vote for Senator PACKWOOD's amendment to restrict exports of logs from Federal land.

I will vote for this amendment because I believe it is the only way to level the playing field.

If the free market were allowed to work, there would be no need for legislation to restrict log exports. The U.S. forest products industry is the most efficient in the world. If foreign markets for finished forest products were open, the United States would not be exporting logs. The United States would be exporting only finished forest products.

But other nations, particularly Japan, Korea, and China, put up barriers to block United States exports of finished products, and encourage log imports. In this way, they preserve their domestic forest products industry at the cost of U.S. millworkers' jobs.

In the case of Japan alone these barriers are costing the United States between $1 and $2 billion per year and 10,000 to 20,000 jobs.

This is outrageous. The United States cannot continue to allow itself to be taken advantage of by its trading partners.

We are not engaged in negotiations with Japan to eliminate Japanese barriers to finished United States forest products exports.

In coming years, we will negotiate with other trading partners—either bilaterally or in the GATT—to eliminate their trade barriers.

I hope these negotiations will succeed. When and if they do, we may consider legislation to restrict log exports.

But until we see our trading partners lower their barriers to our finished product exports, we must employ restrictions on log exports to protect American jobs.

Free trade is a two-way street.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise to address the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator BENTSEN, about the amendment offered by Senator PACKWOOD dealing with export controls on unprocessed timber from Federal lands.

Senator PACKWOOD introduced two bills in this Congress, S. 754 and S. 755, dealing with export controls on unprocessed timber from Federal and State lands. Both of these bills were referred by the Parliamentarian to the Banking Committee. The Subcommittee on International Finance and Monetary Policy of the Banking Committee, chaired by Senator SARBANES, held a hearing on those bills on November 7, 1989. At the hearing, the subcommittee received testimony from Senators PACKWOOD and GORTON, Governor Goldschmidt of Oregon, several House Members, and numerous other interested parties, including environmental, industry, and union representatives.

It is clear that Senator PACKWOOD's amendment dealing with export controls on unprocessed logs deals with a matter that is properly within the Banking Committee's jurisdiction. In the interest of expediting consideration by the full Senate of this matter, however, the Banking Committee will not raise a jurisdictional objection to floor action on Senator PACKWOOD's amendment in conjunction with the bill dealing with miscellaneous tariff matters reported by the Finance Committee.

Mr. BENTSEN. Let me assure the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee, Senator RIEGLE, that the Finance Committee recognizes that Senator PACKWOOD's amendment falls under the jurisdiction of the Banking Committee, since it deals with export controls, and thanks him for not objecting to expeditious Senate consideration of this matter.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise to support the amendment offered by Senator PACKWOOD, which among other things, makes permanent the current temporary prohibition on exporting logs from Federal lands west of the 100th meridian—a line running from central North Dakota through central Texas—in the continental United States.

For years the United States has not produced enough softwood lumber to meet the domestic demand. To make up the shortfall, we have imported finished lumber from Canada, a country that severely restricts the export of its own raw logs. At the same time we import finished lumber from Canada to meet our domestic needs, we have been exporting increasing quantities of raw logs, many of them to Japan. That country was recently cited under section 301 of the trade bill for discriminating against the importation of wood products from our country. It appears that Japan would prefer to import raw logs and not wood products. Such a policy maintains the value-added jobs associated with turning raw logs into wood products in Japan, rather than in the United States.

At the same time we are exporting raw logs from public lands to Japan because they will not take finished wood products, our own wood products workers are losing jobs because our mills cannot compete for the high prices being offered for raw logs by Japanese importers. In addition by exporting raw logs, we put increased stress on our forest environment. The old growth forests of the Pacific Northwest are in increasing short supply. We exacerbate this shortage when we export more of these logs to meet growing foreign demands.

Our public forests meet many important needs ranging from homes for endangered species, recreation and scenic vistas for our citizens, habitat for fish, and logs for building homes. We must stop the export of logs from national forests in order to enhance those other uses of our woodlands.

I think it is most important that we adopt the Packwood amendment.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, we have now set the vote on this amendment for 3 o'clock by unanimous consent. I believe that there are some 20 minutes or so remaining.

I have just brief summary remarks. At any point in my remarks if others wish to speak that will be fine, in the absence of which I will be happy to yield back the remainder of the time so we can go on to something else.

To attempt to summarize in a little somewhat less extent than I did in my formal speech, I think the centerpiece in connection with this amendment is just this: The families and timber community of the Pacific Northwest deserve the collective best efforts of the congressional delegations from the Northwest. I do not believe that this amendment meets that test.

The amendment from the Senator from Oregon while promising to address the timber supply crisis in the Pacific Northwest serves only to make that crisis worse in Washington State. I pledge to work with my colleagues from the State of Washington and the House of Representatives to craft a workable alternative to this amendment that provides a rational regionwide and long-term solution.

The timber community of the Northwest has called on their Representatives to stand and deliver, but I am convinced they will not be satisfied with what will be the policy as a result of the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and state to the managers that I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington advises he is prepared to yield back the remainder of his time.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I am prepared to yield back the time on this side.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I have no further requests for time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yield back.

All time has expired.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we set aside the pending amendment and make the time available for others to offer amendments if they so desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. KERRY). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 3 P.M.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, one or two of the Members who need to be contacted about time limits on amendments cannot be reached, and it is clear we are not going to reach them in the next few minutes. We are already ordered to recess from 1 to 3 o'clock.

I move the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 3 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and at 12:22 p.m., the Senate recessed until 3 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. BRYAN].

FAVORED-NATION STATUS FOR HUNGARY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 1511 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1492

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question now is on agreeing to amendment No. 1511 offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD].

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will now call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 81, nays 17, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Exon

So the amendment (No. 1511), to amendment No. 1492, was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on amendment 1492, as amended? The question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1492) of the Senator from Oregon, as amended.

The amendment (No. 1492), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION AND DEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 500, H.R. 3, the Early Childhood Education and Development Act; that, without any intervening action, all after the enacting clause be stricken; that the text of S. 5, a bill to provide for a Federal program for the improvement of child care, and for other purposes, as passed the Senate on June 23, 1989, be further modified by the technical amendment which I now send to the desk and the text of S. 5, as so modified be substituted in lieu thereof; that the bill be deemed to have been read the third time, passed, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that the Senate then insist upon its amendment to the House bill, request a conference with the House, and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate, and that the bill, with the Senate amendment, be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object.

As I have indicated to the majority leader, there were some reservations on this side. They have now been removed. I will just raise a couple points that have been raised by the administration, just to make a record.

I think Secretary Brady has had discussions with Chairman BENTSEN on capital gains and what might happen. I do not know the details of that conversation, but I think it was satisfactory to Secretary Brady.

Senator BENTSEN is here. Based on what understanding they might have had, and based upon the other possibilities, we might get into one of these large budget-summit-type meetings, then I assume maybe child care, maybe capital gains, maybe a lot of things will be considered at that time. I do not want the record to reflect just those two matters.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as I have indicated privately to the distinguished Republican leader and publicly on many occasions, if such discussions do occur, it is my expectation that all matters would be on the table for discussion.

I do not know whether such discussions will occur, or if so when, but if and when they do, I publicly urge and would continue to urge that any and all matters that either side wishes to bring up be appropriate subjects for discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me state as late as this morning, I was discussing the issue with Secretary Brady and wanting to see if we could find accommodation. We have not yet.

We are trying on both sides to see if we can put a package together of which capital gains would be a part, but we will be talking about incentive saving, in addition, and seeing if we could find a way to pay for it given the budget limitation. So we are actively seeking to accomplish that.

Mr. DOLE. If the Senator will yield for maybe not a question, but as I understand, while there has been no firm commitment, at least we discussed if that could be done; we might have something before the August recess.

Mr. BENTSEN. That is the objective, but we have to come together and reach mutual agreement on it before we can be assured of that. That is what we are seeking to do.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as I have indicated to the distinguished Republican leader, we obviously now will proceed with the child care conference as promptly as possible. That is a major undertaking which is complex with a great deal of controversy. Neither I nor anyone else has any way of predicting how long that will take.

We are going to proceed. Assuming that is still under discussion at the time of such negotiations, I think clearly either party may raise any subject they wish.

Mr. DOLE. I think we are prepared to name conferees. We can now name conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Amendment No. 1512, agreed to, is as follows:

On page 2, beginning with the first item relating to section 213, strike all through the second item relating to section 213 and insert the following:

TITLE I—CHILD CARE SERVICES

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Act for Better Child Care".

SEC. 102. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the number of children living in homes where both parents work, or living in homes with a single parent who works, has increased dramatically over the last decade;

(2) the availability of quality child care is critical to the self-sufficiency and independence of millions of American families, including the growing number of mothers with young children who work out of economic necessity;

(3) high quality child care programs can strengthen our society by providing young children with the foundation on which to learn the basic skills necessary to be productive workers;

(4) the years from birth to age 6 are a critical period in the development of a young child;

(5) a significant number of parents do not have a real choice as they seek adequate child care for their young children because of limited incomes, insufficient State child care standards, and the inadequate supply of child care services in their community;

(6) high quality early childhood development programs provided during such period are cost effective because such programs can reduce the chances of juvenile delinquency and adolescent pregnancy and can improve the likelihood that children will finish high school and become employed;

(7) the number of quality child care arrangements falls far short of the number required for children in need of child care services;

(8) the rapid growth of participation in the labor force by mothers of children under the age of 1 has resulted in a critical shortage of quality child care arrangements for infants and toddlers;

(9) the lack of available child care services results in many preschool and school-age children being left without adequate supervision for significant parts of the day;

(10) many working parents who are unable to afford adequate child care services do not receive adequate financial assistance for such services from employers or public sources;

(11) because of the lack of affordable child care, a large number of parents are not able to work or to seek the training or education they need to become self sufficient;

(12) making adequate child care services available for parents who are employed, seeking employment, or seeking to develop employment skills promotes and strengthens the well-being of families and the national economy;

(13) the payment of the exceptionally low salaries to child care workers adversely affects the quality of child care services by making it difficult to retain qualified staff;

(14) several factors result in the shortage of quality child care options for children and parents, including—

(A) the inability of parents to pay for child care services;

(B) the lack of up-to-date information on child care services;

(C) the lack of training opportunities for staff in child care programs;

(D) the high rate of staff turnover in child care facilities; and

(E) the wide differences among the States in child care licensing and enforcement policies; and

(15) improved coordination of child care services will help to promote the most efficient use of child care resources.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this title are—

(1) to build on and to strengthen the role of the family by seeking to ensure that parents are not forced by lack of available programs or financial resources to place a child in an unsafe or unhealthy child care facility or arrangement;

(2) to promote the availability and diversity of quality child care services to expand child care options available to all families who need such services;

(3) to provide assistance to families whose financial resources are not sufficient to enable such families to pay the full cost of necessary child care services;

(4) to lessen the chances that children will be left to fend for themselves for significant parts of the day;

(5) to improve the productivity of parents in the labor force by lessening the stresses related to the absence of adequate child care services;

(6) to provide assistance to States to improve the quality of, and coordination among, child care programs;

(7) to increase the opportunities for attracting and retaining qualified staff in the field of child care to provide high quality child care services to children; and

(8) to strengthen the competitiveness of the United States by providing young children with a sound early childhood development experience.

SEC. 103. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this title:

(1) ADMINISTRATOR.—The term "Administrator" means the Administrator of Child Care appointed under section 115(a).

(2) CAREGIVER.—The term "caregiver" means an individual who provides a service directly to an eligible child on a person-to-person basis.

(3) CENTER-BASED CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "center-based child care provider" means a child care provider that provides child care services in a nonresidential facility.

(4) CHILD CARE CERTIFICATE.—The term "child care certificate" means a certificate that is issued by the State to parents who may use such certificate only as payment for child care services for an eligible child and that provides to an eligible child care provider a right to payment for such services at the same rate charged by that provider for comparable services to children whose parents are not eligible for certificates under this title or for child care assistance under any other Federal or State program.

(5) COMMUNITY-BASED ORGANIZATION.—The term "community-based organization" has the meaning given such term by section 4(5) of the Job Training and Partnership Act (29 U.S.C. 1503(5)).

(6) ELEMENTARY SCHOOL.—The term "elementary school" means a day or residential school that provides elementary education, as determined under State law.

(7) ELIGIBLE CHILD.—The term "eligible child" means an individual—

(A) who is less than 13 years of age;

(B) whose family income does not exceed 100 percent of the State median income for a family of the same size; and

(C) who—

(i) resides with a parent or parents who are working, seeking employment, or enrolled in a job training or educational program; or

(ii) is receiving, or needs to receive, protective services and resides with a parent or parents not described in clause (i).

(8) ELIGIBLE CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "eligible child care provider" means—

(A) a center-based child care provider, a group home child care provider, a family child care provider, or other provider of child care services for compensation that—

(i) is licensed or regulated under State law;

(ii) satisfies—

(I) the Federal requirements; and

(II) the State and local requirements;

applicable to the child care services it provides; and

(iii) not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this title, complies with State standards in each of the categories described in section 118(d) that are applicable to the child care services provided by such provider; or

(B) a child care provider that is 18 years of age or older who provides child care services only to an eligible child who is, by affinity or consanguinity, or by decree of court, the grandchild, niece, nephew, or sibling of such provider, if such provider complies with any State requirements that govern child care provided by relatives.

(9) FAMILY CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "family child care provider" means 1 individual who provides child care services for fewer than 24 hours per day, as the sole caregiver, and in a private residence.

(10) FAMILY SUPPORT SERVICES.—The term "family support services" means services that assist parents by providing support in parenting and by linking parents with community resources and with other parents.

(11) FULL-WORKING-DAY.—The term "full-working-day" means at least 10 hours per day.

(12) GROUP HOME CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term "group home child care provider" means 2 or more individuals who jointly provide child care services for fewer than 24 hours per day and in a private residence.

(13) HANDICAPPING CONDITION.—The term "handicapping condition" means any condition set forth in section 602(a)(1) of the Education of the Handicapped Act (20 U.S.C. 1401(a)(1)) or section 672(1) of the Education of the Handicapped Act (20 U.S.C. 1471(a)).

(14) INDIAN TRIBE.—The term "Indian tribe" has the meaning given it in section 4(b) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b(b)).

(15) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term "institution of higher education" has the meaning given such term in section 481(a)(1) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1088(a)(1)), except that with respect to a tribally controlled community college such term has the meaning given it in section 2(a)(5) of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1801(a)(5)).

(16) LEAD AGENCY.—The term "lead agency" means the agency designated under section 106(a) or the State Child Care Board appointed and identified by the chief executive officer of the State as the lead agency under section 6(a).

(17) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY.—The term "local educational agency" has the meaning given that term in section 198(a)(10) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2854(a)(10)).

(18) PARENT.—The term "parent" includes a legal guardian or other person standing in loco parentis.

(19) SCHOOL-AGE CHILD CARE SERVICES.—The term "school-age child care services" means child care services that are—

(A) provided during such times of the school day when regular instructional services are not in session; and

(B) not intended as an extension of or replacement for the regular academic program, but are intended to provide an environment which enhances the social, emotional, and recreational development of children of school age;

(20) SECONDARY SCHOOL.—The term "secondary school" means a day or residential school which provides secondary education, as determined under State law.

(21) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services unless the context specifies otherwise.

(22) SCHOOL FACILITIES.—The term "school facilities" means classrooms and related facilities used to provide education.

(23) SLIDING FEE SCALE.—The term "sliding fee scale" means a system of cost sharing between the State and a family based on income and size of the family.

(24) STATE.—The term "State" means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, or Palau.

(25) UNIT OF GENERAL PURPOSE LOCAL GOVERNMENT.—The term "unit of general purpose local government" means any city, county, town, township, parish, village, a combination of such general purpose political subdivisions including those in two or more States, or other general purpose political subdivisions of a State.

(26) TRIBAL ORGANIZATION.—The term "tribal organization" has the meaning given it in section 4(c) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b(c)).

(27) TRIBALLY CONTROLLED COMMUNITY COLLEGE.—The term "tribally controlled community college" has the meaning given it in section 2(a)(4) of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1801(a)(4)).

SEC. 104. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—To carry out this title, other than section 122, there are authorized to be appropriated $1,750,000,000 for the fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary in each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1994.

(b) STANDARDS IMPROVEMENT INCENTIVE GRANT PROGRAM.—Of the amounts appropriated in each of the fiscal years 1993 and 1994 under subsection (a), the Secretary shall make available 10 percent of such amounts in each such fiscal year to make grants under section 119. In no event shall amounts made available under this subsection be less than $35,000,000 nor more than $75,000,000 in each such fiscal year.

(c) CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To carry out section 122, there are authorized to be appropriated $100,000,000 for fiscal year 1990.

(2) AMOUNTS TO REMAIN AVAILABLE.—The amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) shall remain available for assistance to States for fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 without limitation.

SEC. 105. AMOUNTS RESERVED; ALLOTMENTS.

(a) AMOUNTS RESERVED.—

(1) TERRITORIES AND POSSESSIONS.—The Secretary shall reserve not to exceed one half of 1 percent of the amount appropriated under section 104(a) in each fiscal year for payments to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands of the United States, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and Palau, to be allotted in accordance with their respective needs.

(2) INDIANS.—The Secretary shall reserve an amount, not less than 1.5 percent and not more than 3 percent of the amount appropriated under section 104(a) in each fiscal year, to carry out subsection (c) regarding Indian children.

(b) STATE ALLOTMENT.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—From the remainder of the sums appropriated under section 104(a) for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot to each State (excluding jurisdictions referred to in subsection (a)(1)) an amount equal to the sum of—

(A) an amount that bears the same ratio to 50 percent of such remainder as the product of the young child factor of the State and the allotment percentage bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all States; and

(B) an amount that bears the same ratio to 50 percent of such remainder as the product of the school lunch factor of the State and the allotment percentage bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all the States.

(2) YOUNG CHILD FACTOR.—The term "young child factor" means the ratio of the number of children in the State who are less than 5 years of age to the number of children in all the States who are less than 5 years of age as provided by the most recent annual estimates of population in the States by the Census Bureau.

(3) SCHOOL LUNCH FACTOR.—The term "school lunch factor" means the ratio of the number of children in the State who are receiving free or reduced price lunches under the school lunch program established under the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1751 et seq.) to the number of children in all the States who are receiving free or reduced price lunches under such program as determined and updated annually by the Department of Agriculture.

(4) ALLOTMENT PERCENTAGE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The allotment percentage for a State is determined by dividing—

(i) the per capita income of all individuals in the United States; by

(ii) the per capita income of all individuals in the State.

(B) LIMITATIONS.—If a sum determined under subparagraph (A)—

(i) exceeds 1.2, then the allotment percentage of that State shall be considered to be 1.2; and

(ii) is less than 0.8, then the allotment percentage of the State shall be considered to be 0.8.

(C) PER CAPITA INCOME.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), per capita income shall be—

(i) determined at 2-year intervals;

(ii) applied for the 2-year period beginning on October 1 of the first fiscal year beginning on the date such determination is made; and

(iii) equal to the average of the annual per capita incomes for the most recent period of 3 consecutive years for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce at the time such determination is made.

(c) PAYMENTS FOR THE BENEFIT OF INDIAN CHILDREN.—

(1) TRIBAL ORGANIZATIONS.—From the funds reserved under subsection (a)(2), the Secretary may, upon the application of an Indian tribe or tribal organization enter into a contract with, or make a grant to such Indian tribe or tribal organization for a period of 3 years, subject to satisfactory performance, to plan and carry out programs and activities that are consistent with this title. Such contract or grant shall be subject to the terms and conditions of section 102 of the Indian Self-Determination Act (25 U.S.C. 450f) and shall be conducted in accordance with sections 4, 5, and 6 of the Act of April 16, 1934 (48 Stat. 596; 25 U.S.C. 655–657), that are relevant to such programs and activities.

(2) INDIAN RESERVATIONS.—In the case of an Indian tribe in a State other than the States of Oklahoma, Alaska, and California, such programs and activities shall be carried out on the Indian reservation for the benefit of Indian children.

(3) STANDARDS.—The Secretary shall establish, through the application process, standards applicable to child care services provided under such programs and activities. For purposes of establishing such standards, the Secretary shall take into consideration—

(A) the codes, regulations, and cultural factors of the Indian tribe involved, as expressed by such tribe or the tribal organization that represents such tribe; and

(B) the State standards, and licensing and regulatory requirements applicable to child care services provided in the State in which such program and activities are carried out.

(4) AVAILABILITY OF STATE CHILD CARE SERVICES.—For the purpose of determining whether to approve an application for a contract or grant under this subsection, the Secretary shall take into consideration the availability of child care services provided in accordance with this title by the State in which the applicant proposes to carry out a program to provide child care services.

(5) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—This subsection shall not be construed—

(A) to limit the eligibility of any individual to participate in any program carried out with assistance received under this title by a State; or

(B) to modify any requirement imposed on a State by any provision of this title.

(6) COORDINATION.—To the maximum extent practicable, the applicant for a grant or contract under this subsection and the State in which the applicant is located shall coordinate with each other their respective child care programs and activities, including child care programs and activities carried out with assistance received under this title.

(d) DATA AND INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall obtain from each appropriate Federal agency, the most recent data and information necessary to determine the allotments provided for in subsection (b).

(e) REALLOTMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any portion of the allotment under subsection (b) to a State that the Secretary determines is not required to carry out a State plan approved under section 107(d), in the period for which the allotment is made available, shall be reallotted by the Secretary to other States in proportion to the original allotments to the other States.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—

(A) REDUCTION.—The amount of any reallotment to which a State is entitled to under paragraph (1) shall be reduced to the extent that it exceeds the amount that the Secretary estimates will be used in the State to carry out a State plan approved under section 107(d).

(B) REALLOTMENTS.—The amount of such reduction shall be similarly reallotted among States for which no reduction in an allotment or reallotment is required by this subsection.

(3) AMOUNTS REALLOTTED.—For purposes of any other section of this title, any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection shall be considered to be part of the allotment made under subsection (b) to the State.

(f) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term "State" means any of the several 50 States, the District of Columbia, or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

SEC. 106. LEAD AGENCY.

(a) DESIGNATION.—The chief executive officer of a State desiring to participate in the program authorized by this title shall designate, in an application submitted to the Secretary under section 107(a), an appropriate State agency that meets the requirements of subsection (b) to act as the lead agency, or the State Child Care Board that is appointed by the chief executive and that meets the requirements of subsection (b), to serve as the lead agency.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) APPOINTMENT OF BOARD.—

(A) ESTABLISHMENT.—The chief executive officer of a State desiring to participate in the program authorized by this Act shall, if such chief executive officer has not designated a lead agency under subsection (a), establish a State Child Care Board that shall be composed of seven members to be appointed by such chief executive officer with the advice and consent of the legislature of such State.

(B) CHAIRPERSON.—The chief executive officer of the State shall designate a member of the Board to serve as chairperson. Such chairperson shall report directly to the chief executive officer and serve at the pleasure of such chief executive.

(C) TERMS, VACANCIES, COMPENSATION.—The chief executive officer of the State, with the advice and consent of the State legislature shall determine the terms of office of the members and chairperson of the Board established under subparagraph (A), the method to be used to fill vacancies on such Board, and the compensation to be received by such members.

(D) DUTIES.—The Board established under this paragraph shall act as the lead agency for the State for the purposes of this Act.

(2) ADMINISTRATION OF FUNDS.—The lead agency shall have the capacity to administer the funds provided under this title to support programs and services authorized under this title and to oversee the plan submitted under section 107(b).

(3) COORDINATION.—The lead agency shall have the capacity to coordinate the services for which assistance is provided under this title with the services of other State and local agencies involved in providing services to children.

(4) ESTABLISHMENT OF POLICIES.—The lead agency shall have the authority to establish policies and procedures for developing and implementing interagency agreements with other agencies of the State to carry out the purposes of this title.

(c) DUTIES.—The lead agency shall—

(1) assess child care needs and resources in the State, and assess the effectiveness of existing child care services and services for which assistance is provided under this title or under other laws, in meeting such needs;

(2) develop a plan designed to meet the need for child care services in the State for eligible children, including infants, preschool children, and school-age children, giving special attention to meeting the needs for services for low-income children, migrant children, children with a handicapping condition, foster children, children in need of protective services, children of adolescent parents who need child care to remain in school, and children with limited English-language proficiency;

(3) develop, in consultation with the State advisory committee on child care established under section 111, the State plan submitted to the Secretary under section 107(b);

(4) hold hearings, in cooperation with such State advisory committee on child care, annually in the State in order to provide to the public an opportunity to comment on the provision of child care services in the State under the proposed State plan;

(5) assist the chief executive officer in making such periodic reports to the Secretary as the Secretary may by rule require;

(6) coordinate the provision of services under this title with—

(A) other child care programs and services, and with educational programs, for which assistance is provided under any State, local, or other Federal law, including the State Dependent Care Development Grants Act (42 U.S.C. 9871 et seq.); and

(B) other appropriate services, including social, health, mental health, protective, and nutrition services, available to eligible children under other Federal, State, and local programs;

(7) as appropriate, identify resource and referral programs for particular geographical areas in the State that meet the requirements of section 112; and

(8) establish in accordance with subsection (d)(1) several local advisory councils that collectively represent the entire geographical area in the State.

(d) LOCAL ADVISORY COUNCILS.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—Each local advisory council established under subsection (c)(8) shall be composed of individuals who are collectively representative of the local geographical area for which they are appointed and of the ethnic characteristics of the population of such area. Such council shall be composed of individuals appointed from among the following:

(A) Parents of preschool children.

(B) Parents of school-age children.

(C) Individuals who are child care providers.

(D) The heads of Head Start agencies.

(E) The heads of local public agencies that provide social services or human resources.

(F) The heads of local education agencies.

(G) The heads of local public health agencies.

(H) The heads of resource and referral agencies.

(I) Individuals engaged locally in business.

(J) Representatives of units of local purpose government.

(K) Local representatives of nonprofit private organizations that provide funds for social services or human resources.

(L) Representatives of groups that engage in private activities relating to providing child care services.

(2) DUTIES.—Each local advisory council shall—

(A) assess the extent to which there is an unsatisfied need for child care services in the geographical area for which such council is appointed;

(B) submit to the lead agency, not less frequently than biennially, a report identifying the results of the implementation in such area of the State plan included in the application submitted under section 107;

(C) recommend to the lead agency the uses for which assistance received under this subchapter by the State should be expended in such area, and with respect to each such use, the amount of such funds that should be so expended;

(D) advise local child care providers regarding the means to collectively obtain training, supplies, and insurance relating to providing child care services; and

(E) otherwise assist the lead agency, and the State advisory committee on child care established under section 111 to carry out their respective duties.

(3) ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT.—The lead agency shall provide to such council such funds, and administrative support services (including personnel) directly or by contract, as the State determines necessary to enable such council to carry out its duties.

(4) CONFLICTS OF INTEREST.—A member of such council may not cast a vote on any matter that—

(A) may result in a financial benefit to such member; or

(B) under Federal, State, or local law would create or appear to create a conflict of interest if such vote were cast by such member.

(5) PUBLIC AWARENESS OF COUNCIL PARTICIPATION.—The Secretary shall require by rule that residents of each geographical area for which a local advisory council is appointed are informed of the opportunity to be appointed to such council.

(e) REDESIGNATION.—The chief executive officer of a State may modify the original decision concerning the designation of a lead agency if such chief executive determines that the original designation is not appropriate.

SEC. 107. APPLICATION AND PLAN.

(a) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive assistance under this title, a State shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary shall require by rule.

(b) PLAN.—The application of a State submitted under subsection (a) shall include an assurance that the State will comply with the requirements of this title and a State plan, that shall be prepared by the lead agency or the State Child Care Board established under section 6(b)(1), that is designed to be implemented during a 3-year period and that meets the requirements of subsection (c).

(c) REQUIREMENTS OF A PLAN.—

(1) LEAD AGENCY OR STATE CHILD CARE BOARD.—The plan shall identify the lead agency or the members of the State Child Care Board appointed under section 6(b)(1), the location of the offices of such Board, and shall contain a certification that the Board solicited input from the local advisory councils in preparing the plan.

(2) ADVISORY BODIES.—The plan shall demonstrate that the State will establish in accordance with section 111 a State advisory committee on child care.

(3) POLICIES AND PROCEDURES.—The plan shall set forth policies and procedures designed to ensure all of the following:

(A) That, to the maximum extent practicable—

(i) the parents of each eligible child who will receive child care services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4) are permitted to select the eligible child care provider that will provide such services to such child; and

(ii) if the State places such child under the methods provided in section 108(a)(1) (A) or (B), the State will attempt to place such child with the eligible child care provider selected by such parents.

(B) That—

(i) all providers of child care services for which assistance is provided under this title comply with all licensing or regulatory requirements (including registration requirements) applicable under State and local law; and

(ii) such requirements are imposed and enforced by the State uniformly on all licensed and regulated child care providers within the same category of care, which receive public funds.

This subparagraph shall not be construed to prohibit a State from imposing more stringent standards or requirements on child care providers who provide services for which assistance is provided under this title and who also receive State funds under any other law to provide child care services under a contract or other arrangement with the State.

(C) That procedures will be established to ensure that child care providers receiving assistance under this title or under other publicly-assisted child care programs comply, not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this title, with State child care standards in each of the categories described in section 118(d) that are applicable to the child care services provided by such providers, and comply with all applicable State and local licensing or regulatory requirements (including registration requirements).

(D) That the State will not—

(i) reduce the categories of child care providers licensed or regulated by the State on the date of enactment of this title, unless the State with the concurrence of the State advisory committee established under section 111, requests a waiver of this subparagraph and demonstrates, to the satisfaction of the Secretary, that the proposed reduction is necessary to increase access to and availability of eligible child care providers and will not jeopardize the health and safety of children.

(ii) reduce the level of standards applicable to child care services provided in the State and to the matters specified in sections 113(a) and 118(d) unless the State, with the concurrence of the State advisory committee established under section 111, requests a waiver of this subparagraph and demonstrates, to the satisfaction of the Secretary, that the proposed reduction is necessary to increase access to and availability of eligible child care providers and will not jeopardize the health and safety of children.

(E) That funds received under this title by the State will be used only to supplement, not to supplant, the amount of Federal, State, and local funds expended for the support of child care services and related programs in the State, except that States may use existing expenditures in support of child care services to satisfy the State matching requirement under section 117(b), but in no event shall such expenditures be used to satisfy the matching requirements of any other Federal program.

(F) That for each fiscal year the State will use an amount not to exceed 8 percent of the amount of funds received under section 105 by the State for such fiscal year to administer the State plan.

(G) That the State will pay funds under this title to eligible child care providers in a timely fashion to ensure the continuity of child care services to eligible children.

(H) That resource and referral services will be made available to families in the State.

(I) That each eligible child care provider described in section 103(8)(A) who provides services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4)—

(i) gives priority for provider services to children of families with very low income, taking into account family size, or children with special needs;

(ii) not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this title, complies with State child care standards in each of the categories described in section 118(d) that are applicable to the child care services provided by such providers;

(iii) if such eligible child care provider is regulated by a State educational agency that—

(I) administers any State law applicable to child care services;

(II) develops child care standards that meet or exceed the State child care standards in each of the categories described in section 118(d) that are applicable to the child care services provided by such providers, and the State licensing or regulatory requirements (including registration requirements); and

(III) enforces the standards described in subclause (II) that are developed by such agency, using policies and practices that meet or exceed the requirements specified in subparagraphs (A) through (K) of paragraph (11);

complies with the standards described in subclause (II) that are developed by such agency; and

(iv) complies with the State plan and the requirements of this title.

(J) That child care services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4) are available to children with a handicapping condition.

(K) That the State will review existing State regulations to determine if such regulations are appropriate for school-age child care services.

(L) That child care providers in the State are encouraged to develop personnel policies that include compensated time for staff undergoing training required under this title.

(M) Encourage the payment of adequate salaries and other compensation—

(i) to full- and part-time staff of child care providers who provide child care services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4);

(ii) to the extent practicable, to such staff in other major Federal and State child care programs; and

(iii) to other child care personnel, at the option of the State.

(N) That child care services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4) are available for an adequate number of hours and days to serve the needs of parents of eligible children, including parents who work nontraditional hours.

(4) CHILD CARE SERVICES.—The plan shall provide that—

(A) subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C), the State will use at least 70 percent of the amount allotted to the State in any fiscal year to provide child care services that meet the requirements of this title to eligible children in the State on a sliding fee scale basis and using funding methods provided for in section 108(a)(1), with priority being given for services to children of families with very low family incomes, taking into consideration the size of the family, or children with special needs;

(B) the State will use at least 10 percent of the funds reserved for the purposes specified in subparagraph (A) in any fiscal year to provide for the extension of part-day programs as described in section 108(b); and

(C) the State, with the approval of the Secretary, may use not to exceed 5 percent of the funds reserved for the purposes specified in subparagraph (A) in any fiscal year for any of the activities described in paragraph (6) if the State certifies that additional funds are needed to increase the availability of child care to meet the demand for such care.

(5) ACTIVITIES TO IMPROVE THE QUALITY OF CHILD CARE.—The plan shall provide that the State will use not less than 10 percent of the amount allotted to it in any fiscal year to do the following:

(A) Provide financial assistance, pursuant to procedures established under the State Dependent Care Development Grants Act (42 U.S.C. 9801 note), to private nonprofit organizations or public organizations (including units of general purpose local government) that meet the requirements of section 112 for the development, establishment, expansion, operation, and coordination of resource and referral programs specifically related to child care.

(B) Improve the monitoring of compliance with, and enforcement of, the licensing and regulatory requirements (including registration requirements) of the State.

(C) Provide training, technical assistance, and scholarship assistance in accordance with the provisions of subsections (b), (c), and (d) of section 113.

(D) Ensure that adequate salaries and other compensation are paid to full- and part-time staff who provide child care services for which assistance is provided under paragraph (4).

(E) Allow that the State will make grants to local libraries for the purchase and delivery of children's books, videos, tapes, and toys to licensed or certified family-based or group child-care providers, child care centers, or other providers that meet State eligibility requirements.

(6) ACTIVITIES TO INCREASE THE AVAILABILITY OF CHILD CARE.—Except as provided in paragraph (4)(C), the plan shall provide that the State will use not more than 12 percent of the amount allotted to it in any fiscal year for any of the following activities:

(A) Making grants or low-interest loans to existing and potential family child care providers and nonprofit child care providers to help such providers pay the cost of—

(i) establishing child care programs; and

(ii) making renovations and improvements in existing facilities to be used to carry out such programs.

(B) Making grants or low-interest loans to child care providers to assist such providers in meeting recommended Federal child care standards, or State and local child care standards, giving priority to providers receiving assistance under this title or under other publicly assisted child care programs and which serve children of families that have very low incomes.

(C) Providing funds for the child care public-private partnership activities described in section 114.

(D) Providing assistance for the establishment and operation of after school child care programs.

(E) Providing assistance for the temporary care of children who are sick and unable to attend child care programs in which such children are enrolled.

(F) Providing assistance for the establishment and operation of child care programs for homeless children.

(G) Providing assistance to link child care programs with programs designed to assist the elderly.

(H)(i) Establishing and administering a revolving loan fund from which any person desiring to make capital improvements to the principal residence of such person (within the meaning of section 1034 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) may obtain a loan in order to become a licensed or regulated family child care provider, pursuant to State and local law, and to comply with the standards applicable to such providers as established by the State in each of the categories described in section 118(d)(2).

(ii) To permit the use of funds provided under this title for the activity described in clause (i), the State shall set forth procedures and guidelines to carry out the purposes of such clause, including procedures—

(I) that provide assurances that only applicants who will be licensed or regulated to operate a child care facility in accordance with the provisions of State and local law and who will meet the State standards applicable to family child care services in each of the categories described in section 118(d)(2), benefit from loans made available pursuant to the provisions of clause (i);

(II) to assure that the revolving fund will be administered by the State and will provide loans to qualified applicants, pursuant to the terms and conditions established by such State, in an amount, determined by such State, that is not in excess of $1,500;

(III) to assure that funds used to carry out the purpose of clause (i) are transferred to such fund to provide capital for making loans;

(IV) to assure that interest and principal payments on loans and any other moneys, property, or assets derived from any action concerning such funds are deposited into such fund;

(V) to assure that all loans, expenses, and payments pursuant to the operation of the revolving loan fund are paid from such fund;

(VI) to assure that loans made from such fund are made to qualified applicants to enable such applicants to make capital improvements so that such applicants are able to become a licensed or regulated family child care provider, pursuant to State and local law and so that such applicants are able to meet the State standards applicable to such providers in each of the categories described in section 118(d)(2); and

(VII) that specify how such revolving loan fund will continue to be financed in subsequent years, such as through contributions by the State or by some other entity.

(I)(i) Making grants to States to enable such States to provide grants to school districts to enable such districts to establish or maintain extended day child care programs.

(ii) In order to use funds under this paragraph for the activity described in this subparagraph, the State shall—

(I) Administer the allotment provided to the State under this subparagraph shall be administered through the State educational agency; which

(II) shall establish requirements that school districts must meet in order to receive assistance under this subparagraph; and

(iii)(I) use amounts received under this subparagraph to provide grants to school districts to enable such districts to provide extended day child care;

(II) ensure that school districts that receive assistance under this subparagraph use such assistance to—

(aa) offset the start-up costs associated with the establishment of extended day child care programs;

(bb) conduct studies to determine the feasibility of establishing extended day child care programs;

(cc) provide for the equipping and staffing of extended day child care programs; and

(dd) offset any other costs that the State determines appropriate.

(III) Ensure that amounts received under this subparagraph are not used for ongoing maintenance or operational costs incurred by school districts.

(IV) Ensure that extended day child care programs that receive assistance under this subparagraph shall—

(aa) be developmentally appropriate and meet the diverse recreational, social, emotional, cultural, and educational needs of school-aged children; and

(bb) provide parents with the opportunity to participate in such programs.

(V) Ensure that each school district that receives assistance under this subparagraph coordinates the programs carried out with such assistance with other public entities and private non-profit community-based organizations that provide before and after-school child care;

(VI) Permit a school district to provide a before and after-school child care program in accordance with the provisions of this subparagraph through grants to or contracts with other public entities and eligible private nonprofit community-based organizations that provide before and after-school child care programs.

(VII) As used in this subparagraph:

(aa) The term "school district" means the public authority legally constituted and recognized in a State as the administrative agency for that district or county's public elementary or secondary schools.

(bb) The term "State educational agency" means the officer or agency primarily responsible for the State supervision of public elementary and secondary schools.

(J) Providing assistance for comprehensive child care demonstration projects within existing public school buildings that—

(i) ensure that year round, on-site, all day child care for children ages 3 to 5 (or of the age of entering kindergarten) and on-site before and after school child care for children ages 5 through 12, inclusive;

(ii) ensure the establishment of a family support system for parents (including a home visitation program);

(iii) provide support for local family day-care providers (including technical assistance, back-up support in case of illness, and training);

(iv) provide for information and referral and other specialized services;

(v) develop a sliding scale fee payment system for children using the system (based on the parents ability to pay);

(vi) provide for ongoing parental involvement in the planning, implementation, monitoring, and evaluation of such projects;

(vii) provide that such demonstration projects be operated by administrators trained in early childhood development;

(viii) provide for the use of trained child care workers in such demonstration projects, with a priority given to child care workers with credentials in early childhood education or child development, including the child development associate credential;

(ix) provide that salaries paid to child care workers in such demonstration projects shall—

(I) be not less than the rates paid for comparable services provided in the school or surrounding community, whichever is higher; and

(II) be comparable to salaries paid to school employees with equivalent responsibilities, experience and credentials; and that salary schedules for child care workers encourage child care workers to obtain early childhood credentials;

(x) assure that any child care services provided by such demonstration projects meet, at a minimum, regulatory standards set by the State and local government;

(xi) develop ways to improve the quality of child care services in such demonstrations; and

(xii) describe plans for monitoring and evaluating the effectiveness of such demonstration projects.

(K) Providing assistance for any other activity deemed by the State to be in accordance with the purposes of this paragraph.

(7) DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS.—The plan shall provide that funds will be distributed—

(A) to a variety of types of child care providers, including center-based child care providers, group home child care providers, and family child care providers; and

(B) equitably among child care providers to provide child care services in rural and urban areas.

(8) PAYMENTS.—The plan shall provide that for child care services for which assistance is provided under this title, an eligible child care provider shall have a right to payment at the same rate charged by providers in the State or substate area for comparable services to children of comparable ages and special needs whose parents are not eligible for certificates under this title or for child care assistance under any other Federal or State program.

(9) PRIORITY.—The plan shall provide that priority will be given, in distributing funds in the State, to child care providers that—

(A) in providing child care services assisted by such funds, will give priority to eligible children of families with very low income, or children with special needs;

(B) to the maximum extent feasible, provide child care services to a reasonable mix of children, including children from different socioeconomic backgrounds and children with a handicapping condition;

(C) provide opportunities for parent involvement in all aspects of providing such services; and

(D) to the maximum extent feasible, offer family support services.

(10) SLIDING FEE SCALE.—The plan shall provide for the establishment of a sliding fee scale that requires cost sharing based on the services provided to and the income of the families (adjusted for family size) of eligible children who receive services for which assistance is provided under this title.

(11) PARENTAL INVOLVEMENT.—The plan shall establish procedures for parental involvement in State and local planning, monitoring, and evaluation of child care programs and services in the State.

(12) ENFORCEMENT OF LICENSING AND OTHER REGULATORY REQUIREMENTS (INCLUDING REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS).—The plan shall provide that the State, not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this title, shall have in effect enforcement policies and practices that will be applicable to all licensed or regulated child care providers (including child care providers required to register) in the State, including policies and practices that—

(A) require personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to have knowledge concerning health and safety, child abuse prevention and detection, program management, and relevant law enforcement practices and policies;

(B) to the maximum extent feasible, have personnel requirements to ensure that individuals who are hired as licensing or regulatory inspectors are qualified to inspect and have inspection responsibility exclusively for children's services;

(C) require—

(i) personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to make not less than 1 unannounced inspection of each center-based child care provider in the State annually; and

(ii) personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to make periodic, unannounced inspections of all licensed or regulated family child care providers and group home child care providers in the State;

(D) require licensed or regulated child care providers (including registered child care providers) in the State—

(i) to have written program policies and to make a copy of such policies available to parents; and

(ii) to provide parents with unlimited access to their children and to providers caring for their children, during normal hours of operation of such providers and whenever children of such parents are in the care of such providers;

(E) implement a procedure to address complaints that will provide a reasonable opportunity for a parent, or child care provider, that is adversely affected or aggrieved by a decision of the lead agency or any program assisted under this title, to be heard by the State;

(F) prohibit the operator of a child care facility to take any action against an employee of such operator that would adversely affect the employment, or terms or conditions of employment, of such employee because such employee communicates a failure of such operator to comply with any applicable licensing or regulatory requirement;

(G) make consumer education information available to parents and the general public about licensing and regulatory requirements, complaint procedures, and policies and practices required by this paragraph;

(H) make readily available to parents the telephone number of the appropriate licensing or regulatory agency that parents may call regarding a failure of such provider to comply with any applicable licensing or regulatory requirement; and

(I) require the State to maintain a record of parental complaints and to make information regarding substantiated parental complaints available to the public on request.

(13) DATA COLLECTION.—The plan shall provide for the establishment of procedures for data collection by the State designed to show—

(A) by race, sex, ethnic origin, handicapping condition, and family income, how the child care needs of families in the State are being fulfilled, including information on—

(i) the number of children being assisted with funds provided under this title, and under other Federal child care and preschool programs;

(ii) the type and number of child care programs, child care providers, caregivers, and support personnel located in the State;

(iii) the average cost of child care in the State; and

(iv) such other information as the Secretary considers necessary to establish how funds provided under this title are being used;

(B) the extent to which the availability of child care has been increased; and

(C) how the purposes of this title and the objectives of the State set forth in the State plan are being met, including efforts to improve the quality, availability, and accessibility of child care; and shall provide that data collected by the State under this paragraph shall be submitted to the Secretary.

(d) APPROVAL OF APPLICATION.—The Secretary shall approve an application that satisfies the requirements of this section.

(e) SPECIAL RULE.—Subject to compliance with the standards, licensing, and enforcement requirements of sections 107 and 110, the Secretary shall strongly encourage States to undertake the activities described in subparagraphs (A) and (D) of subsection (c)(5).

SEC. 108. SPECIAL RULES FOR USE OF STATE ALLOTMENTS.

(a) FUNDING OF CHILD CARE SERVICES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The child care services referred to in section 107(c)(4) that are to be provided out of the allotment to a State, shall be provided—

(A) by contracts with or grants to eligible child care providers who agree to provide such services directly to eligible children;

(B) by grants to units of general purpose local government, or by contracts to nonprofit private organizations designated by the State, that agree to enter into contracts with eligible child care providers who agree to provide such services directly to eligible children; or

(C) by distributing child care certificates to parents of eligible children under such terms as the Secretary shall prescribe to enable the recipients of such certificates to purchase child care services from eligible child care providers.

(2) LIMITATION ON CERTIFICATES.—Child care certificates authorized by paragraph (1)(C) may be issued by a State only if a resource and referral program carried out by an organization that meets the requirements of section 112 is available to help parents locate child care services made available by eligible child care providers.

(3) NO ENTITLEMENT TO CONTRACT OR GRANT.—Nothing in this title shall be construed to entitle any child care provider or recipient of a child care certificate to any contract, grant or benefit, or to limit the right of any State to impose additional limitations or conditions on contracts or grants funded under this title.

(4) PROVIDE PARENTS WITH CHOICE.—Subject to the limitation described in paragraph (2), each State that receives assistance under this Act shall provide each parent of an eligible child who receives, or whose eligible child is cared for by a child care provider that receives, assistance under this Act with the option of—

(A) enrolling such child with an eligible child care provider that receives assistance through grants or contracts as provided under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1); or

(B) receiving a child care certificate as provided in paragraph (1)(C).

(b) PART-DAY PROGRAMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—At least 10 percent of the funds available for activities under section 107(c)(4)(A) shall be used by the State to enable child care providers to extend the hours of operation of the part-day programs described in paragraph (2) to provide full-working-day child care services throughout the year, in order to meet the needs of parents of eligible children.

(2) ELIGIBLE PROGRAMS.—As used in paragraph (1), the term "part-day programs" means—

(A) programs of schools and nonprofit child care providers (including community-based organizations) receiving State or local funds designated for preschool;

(B) programs established under the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9831 et seq.);

(C) preschool programs for which assistance is provided under chapter 1 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 (20 U.S.C. 3801 et seq.); and

(D) preschool programs for children with a handicapping condition.

(c) FACILITIES.—

(1) NEW FACILITIES.—No financial assistance provided under this title shall be expended for the construction of a new facility.

(2) EXISTING FACILITIES.—No financial assistance provided under this title shall be expended to renovate or repair any facility unless—

(A) the child care provider that receives such financial assistance agrees—

(i) in the case of a grant, to repay to the Secretary or the State, as the case may be, the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount of such grant as the value of the renovation or repair, as of the date such provider ceases to provide child care services in such facility in accordance with this title, bears to the original value of the renovation or repair; and

(ii) in the case of a loan, to repay immediately to the Secretary or the State, as the case may be, the principal amount of such loan outstanding and any interest accrued, as of the date such provider ceases to provide child care services in such facility in accordance with this title;

if such provider does not provide child care services in such facility in accordance with this title throughout the useful life of the renovation or repair; and

(B) if such provider is a sectarian agency or organization, the renovation or repair is necessary to bring such facility into compliance with health and safety requirements imposed by this title.

SEC. 109. PLANNING GRANTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A State desiring to participate in the programs authorized by this title that cannot fully satisfy the requirements of the State plan under section 107(b) without financial assistance may, in the first year that the State participates in the programs, apply to the Secretary for a planning grant.

(b) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary is authorized to make a planning grant to a State described in subsection (a) if the Secretary determines that—

(1) the grant would enable the State to fully satisfy the requirements of a State plan under section 107(b); and

(2) the State will apply, for the remainder of the allotment that the State is entitled to receive for such fiscal year.

(c) AMOUNT OF GRANT.—A grant made to a State under this section shall not exceed 1 percent of the total allotment that the State would qualify to receive in the fiscal year involved if the State fully satisfied the requirements of section 107.

(d) LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—A grant made under this section shall be considered to be expended for administrative costs by the State for purposes of determining the compliance by the State with the limitation on administrative costs imposed by section 107(c)(3)(F).

SEC. 110. CONTINUING ELIGIBILITY OF STATES.

A State shall be ineligible for assistance under this title after the expiration of the 3-year period beginning on the date of enactment of this title unless the State demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that—

(1) the State has established State child care standards in each of the categories described in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of section 118(d);

(2) all child care providers required to be licensed or regulated by the State—

(A) are so licensed or regulated; and

(B) are subject to the enforcement provisions referred to in the State plan; and

(3) all such providers who are receiving assistance under this title or under other publicly-assisted child care programs—

(A) satisfy the requirements of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (2); and

(B) satisfy the State child care standards in each of the categories described in section 118(d) that are applicable to the child care services provided by such providers.

SEC. 111. STATE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CHILD CARE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The chief executive officer of a State participating in the program authorized by this title shall—

(1) establish a State advisory committee on child care (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "committee") to assist the lead agency in carrying out the responsibilities of the lead agency under this title; and

(2) appoint the members of the committee.

(b) COMPOSITION.—The State committee shall be composed of not fewer than 21 and not more than 30 members who shall include—

(1) at least 1 representative of the lead agency designated under section 106(a);

(2) 1 representative of each of—

(A) the State departments of—

(i) human resources or social services;

(ii) education;

(iii) economic development; and

(iv) health; and

(B) other State agencies having responsibility for the regulation, funding, or provision of child care services in the State;

(3) at least 1 representative of providers of different types of child care services, including caregivers and directors;

(4) at least 1 representative of early childhood development experts;

(5) at least 1 representative of school districts and teachers involved in the provision of child care services and preschool programs;

(6) at least 1 representative of resource and referral programs;

(7) 1 pediatrician;

(8) 1 representative of a citizen group concerned with child care;

(9) at least 1 representative of an organization representing child care employees;

(10) at least 1 representative of the Head Start agencies in the State;

(11) parents of children receiving, or in need of, child care services, including at least 2 parents whose children are receiving or are in need of subsidized child care services;

(12) 1 representative of specialists concerned with children who have a handicapping condition;

(13) 1 representative of individuals engaged in business;

(14) 1 representative of fire marshals and building inspectors;

(15) 1 representative of child protective services; and

(16) 1 representative of units of general purpose local government.

(c) FUNCTIONS.—The committee shall—

(1) advise the lead agency on child care policies;

(2) provide the lead agency with information necessary to coordinate the provision of child care services in the State;

(3) otherwise assist the lead agency in carrying out the functions assigned to the lead agency under section 106(c);

(4) in conjunction with the lead State agency, review and evaluate child services for which assistance is provided under this title or under State law, in meeting the objectives of the State plan and the purposes of this title;

(5) make recommendations on the development of State child care standards and policies;

(6) participate in the public hearings required under section 106(c)(4); and

(7) perform other functions to improve the quantity and quality of child care services in the State.

(d) MEETINGS AND HEARINGS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the beginning of each fiscal year, the committee shall meet and establish the time, place, and manner of future meetings of the committee.

(2) MINIMUM NUMBER OF HEARINGS.—The committee shall have at least 1 public hearing each year at which the public shall be given an opportunity to express views concerning the administration and operation of the State plan.

(e) SUBCOMMITTEE ON LICENSING.—

(1) COMPOSITION.—The committee shall have a subcommittee on licensing (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "subcommittee") that shall be composed of the members appointed under paragraphs (2)(A)(iv), (3), (6), (7), (11), (14), (15), and (16) of subsection (b).

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The subcommittee shall review the law applicable to, and the licensing and regulatory requirements and the policies of, each licensing agency that regulates child care services and programs in the State unless the State has reviewed such law, requirements, and policies in the 3-year period ending on the date of the establishment of the committee under subsection (a).

(f) USE OF EXISTING COMMITTEES OR SUBCOMMITTEES.—To the extent that a State has established broadly representative State advisory groups, prior to the date of enactment of this title, that are comparable to the advisory committee or the subcommittee on licensing described in this section and focused exclusively on child care and early childhood development programs, such State shall be considered to be in compliance with subsections (a) through (c), or (e), as appropriate.

(g) REPORT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this title, the committee shall prepare and submit to the chief executive officer of the State involved a report that meets the requirements of paragraph (2).

(2) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—A report prepared under paragraph (1) shall contain information on child care services provided by center-based child care providers, group home child care providers, and family child care providers, including—

(A) a detailed statement of the findings and recommendations that result from the subcommittee review under subsection (e)(2), including a description of the current status of child care licensing, regulating, monitoring, and enforcement in the State;

(B) a detailed statement identifying and describing the deficiencies in the existing licensing, regulating, and monitoring programs of the State involved, including an assessment of the adequacy of staff to carry out such programs effectively, and recommendations to correct such deficiencies or to improve such programs; and

(C) comments on the relationship between the child care standards of the State and the national recommended child care standards established by the Secretary under section 118(e)(2).

(3) RECEIPT OF REPORT BY THE CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER OF THE STATE.—Not later than 60 days after receiving the report from the committee, the chief executive officer of the State shall transmit such report to the Secretary with—

(A) the comments of the chief executive officer of the State; and

(B) a plan for addressing deficiencies in, or improving the licensing, regulating, and monitoring, of the child care services and programs referred to in subsection (f)(2).

(h) SERVICES AND PERSONNEL.—

(1) AUTHORITY.—The lead agency is authorized to provide the services of such personnel, and to contract for such other services as may be necessary, to enable the committee and the subcommittee to carry out their functions under this title.

(2) REIMBURSEMENT.—Members of the committee shall be reimbursed, in accordance with standards established by the Secretary, for necessary expenses incurred by such members in carrying out the functions of the committee and the subcommittee.

(3) SUFFICIENCY OF FUNDS.—The Secretary shall ensure that sufficient funds are made available, from funds available for the administration of the State plan, to the committee and the subcommittee to carry out the requirements of this section.

SEC. 112. RESOURCE AND REFERRAL PROGRAMS.

(a) ELIGIBILITY FOR ASSISTANCE.—Grants or contracts made or entered into by the State, pursuant to section 107(c)(5)(A), shall be made to, or entered into with, private nonprofit organizations or public organizations (including units of general purpose local government) who shall provide resource and referral services to families in the State.

(b) FUNDING.—Organizations that receive assistance under subsection (a) shall carry out resource and referral programs—

(1) to identify all types of existing child care services, including services provided by individual family child care providers and by child care providers who provide child care services to children with a handicapping condition;

(2) to provide to interested parents information and referral regarding such services, including the availability of public funds to obtain such services;

(3) to provide or arrange for, at the discretion of the State, the provision of information, training, and technical assistance to existing and potential child care providers and to others (including businesses) concerned with the availability of child care services; and

(4) to provide information on the demand for and supply of child care services located in a community.

(c) REQUIREMENTS.—To be eligible for assistance as a resource and referral agency under subsection (a), an organization shall—

(1) have or acquire a database of information on child care services in the State or in a particular geographical area that the organization continually updates, including child care services provided in centers, group home child care settings, nursery schools, and family child care settings;

(2) have the capability to provide resource and referral services in a particular geographical area;

(3) be able to provide parents with information to assist them in identifying quality child care services;

(4) to the maximum extent practicable, notify all eligible child care providers in such area of the functions it performs and solicit such providers to request to be listed to receive referrals made by such organization; and

(5) otherwise comply with regulations promulgated by the State in accordance with subsection (d).

(d) LIMITATION ON INFORMATION.—In carrying out this section, an organization receiving assistance under subsection (a) as a resource and referral agency shall not provide information concerning any child care program or services which are not in compliance with the laws of the State and localities in which such services are provided.

SEC. 113. TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.

(a) MINIMUM REQUIREMENT.—A State receiving funds under this title shall require, not later than 3 years after the date of the enactment of this title, that all employed or self-employed individuals who provide licensed or regulated center-based, family and group home child care services (including registered child care services) in a State complete a minimum number of hours of inservice training each year in areas appropriate to the provision of child care services, such as training in health and safety, nutrition, first aid, the recognition of communicable diseases, child abuse detection and prevention, and the needs of special populations of children.

(b) GRANTS AND CONTRACTS FOR TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—

(1) GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.—The State may make grants to, and enter into contracts with State agencies, units of general purpose local government, institutions of higher education, and nonprofit organizations (including resource and referral organizations, child care food program sponsors, and family child care associations, as appropriate) to develop and carry out child care training and technical assistance programs under which preservice and continuing inservice training is provided to eligible child care providers, including family child care providers, and the staff of such providers including teachers, administrative personnel, and staff of resource and referral programs involved in providing child care services in the State.

(2) ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS FOR GRANTS AND CONTRACTS RELATING TO TRAINING FOR FAMILY CHILD CARE PROVIDERS.—To be eligible to receive a grant or enter into a contract for a training and technical assistance program for family child care providers under paragraph (1), a nonprofit organization shall—

(A) recruit and train family child care providers, including providers with the capacity to provide night-time and emergency child care services;

(B) operate resource centers to make developmentally appropriate curriculum materials available to family child care providers;

(C) provide grants to family child care providers for the purchase of moderate cost equipment to be used to provide child care services; and

(D) if appropriate, operate a system of substitute caregivers.

(3) ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS FOR GRANTS AND CONTRACTS RELATING TO TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—To be eligible to receive a grant, or enter into a contract under subsection (b) to provide technical assistance, an agency, organization, or institution shall agree to furnish technical assistance to child care providers to assist such providers—

(A) in understanding and complying with local regulations and relevant tax and other policies;

(B) in meeting State licensing, regulatory, and other requirements (including registration) pertaining to family child care providers.

(c) SCHOLARSHIP ASSISTANCE.—The State may provide scholarship assistance to—

(1) individuals who seek a nationally recognized child development associate credential for center-based or family child care in amounts sufficient to cover the costs involved in securing such credential; and

(2) caregivers who seek to obtain the training referred to in subsection (a) and whose income does not exceed such poverty line.

(d) CLEARINGHOUSE FUNCTION.—The State shall establish in the lead agency a clearinghouse function to collect and disseminate training materials to resource and referral agencies and child care providers throughout the State.

SEC. 114. CHILD CARE PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP.

(a) ACTIVITIES AUTHORIZED.—Each State using funds as described in section 107(c)(6)(C) shall design activities conducted with such funds to encourage businesses in the State to support or provide child care services to a reasonable mix of children, including children from different socioeconomic backgrounds, and children of employees and nonemployees. Such activities may include—

(1) disseminating information relating to—

(A) model child care programs appropriate for implementation by such businesses;

(B) flexible employee work schedules; and

(C) other technical assistance that would enable employers to establish and operate child care programs;

(2) making grants or loans on a competitive basis to assist employers in establishing innovative child care programs;

(3) establishing a demonstration program under which grants are made to local nonprofit private organizations to improve and expand child care services in cooperation with employees who contribute to the cost of such improvement or expansion;

(4) making grants to non-profit business organizations to provide technical information and assistance to enable employers to develop and operate child care services; and

(5) encouraging such businesses to participate in resource and referral activities carried out by organizations recognized under section 112.

(b) DUTIES OF STATE.—In carrying out the activities described in subsection (a), the State shall—

(1) consult with the State advisory committee on child care established under section 111;

(2) provide outreach to businesses participating in such activities; and

(3) encourage such businesses to contribute to the cost of carrying out such activities.

(c) BUSINESS PARTNERSHIP TASK FORCE.—The State may carry out subsection (a) in consultation with—

(1) a business task force appointed by the State from among representatives of businesses of various sizes in the State; and

(2) a State entity that administers laws relating to productive economic development.

(d) PRESIDENT'S AWARD FOR PROGRESSIVE MANAGEMENT POLICY.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT AND AWARD.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—There is established the President's Award for Progressive Management Policy to honor public and private sector employers who have—

(i) successfully implemented in their businesses family-oriented personnel programs and policies responsive to the child care needs of working parents; or

(ii) made significant contributions to child care projects in their communities.

(B) CITATION.—The President's Award for Progressive Management Policy shall consist of a certificate, plaque, or other appropriate citation.

(2) NOMINATION AND SELECTION.—

(A) NOMINATIONS.—Each year the President, acting through the Secretary of Labor, shall solicit nominations for the President's Award for Progressive Management Policy from State and local elected officials, educational institutions, State-based employee or business associations, or other State or local entities.

(B) RECIPIENTS.—The President, in conclusion with the Secretary of Labor, shall select not less than 3 such nominees from each State to receive the President's Award for that year.

(C) REPRESENTATION.—Of the nominees selected from each State to receive such awards, at least 1 shall represent—

(i) a small business;

(ii) an intermediate-size business; and

(iii) a large business.

(3) PRESENTATION.—The President shall present the President's Award each year with such ceremonies as the President may consider proper.

(4) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Labor shall promulgate such regulations as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 115. FEDERAL ADMINISTRATION OF CHILD CARE.

(a) ADMINISTRATOR OF CHILD CARE.—There is hereby established in the Department of Health and Human Services the position of Administrator of Child Care (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Administrator"). The Secretary shall appoint an individual to serve as the Administrator at the pleasure of the Secretary.

(b) DUTIES.—The Administrator shall—

(1) coordinate all activities of the Department of Health and Human Services relating to child care, and coordinate such activities with similar activities of other Federal entities;

(2) annually collect and publish State child care standards, including periodic modifications to such standards;

(3) evaluate activities carried out with funds provided under this title;

(4) act as a clearinghouse to collect and disseminate materials that relate to—

(A) the child care training and technical assistance programs described in section 113(b)(1); and

(B) studies that relate to the salaries paid to individuals employed to provide child care services; and

(5) provide technical assistance to assist States to carry out this title.

SEC. 116. FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT.

(a) REVIEW OF COMPLIANCE WITH STATE PLAN.—The Secretary shall review and monitor State compliance with this title and the plan approved under section 107(d) for the State.

(b) NONCOMPLIANCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to a State, finds that—

(A) there has been a failure by the State to comply substantially with any provision or any requirements set forth in the plan approved under section 107(d) for the State; or

(B) in the operation of any program or project for which assistance is provided under this title there is a failure by the State to comply substantially with any provision of this title;

the Secretary shall notify the State of the finding and that no further payments may be made to such State under this title (or, in the case of noncompliance in the operation of a program or activity, that no further payments to the State will be made with respect to such program or activity) until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply or that the noncompliance will be promptly corrected.

(2) ADDITIONAL SANCTIONS.—In the case of a finding of noncompliance made pursuant to this paragraph (1), the Secretary may, in addition to imposing the sanctions described in such paragraph, impose other appropriate sanctions, including recoupment of money improperly expended for purposes prohibited or not authorized by this title, and disqualification from the receipt of financial assistance under this title.

(3) NOTICE.—The notice required under paragraph (1) shall include a specific identification of any additional sanction being imposed under paragraph (2).

(c) ISSUANCE OF RULES.—The Secretary shall establish by rule procedures for—

(1) receiving, processing, and determining the validity of complaints concerning any failure of a State to comply with the State plan or any requirement of this title; and

(2) imposing sanctions under this section.

SEC. 117. PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) AMOUNT OF PAYMENT.—Each State that—

(A) has an application approved by the Secretary under section 107(d); and

(B) demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that it will provide from non-Federal sources the State share of the aggregate amount to be expended by the State under the State plan for the fiscal year for which it requests a grant; shall receive a payment under this section for such fiscal year in an amount (not to exceed its allotment under section 105 for such fiscal year) equal to the Federal share of the aggregate amount to be expended by the State under the State plan for such fiscal year.

(2) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share for each fiscal year shall be 80 percent.

(3) STATE SHARE.—The State share equals 100 percent minus the Federal share.

(4) LIMITATION.—A State may not require any private provider of child care services that receives or seeks funds made available under this title to contribute in cash or in kind to the State contribution required by this subsection.

(b) METHOD OF PAYMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), the Secretary may make payments to a State in installments, and in advance or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Secretary may determine.

(2) LIMITATION.—The Secretary may not make such payments in a manner that prevents the State from complying with the requirement specified in section 107(c)(3)(F).

(c) SPENDING OF FUNDS BY STATE.—Payments to a State from the allotment under section 105 for any fiscal year may be expended by the State in that fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

SEC. 118. NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON RECOMMENDED CHILD CARE STANDARDS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to improve the quality of child care services, the Secretary shall establish, not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this title, a National Advisory Committee on Recommended Child Care Standards (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Committee"), the members of which shall be appointed from among representatives of—

(A) the chief executive officers of the several States;

(B) State legislatures;

(C) units of general purpose local governments;

(D) businesses;

(E) individuals responsible for regulating the insurance industry within the States;

(F) religious institutions;

(G) different types of child care providers;

(H) persons who carry out resource and referral programs;

(I) child care, early childhood development, or early childhood education specialists;

(J) individuals who have expertise in pediatric health care, handicapping conditions, and related fields;

(K) organizations representing child care employees;

(L) individuals who have experience in the regulation of child care services; and

(M) parents who have been actively involved in community child care programs.

(2) APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS.—The Committee shall be composed of 20 members of which—

(A) 4 members shall be appointed by the President;

(B) 4 members shall be appointed by the majority leader of the Senate;

(C) 4 members shall be appointed by the minority leader of the Senate;

(D) 4 members shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and

(E) 4 members shall be appointed by the minority leader of the House of Representatives.

(3) CHAIRMAN.—The President shall appoint a chairman from among the members of the Committee.

(4) VACANCIES.—A vacancy occurring on the Committee shall be filled in the same manner as that in which the original appointment was made.

(b) PERSONNEL, REIMBURSEMENT, AND OVERSIGHT.—

(1) PERSONNEL.—The Secretary shall make available to the Committee office facilities, personnel who are familiar with child development and with developing and implementing regulatory requirements, technical assistance, and funds as are necessary to enable the Committee to carry out effectively its functions.

(2) REIMBURSEMENT.—

(A) COMPENSATION.—Members of the Committee who are not regular full-time employees of the United States Government shall, while attending meetings and conferences of the Committee or otherwise engaged in the business of the Committee (including traveltime), be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Secretary, but not exceeding the rate specified at the time of such service under GS–18 of the General Schedule established under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

(B) EXPENSES.—While away from their homes or regular places of business on the business of the Committee, such members may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in the Government service.

(3) OVERSIGHT.—The Secretary shall ensure that the Committee is established and operated in accordance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.).

(c) FUNCTIONS.—The Committee shall—

(1) review Federal policies with respect to child care services and such other data as the Committee may determine appropriate;

(2) not later than 180 days after the date on which a majority of the members of the Committee are first appointed, submit to the Secretary proposed recommended standards, as described in subsection (d), for child care services, taking into account the different needs of infants, toddlers, preschool and school-age children; and

(3) develop and make available to lead agencies, for distribution to resource and referral agencies in the State, model requirements for resource and referral agencies.

(d) RECOMMENDED CHILD CARE STANDARDS.—The proposed child care standards submitted by the Committee pursuant to subsection (c)(2) and the child care standards issued by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (e) shall be recommended standards and shall consist of only the following:

(1) CENTER-BASED CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards submitted with respect to child care services provided by center-based child care providers shall be limited to—

(A) group size limits in terms of the number of caregivers and the number and ages of children;

(B) the maximum appropriate child-staff ratios;

(C) preservice qualifications and background of child care personnel;

(D) requirements for inservice training in areas appropriate to the provision of such child care services, including a minimum number of training hours requirement;

(E) health and safety requirements for children and caregivers, including requirements for—

(i) the prevention and control of infectious diseases (including immunization and handwashing procedures);

(ii) injury prevention, control and treatment;

(iii) building and physical premises safety;

(iv) general health and nutrition;

(v) children with special needs; and

(vi) prevention of child abuse; and

(F) requirements for parental involvement in licensed and regulated child care services.

(2) FAMILY CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards submitted with respect to child care services provided by family child care providers shall be limited to—

(A) the maximum number of children for which child care services should be provided and the maximum number of infants for which child care services should be provided;

(B) the minimum age for caregivers;

(C) requirements for inservice training in areas appropriate to the provision of such child care services, including a minimum number of training hours requirement; and

(D) health and safety requirements for children and caregivers, including those described in paragraph (1)(E), as appropriate for family child care services.

(3) GROUP HOME CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards submitted with respect to child care services provided by group home child care providers shall be limited to the matters specified in paragraphs (1)(B) and (2).

(4) LIMITATION.—The Committee shall not submit any standard under subsection (c)(2) and the Secretary shall not establish any standard under subsection (e) that is less or more rigorous than the least or most rigorous standard that exists in any of the States at the time of the submission or establishment of such recommendation.

(e) CONSIDERATION AND ESTABLISHMENT OF RECOMMENDED STANDARDS.—

(1) NOTICE OF PROPOSED RULEMAKING.—Not later than 90 days after receiving the recommendations of the Committee, the Secretary shall—

(A) publish in the Federal Register for public comment for a period of at least 60 days—

(i) the proposed recommended standards of the Committee submitted under subsection (c)(2); and

(ii) the proposed recommended standards of the Secretary; and

(B) distribute the proposed recommended standards of the Committee and the proposed recommended standards of the Secretary to each lead agency and each State subcommittee on licensing for comment.

(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF RECOMMENDED CHILD CARE STANDARDS.—

(A) ISSUANCE OF RULES.—The Secretary shall—

(i) take into consideration any comments received by the Secretary with respect to the standards published under paragraph (1); and

(ii) not later than 180 days after publication of such standards, issue rules establishing recommended child care standards for purposes of this title. Such standards shall include the nutrition requirements issued, and revised from time to time, under section 117(g)(1) of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1766(g)(1)).

(B) AMENDING STANDARDS.—The Secretary may amend any standard first established under subparagraph (A), except that such standard may not be modified, by amendment or otherwise, to make such standard less comprehensive or less stringent than it is when first established.

(C) EXTENDED PERIOD FOR COMMENT.—If the Secretary proposes a recommended standard under paragraph (2) that no State has a requirement concerning, as of the time that such standard is recommended, the Secretary shall provide an additional 30 days during which States may submit comments concerning such standard.

(3) ADDITIONAL COMMENTS.—The National Committee may submit to the Secretary and to the Congress such additional comments on the recommended child care standards established under paragraph (2) as the National Committee considers appropriate.

(f) TERMINATION OF COMMITTEE.—The National Committee shall cease to exist 90 days after the date the Secretary establishes recommended child care standards under subsection (e)(2).

SEC. 119. CHILD CARE STANDARDS IMPROVEMENT INCENTIVE GRANT PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary shall establish a child care standards improvement incentive grant program to make grants to eligible States to assist such States in improving State child care standards in the categories described in section 118(d).

(b) ELIGIBLE STATES.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section a State shall prepare and submit to the Secretary an application in accordance with subsection (c).

(c) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, a State shall prepare, and submit to the Secretary, an application at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary shall require, including—

(1) a certification that the State has consulted with the licensing subcommittee of the State in preparing the application and has provided an opportunity for public comment on such;

(2) an assurance that the State will meet the matching requirements of subsection (g);

(3) information that shall—

(A) describe the present level of child care standards that are in effect in such State;

(B) describe the prospective use of such grant; and

(C) describe the expected improvement in the child care standards of the State;

(4) an assurance that the State will use any amounts received under a grant under this section to specifically improve its child care standards; and

(5) any other information that the Secretary determines appropriate.

(d) CONSIDERATION AND AWARDING OF GRANTS BY SECRETARY.—

(1) INITIAL GRANTS.—The Secretary shall consider applications submitted by the States under subsection (c), and shall award the initial grants under this section to States on a competitive basis after considering the following criteria—

(A) the relative quality of the existing child care standards of the State as described in the application in comparison to such standards of other States that submit applications;

(B) the level of child care standards that the State desires to adopt and the State plans for achieving this improved level of standards; and

(C) the relative fiscal capacity of the State in comparison to that of other States that submit applications.

(2) SUBSEQUENT GRANTS.—In determining whether a State that submits an application under subsection (c) for subsequent grant under this section after the expiration of the previous grant, the Secretary shall award such grant based on the compliance of the State with the application for the previous grant. The Secretary may award a subsequent grant to a State that has not complied with such application of the State if the Secretary determines that factors beyond the control of the State significantly contributed to such non-compliance.

(e) USE OF GRANTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—States that receive grants under this section shall use amounts provided under such grants to specifically carry out the State application for improving its child care standards, as submitted by the State under subsection (c).

(2) SPECIFIC USES.—In meeting the requirement of paragraph (1), a State may use such amounts for any of the activities described in section 107(c)(5) if such activities are directly related to the State application for improving its child care standards.

(f) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—

(1) TERM OF GRANTS.—Grants made under this section shall be for a 2-year period with no State receiving more than three consecutive grants.

(2) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—The Secretary may transfer funds made available for grants under this section to the amounts made available for allotments under section 105(b) if the Secretary determines that there is an insufficient number of qualified applications for grants under this section to utilize the entire amount of funds made available for such grants.

(3) TERMINATION.—The grant program established under this section shall terminate 8 years after the date of enactment of this title, or on the date on which funds are no longer appropriated under section 104(a), whichever occurs first.

(g) MATCHING REQUIREMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each State that receives a grant under this section shall provide from non-Federal sources the State share of the aggregate amount of the grant.

(2) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share for each fiscal year shall be 80 percent.

(3) STATE SHARE.—The State share equals 100 percent minus the Federal share.

(4) LIMITATION.—A State may not require any private provider of child care services that receives or seeks funds made available under this title to contribute in cash or in kind to the State contribution required by this subsection.

SEC. 120. NATIONAL STUDY ON CHILD CARE STANDARDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 4 years after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary, in consultation with the Office of Technology Assessment, shall conduct a national study on child care standards that is based on the data collected by the States under section 107(c)(13) and the State reports submitted under section 111, and shall prepare and submit, to the appropriate committees of Congress a report concerning such study.

(b) CONTENTS.—The report submitted under subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) an assessment of the compliance of the States with the requirement described in section 110 that the States have in place, not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this title, State standards in each of the categories described in section 118(d);

(2) an assessment of the propriety of the recommendations of the National Advisory Committee on Recommended Child Care Standards and a summary of the level of standards in each State in relation to such recommendations;

(3) an assessment of the progress of the States and the activities undertaken by the States since the date of enactment of this title to meet the recommended child care standards; and

(4) recommendations for Congress concerning efforts that should be undertaken to further improve the access of the public to quality and affordable child care in the United States.

SEC. 121. LIMITATIONS ON USE OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES.

(a) SECTARIAN PURPOSES AND ACTIVITIES.—No financial assistance provided under this title shall be expended for any sectarian purpose or activity, including sectarian worship and instruction, except that this subsection shall not apply to funds received by any eligible provider resulting from the distribution of a child care certificate to a parent under section 108(a)(1)(C). Financial assistance provided under this title shall not be expended in a manner inconsistent with the Constitution.

(b) Subsection (a) shall not apply to funds received by an eligible child care provider as defined in section 103(8)(B).

(c) TUITION.—With regard to services provided to students enrolled in grades 1 through 12, no financial assistance provided under this title shall be expended for—

(1) any services provided to such students during the regular school day;

(2) any services for which such students receive academic credit toward graduation; or

(3) any instructional services which supplant or duplicate the academic program of any public or private school.

SEC. 122. NONDISCRIMINATION.

(a) FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—Any financial assistance provided under this title, including a loan, grant, or child care certificate, shall constitute Federal financial assistance for purposes of title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000d et seq.), title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (20 U.S.C. 1681, et seq.), the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794 et seq.), the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.), and the regulations issued thereunder.

(b) RELIGIOUS DISCRIMINATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to modify or affect the provisions of any other Federal law or regulation that relates to discrimination in employment on the basis of religion, except that a sectarian organization may require that employees adhere to the religious tenets and teachings of such organization and further, such organization may require that employees adhere to rules forbidding the use of drugs or alcohol.

(2) DISCRIMINATION AGAINST CHILD.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—A child care provider that receives assistance under this title shall not discriminate against any child on the basis of religion in providing child care services.

(B) NON-FUNDED CHILD CARE SLOTS.—Nothing in this section shall prohibit a child care provider from selecting children for child care slots that are not funded directly with assistance provided under this title because such children or their family members participate on a regular basis in other activities of the organization that owns or operates such provider.

(3) EMPLOYMENT IN GENERAL.—

(A) PROHIBITION.—A child care provider that receives assistance under this title shall not discriminate in employment on the basis of the religion of the prospective employee if such employee's primary responsibility is or will be working directly with children in the provision of child care services.

(B) QUALIFIED APPLICANTS.—If two or more prospective employees are qualified for any position with a child care provider receiving assistance under this title, nothing in this section shall prohibit such child care provider from employing a prospective employee who is already participating on a regular basis in other activities of the organization that owns or operates such provider.

(C) PRESENT EMPLOYEES.—This paragraph shall not apply to employees of child care providers receiving assistance under this title if such employees are employed with the provider on the date of enactment of this title.

(4) EMPLOYMENT AND ADMISSION PRACTICES.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (2) and (3), if assistance provided under this title, and any other Federal or State program, amounts to 80 percent or more of the operating budget of a child care provider that receives such assistance, the Secretary shall not permit such provider to receive any further assistance under this title unless the grant or contract relating to the financial assistance, or the employment and admissions policies of the provider, specifically provides that no person with responsibilities in the operation of the child care program, project, or activity of the provider will discriminate against any individual in employment, if such employee's primary responsibility is or will be working directly with children in the provision of child care, or admissions because of the religion of such individual.

(5) SEVERABILITY.—If any provision of this section or the application thereof to any individual or circumstance is held invalid, the invalidity shall not affect other provisions or applications of this title which can be given effect without regard to the invalid provision or application, and to this end the provisions of this section shall be severable.

(c) EFFECT ON STATE LAW.—Nothing in this title shall be construed to supersede or modify any provision of a State constitution or State law that prohibits the expenditure of public funds in or by sectarian institutions.

SEC. 123. PRESERVATION OF PARENTAL RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES.

Nothing in this title shall be construed or applied in any manner to infringe upon or usurp the moral and legal rights and responsibilities of parents or legal guardians.

SEC. 124. CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP.

(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section—

(1) to increase the availability of child care by alleviating the serious difficulty faced by child care providers in obtaining affordable liability insurance; and

(2) to provide States with a sufficient capital base for liability insurance purposes that may be increased or maintained through mechanisms developed by the State.

(b) FORMATION OF CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP.—

(1) ASSISTANCE IN FORMATION AND OPERATION OF GROUP.—Any State may assist in the establishment and operation of a child care liability risk retention group in the manner provided under this section.

(2) CHILD CARE LIABILITY RISK RETENTION GROUP DEFINED.—As used in this section, the term "child care liability risk retention group" means any corporation (or other limited liability association)—

(A) whose members are licensed or regulated child care providers pursuant to State and local law and who, not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this title, comply with State child care standards in each of the categories described in section 118(d) that are applicable to the child care services provided by such members; and

(B) which otherwise satisfies the criteria for a risk retention group under section 2(4) of the Liability Risk Retention Act of 1986 (15 U.S.C. 3901(4)).

(c) STATE APPLICATIONS.—

(1) APPLICATIONS.—To qualify for assistance under this section, a State shall submit an application to the Secretary, at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary may reasonably require, including information that meets the requirements of subsection (b) of this section.

(2) CONTENT OF STATE APPLICATION.—

(A) LEAD AGENCY.—The application shall identify the lead agency that has been designated and that is to be responsible for the administration of funds provided under this section.

(B) PARTICIPANTS IN RISK RETENTION GROUP.—The application shall assure that all participants in the child care liability risk retention group are licensed or regulated child care providers pursuant to State and local law who, not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this title, comply with State child care standards in each of the categories described in section 118(d) that are applicable to the child care services they provide. In addition, the applicant shall provide for maximum membership of family-based child care providers in the group.

(C) USE OF FUNDS.—The application shall provide that the State shall use at least the amount allotted to the State in any fiscal year to establish or operate a child care liability risk retention group.

(D) CONTINUATION OF RISK RETENTION GROUP.—The application shall contain provisions that specify how the child care liability risk retention group will continue to be financed after fiscal year 1992, including financing through contributions by the State or by members of such group.

(d) FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT.—

(1) REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS.—The Secretary shall review and approve State applications submitted in accordance with this section and shall monitor State compliance with the provisions of this section.

(2) FINDING OF NONCOMPLIANCE.—If the Secretary, after reasonable notice to a State and opportunity for a hearing, finds—

(A) that there has been a failure to comply substantially with any provision or any requirements set forth in the State application of that State; or

(B) that there is a failure to comply substantially with any applicable provision of this section, the Secretary shall notify such State of the findings and of the fact that no further payments may be made to such State under this section until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply, or that the noncompliance will be promptly corrected.

(e) ALLOTMENT TO STATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make an allotment to each State from the sums appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section using the same allotment formula established under section 105.

(2) STATE ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Of the amount allotted to a State pursuant to paragraph (1), an amount not to exceed 10 percent shall be used by such State to provide for the administrative costs of carrying out such program.

(f) PAYMENTS.—

(1) ENTITLEMENT.—Each State for which an application has been approved by the Secretary under this section shall be entitled to payments under this subsection for each fiscal year in an amount not to exceed its allotment under subsection (e) to be expended by the State in accordance with the terms of the application for the fiscal year for which the grant is to be made.

(2) METHOD OF PAYMENTS.—The Secretary may make payments to a State in installments, and in advance or, by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Secretary may determine.

(3) STATE SPENDING OF PAYMENTS.—Payments to a State from the allotment under subsection (e) for any fiscal year must be expended by the State in that fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

SEC. 125. HEAD START ACT AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 639 of the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9834) is amended by striking "$1,405,000,000" and inserting "$1,552,000,000".

SEC. 126. FAMILY MEMBERS TRAINING OR LICENSING.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to require, or to mandate the States to require, the training or licensing of individuals to provide child care to members of their families.

SEC. 127. STATE ALLOTMENTS.

(a) If, for any fiscal year for which funds are appropriated to carry out this Act, a State does not seek or receive assistance under this Act, then

(i) for purposes of sections 105, 106, 107, 109, 110, 117, 119, a reference applicable to such State (other than a reference to State law, including licensing and regulatory requirements) shall be deemed to be a reference to each unit of general purpose local government in the State;

(ii) the Secretary shall allot to such unit the pro rata share of such unit attributable to the amount that is allotted to the State under section 105(b); and

(iii) each such unit is eligible to receive assistance under this Act if such unit complies with the requirements of such sections, other than any of such requirements that is expressly waived by the Secretary because its application to such unit is inappropriate.

(b) For purposes of making the allotment required by subparagraph (A), the number of children in a geographical area that lies in the jurisdiction of more than 1 unit of general purpose local government shall be divided equally among all units of general purpose local government—

(i) in which such area lies; and

(ii) which submit an application under this section.

(c) In order to receive funds under subsection (a), a unit of general purpose local government shall submit to the chief executive officer of the State a copy of the plan otherwise required of the State under section 107, assuring the compliance of the unit of general purpose local government with the requirements of the plan, as appropriate, and shall submit a report to the State consistent with the terms and provisions of the report otherwise required of the State under section 111(g).

SEC. 128. SEVERABILITY.

The provisions of this title are declared to be separable. If any one or more provisions of this title is held to be unconstitutional, the same shall not affect the validity of other provisions of this title.

TITLE II—INTERNAL REVENUE CODE PROVISIONS

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Child Care and Health Insurance Act of 1989".

Subtitle A—Tax Credit for Certain Health Insurance Premiums and Child Care and Supplemental Earned Income Credit for Families With Young Children

SEC. 211. CREDIT FOR HEALTH INSURANCE PREMIUM COSTS.

(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—Paragraph (1) of section 21(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual who maintains a household which includes as a member 1 or more qualifying individuals, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the sum of—

"(A) the applicable percentage of the employment-related expenses paid by such individual during the taxable year, plus

"(B) the credit percentage of the qualified health insurance expenses paid by such individual during the taxable year.".

(b) CREDIT PERCENTAGE.—Section 21(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) CREDIT PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the term 'credit percentage' means 50 percent reduced (but not below zero) by 14.29 percentage points for each $1,000 (or fraction thereof) by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for the taxable year exceeds $12,000.

"(B) SPECIAL RULE.—In the case of taxable years beginning before 1994, subparagraph (A) shall be applied by substituting in the case of any taxable year beginning in—

"(i) 1991, '35 percent',

"(ii) 1992, '40 percent', and

"(iii) 1993, '45 percent', for '50 percent'."

(c) LIMITATIONS.—

(1) DOLLAR LIMITATION.—Section 21(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) DOLLAR LIMIT ON EMPLOYMENT-RELATED EXPENSES.—The amount of the employment-related expenses paid during any taxable year which may be taken into account under subsection (a)(1)(A) shall not exceed—

"(A) $2,400 if there is 1 qualifying individual with respect to the taxpayer for such taxable year, or

"(B) $4,800 if there are 2 or more such qualifying individuals.

The amount determined under subparagraph (A) or (B) (whichever is applicable) shall be reduced by the aggregate amount excludable from gross income under section 129 for the taxable year.

"(2) QUALIFIED HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENSES.—The amount of the qualified health insurance expenses paid during any taxable year which may be taken into account under subsection (a)(1)(B) shall not exceed $1,000.".

(2) EARNED INCOME LIMITATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 21(d) of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR QUALIFIED HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENSES.—The amount of the qualified health insurance expenses paid during any taxable year which may be taken into account under subsection (a)(1)(B) shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the earned income of the taxpayer for the taxable year, over

"(B) the amount of employment-related expenses taken into account under subsection (a)(1)(A).".

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (1) of section 21(d) of such Code is amended by striking "subsection (a)" and inserting "subsection (a)(1)(A)".

(d) DEFINITIONS AND RULES.—

(1) QUALIFIED HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENSES.—Section 21(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) QUALIFIED HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENSES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified health insurance expenses' means amounts paid during the taxable year for insurance—

"(i) which constitutes medical care (within the meaning of section 213(d)(1)(C)), and

"(ii) under which coverage includes at least 1 qualifying individual.

For purposes of this subparagraph, the rules of section 213(d)(6) shall apply.

"(B) QUALIFYING INDIVIDUAL.—For purposes of this paragraph and subsection (a)(1)(B), the term 'qualifying individual' means an individual described in paragraph (1)(A), except that such paragraph shall be applied by substituting 'age of 19' for 'age of 13'.

"(C) ELECTION NOT TO TAKE CREDIT.—A taxpayer may elect for any taxable year to have amounts described in subparagraph (A) not treated as qualified health insurance expenses.".

(2) IDENTIFYING INFORMATION REQUIRED.—Section 21(e)(9) of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In the case of the credit allowable under subsection (a)(1)(B) for qualified health insurance expenses, the Secretary may require an insurance policy number in addition to (or in lieu of) the taxpayer identification number.".

(e) COORDINATION WITH DEDUCTION FOR SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.—Section 162(l) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (6) and by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) COORDINATION WITH HEALTH INSURANCE PREMIUM CREDIT.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any amount taken into account in computing the amount of the credit allowed under section 21.".

(f) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The heading for section 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by inserting "; HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENSES" after "EMPLOYMENT".

(2) The item relating to section 21 in the table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting "; health insurance expenses" after "employment".

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

SEC. 212. DEPENDENT CARE AND HEALTH INSURANCE PREMIUM CREDIT MADE REFUNDABLE.

(a) CREDIT MADE REFUNDABLE.—Section 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to credit for household and dependent care services) is amended by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (g) and by inserting after subsection (e) the following new subsection:

"(f) CREDIT REFUNDABLE FOR LOW AND MODERATE INCOME TAXPAYERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in section 6401(b)(1), for purposes of this title, in the case of an applicable taxpayer, the credit allowable under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall be treated as a credit allowable under subpart C of this part.

"(2) APPLICABLE TAXPAYER.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'applicable taxpayer' means a taxpayer whose adjusted gross income for the taxable year does not exceed $28,000.

"(3) COORDINATION WITH ADVANCE PAYMENTS AND MINIMUM TAX.—Rules similar to the rules of subsections (g) and (h) of section 32 shall apply with respect to the portion of any credit to which this subsection applies.".

(b) LIMITATION ON REFUNDABLE DEPENDENT CARE PORTION OF CREDIT.—Subsection (b) of section 6401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to excessive credits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR SECTION 21(f).—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the overpayment determined under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by 10 percent of the portion of such overpayment attributable to the credit allowed under section 21(a)(1)(A) and treated as allowable under subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 by reason of section 21(f).

"(B) ORDERING RULE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), paragraph (1) shall be treated as having been applied as if the amount of tax described in such paragraph (if any) was first reduced by the portion of the credit allowed under section 21(a)(1)(A) and treated as allowable under subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 by reason of section 21(f)."

(c) CERTAIN SUBSIDIZED EXPENSES NOT ELIGIBLE FOR CREDIT.—Section 21(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to special rules) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(10) SUBSIDIZED EXPENSES.—No expense shall be treated as an employment-related expense or qualified health insurance expense to the extent—

"(A) such expense is paid, reimbursed, or subsidized (whether by being disregarded for purposes of another program or otherwise) by the Federal Government, a State or local government, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, and

"(B) the payment, reimbursement, or subsidy of such expense is not includible in the gross income of the recipient."

(d) ADVANCE PAYMENT OF CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 25 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by inserting after section 3507 the following new section:

"SEC. 3507A. ADVANCE PAYMENT OF DEPENDENT CARE CREDIT.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, every employer making payment of wages with respect to whom a dependent care eligibility certificate is in effect shall, at the time of paying such wages, make an additional payment equal to such employee's dependent care advance amount.

"(b) DEPENDENT CARE ELIGIBILITY CERTIFICATE.—For purposes of this title, a dependent care eligibility certificate is a statement furnished by an employee to the employer which—

"(1) certifies that the employee will be eligible to receive the credit provided by section 21 for the taxable year,

"(2) certifies that the employee reasonably expects to be an applicable taxpayer (within the meaning of section 21(f)(2)) for the taxable year,

"(3) certifies that the employee does not have a dependent care eligibility certificate in effect for the calendar year with respect to the payment of wages by another employer,

"(4) states whether or not the employee's spouse has a dependent care eligibility certificate in effect,

"(5) states the number of qualifying individuals in the household maintained by the employee, and

"(6) estimates the amount of employment-related expenses (as defined in section 21(b)(2)) and qualified health insurance expenses (as defined in section 21(b)(3)) for the calendar year.

For purposes of this section, a certificate shall be treated as being in effect with respect to a spouse if such a certificate will be in effect on the first status determination date following the date on which the employee furnishes the statement in question.

"(c) DEPENDENT CARE ADVANCE AMOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this title, the term 'dependent care advance amount' means, with respect to any payroll period, the amount determined—

"(A) on the basis of the employee's wages from the employer for such period,

"(B) on the basis of the number of qualifying individuals in the household maintained by the employee,

"(C) on the basis of the employee's estimated employment-related expenses and qualified health insurance expenses included in the dependent care eligibility certificate, and

"(D) in accordance with tables provided by the Secretary.

"(2) ADVANCE AMOUNT TABLES.—The tables referred to in paragraph (1)(D) shall be similar in form to the tables prescribed under section 3402 and, to the maximum extent feasible, shall be coordinated with such tables and the tables prescribed under section 3507(c).

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—Any term used in this section which is also used in section 21 shall have the same meaning as given in section 21.

"(e) OTHER RULES.—For purposes of this section, rules similar to the rules of subsections (d) and (e) of section 3507 shall apply.".

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 25 of such Code is amended by adding after the item relating to section 3507 the following new item:

"Sec. 3507A. Advance payment of dependent care credit.".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this subsection, the amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

(2) ADVANCE PAYMENT OF CREDIT.—The amendments made by subsection (d) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991.

SEC. 213. SUPPLEMENTAL EARNED INCOME CREDIT FOR FAMILIES WITH YOUNG CHILDREN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 are amended to read as follows:

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—There is allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle for the taxable year an amount equal to the sum of the following amounts:

"(1) GENERAL CREDIT.—In the case of an eligible individual, an amount equal to 14 percent of so much of the earned income for the taxable year as does not exceed $5,714.

"(2) SUPPLEMENT FOR YOUNG CHILDREN.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an eligible individual with 1 or more qualifying children, an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(i) the applicable percentage of so much of the earned income for the taxable year as does not exceed $5,714, or

"(ii) $750 ($500 for an eligible individual with only 1 qualifying child).

"(B) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—The term 'applicable percentage' means 10 percent (7 percent for an eligible individual with only 1 qualifying child).

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) GENERAL CREDIT.—The amount of the credit allowable to a taxpayer under subsection (a)(1) for any taxable year shall be reduced (but not below zero) by 10 percent of so much of the adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) of the taxpayer for the taxable year as exceeds $9,000.

"(2) SUPPLEMENT FOR YOUNG CHILDREN.—The amount of the credit allowable to a taxpayer under subsection (a)(2) for any taxable year shall be reduced (but not below zero) by 15 percent (10 percent for an eligible individual with only 1 qualifying child) so much of the adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) of the taxpayer for the taxable year as exceeds the lesser of—

"(A) $10,000, as adjusted under subsection (i), or

"(B) $12,000.".

(b) QUALIFYING CHILD DEFINED.—Subsection (c) of section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) QUALIFYING CHILD.—The term 'qualifying child' means, for the taxable year, an individual—

"(A) with respect to whom the taxpayer qualifies as an eligible individual, and

"(B) who, as of the end of such taxable year, has not attained the age of 4.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subsection (f)(1) of section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by inserting "(including separate tables for individuals with qualifying children)" after "Secretary".

(2) Subsection (i) of section 32 of such Code is amended—

(A) by inserting "('calendar year 1990' for 'calendar year 1987' in the case of the dollar amount referred to in clause (iii) of paragraph (2)(B))" before the period at the end of paragraph (1)(B), and

(B) by striking paragraph (2) and inserting the following new paragraph:

"(2) DEFINITIONS, ETC.—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) APPLICABLE CALENDAR YEAR.—The term 'applicable calendar year' means—

"(i) 1986 in the case of the dollar amount referred to in clause (i) of subparagraph (B),

"(ii) 1987 in the case of the dollar amount referred to in clause (ii) of subparagraph (B), and

"(iii) 1991 in the case of the dollar amount referred to in clause (iii) of subparagraph (B).

"(B) DOLLAR AMOUNTS.—The dollar amounts referred to in this subparagraph are—

"(i) the $5,714 amount contained in paragraphs (1) and (2)(A)(i) of subsection (a),

"(ii) the $9,000 amount contained in subsection (b)(1), and

"(iii) the $10,000 amount contained in subsection (b)(2)(A).".

(3) Subsection (b) of section 3507 of such Code is amended by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting ", and", and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) states the number of qualifying children (as defined in section 32(c)(3)) of the employee for the taxable year.".

(4) Paragraph (1) of section 3507(c) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (A),

(B) by redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C), and

(C) by inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new subparagraph:

"(B) on the basis of the number of qualifying children (as defined in section 32(c)(3)) of the employee for such period, and".

(5) Paragraph (2) of section 3507(c) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking "paragraph (1)(B)" and inserting "paragraph (1)(C)", and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new flush sentence:

"A separate advance amount table shall be prescribed for the credit under section 32(a)(2) in the same manner as provided under the preceding sentence, except that the applicable percentage under section 32(a)(2)(B) shall be substituted for 14 percent.".

(6) Section 3507 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

SEC. 214. STUDY OF ADVANCE PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, conduct a study of advance payments required by section 3507A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by section 212(b)(1)) to determine—

(1) the effectiveness of the advance payment system, and

(2) the manner in which such system can be implemented to alleviate administrative complexity, if any, for small business.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this title, the Comptroller shall report the results of the study conducted under subsection (a), together with any recommendations, to the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 215. PROGRAM TO INCREASE PUBLIC AWARENESS.

Not later than the first day of the first calendar year following the date of the enactment of this title, the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Secretary's delegate, shall establish a taxpayer awareness program to inform the taxpaying public of the availability of the credit for dependent care and health insurance premiums allowed under section 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as amended by this subtitle). Such public awareness program shall be designed to assure that individuals who may be eligible are informed of the availability of such credit and filing procedures. The Secretary shall use public service and paid commercial advertising, direct-mail contact, and any other appropriate means of communication to carry out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 216. DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS TO EXTEND HEALTH INSURANCE TO CHILDREN NOT COVERED BY PUBLIC OR PRIVATE HEALTH PROGRAMS.

Section 1115 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1315) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d)(1)(A) The Secretary shall conduct demonstration projects to evaluate and extend the provision of health insurance to—

"(i) children under the age of 19 who are not covered by other public or private health programs, and

"(ii) at the option of the organization described in subparagraph (B), the parents of such children who are not so covered.

"(B) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (2), the Secretary may enter into agreements to provide coverage described in subparagraph (A) through public and private cooperative arrangements sponsored by organizations, including (but not limited to)—

"(i) school based programs;

"(ii) programs operated under the auspices of nonprofit entities offering health insurance; and

"(iii) programs operated by nonprofit hospitals.

"(2) Any agreement entered into between the Secretary and any organization under paragraph (1)(B)(ii) shall provide—

"(A) that such agreement will be in effect for a period of 5 years, except that such agreement shall be terminated for failure to meet the requirements of this paragraph;

"(B) that the portion of the costs of any coverage program under the agreement to be funded from amounts provided by non-Federal sources shall not be less than the greater of—

"(i) the percentage (not less than 50 percent) specified by the Secretary, or

"(ii) if, at the time the agreement is entered into, such organization is conducting a program similar to the program covered by the agreement, the portion of such similar program funded by such non-Federal sources; and

"(C) that the coverage program provided by such organization shall not—

"(i) restrict enrollment in such program on the basis of a child's medical condition, or

"(ii) impose waiting periods or exclusions for preexisting conditions.

"(3) The Secretary in conducting demonstration projects under this subsection shall provide in any agreement that any organization described in paragraph (1)(B) may charge a premium to individuals enrolling in the coverage program provided by such organization.

"(4) The demonstration projects conducted under this subsection shall evaluate the effects of program coverage under any agreement on—

"(A) access to health services,

"(B) availability of insurance coverage to participating children and their families,

"(C) characteristics of participating children and their families, and

"(D) health care costs.

"(5) The Secretary shall publish no later than January 1, 1990, criteria governing the eligibility and participation of organizations in the demonstration projects conducted under this subsection.

"(6) For purposes of carrying out the demonstration projects described in this subsection there are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994.".

Subtitle B—Employee Benefit Nondiscrimination Rules

SEC. 221. 1-YEAR DELAY IN APPLICATION OF SECTION 89 RULES.

(a) 1-YEAR DELAY.—Paragraph (1) of section 1151(k) of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 1989.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (F) of section 1011B(a)(22) of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 is amended by striking "January 1, 1989" and inserting "January 1, 1990".

SEC. 222. REVISION OF ANTIDISCRIMINATION RULES FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLANS FOR YEARS BEGINNING AFTER 1989.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 89. HEALTH BENEFITS PROVIDED TO HIGHLY COMPENSATED EMPLOYEES.

"(a) INCLUSION IN INCOME.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any provision of part III of this subchapter, gross income of a highly compensated employee who is a participant in a health plan during any testing year shall include an amount equal to such employee's taxable benefit under such plan for such testing year.

"(2) YEAR OF INCLUSION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B)—

"(i) any amount included in gross income under paragraph (1) shall be taken into account for the taxable year of the employee with or within which the testing year ends, and

"(ii) any deduction of the employer attributable to such amount shall be allowable for the taxable year of the employer with or within which the testing year ends.

"(B) ELECTION TO DELAY INCLUSION FOR 1 YEAR.—If an employer maintains a plan with a testing year ending after September 30 and on or before December 31 and elects the application of this subparagraph—

"(i) amounts included in gross income under paragraph (1) with respect to employees of such employer shall be taken into account for the taxable year of the employee following the taxable year determined under subparagraph (A), but

"(ii) any deduction of the employer which is attributable to such amounts shall be allowable for the taxable year with or within which the testing year following the testing year in which the taxable benefits were provided ends.

"(b) TAXABLE BENEFIT.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) TAXABLE BENEFIT UNDER PLANS NOT MEETING ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS.—The taxable benefit of any highly compensated employee under any health plan not meeting the requirements of subsection (c) is the amount of such employee's employer-provided benefit under such plan.

"(2) TAXABLE BENEFIT UNDER PLANS MEETING ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The taxable benefit of any highly compensated employee under health plans meeting the requirements of subsection (c) is the excess (if any) of—

"(i) such employee's aggregate employer-provided benefit under such plans, over

"(ii) 133 percent of the base benefit with respect to such employee.

"(B) BASE BENEFIT.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The term 'base benefit' means, with respect to any employee, the smallest employer-provided benefit for participants with the same number of covered individuals as such employee under any plan which was taken into account in determining whether the requirements of subsection (c)(1)(B) are met with respect to such participants.

"(ii) BASE BENEFIT WHERE MULTIPLE FAMILY OPTIONS AVAILABLE.—If there is no plan meeting the requirements of subsection (c)(1)(B) with respect to participants with the same number of covered individuals as an employee, the base benefit for such employee shall be the smallest employer-provided benefit under the plan which meets such requirements for participants with the next lowest number of covered individuals.

"(iii) BASE BENEFIT ZERO IN CERTAIN CASES.—If—

"(I) no plan of an employer meets the requirements of subsection (c)(1)(B) for participants with self-only coverage, or

"(II) an employer elects the application of this clause for any testing year, the base benefit for all employees of such employer shall be zero.

"(C) AGGREGATION OF PLANS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), an employer may elect to treat any group of 2 or more health plans as 1 plan if—

"(i) each of such plans is available to the same group of employees with the same eligibility requirements, and

"(ii) such plans when so aggregated qualify as a qualified core health plan.

"(c) REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, a health plan meets the requirements of this subsection if—

"(A) such plan does not contain any provision relating to eligibility to participate which (by its terms or otherwise) discriminates in favor of highly compensated employees, and

"(B) the employer maintains 1 or more qualified core health plans and at least 90 percent of all employees are eligible to participate in any of such plans.

"(2) QUALIFIED CORE HEALTH PLAN.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified core health plan' means any health plan if—

"(A) the employer-provided benefit under such plan primarily consists of core benefits, and

"(B) such health plan does not require contributions by an employee in excess of the reasonably expected allowable cost of the coverage provided to the employee.

Such term does not include any plan which includes a flexible spending arrangement.

"(3) ALLOWABLE COST.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(B)—

"(A) SELF-ONLY COVERAGE.—In the case of self-only coverage, the allowable cost is 40 percent of the cost of such coverage.

"(B) OTHER COVERAGE.—In the case of coverage other than self-only coverage, the allowable cost is an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) 40 percent of the cost of such coverage, plus

"(ii) the amount (if any) by which the amount determined under subparagraph (A) exceeds the amount an employee is required to contribute for self-only coverage.

"(C) COST.—For purposes of this paragraph, cost shall be determined under subsection (f)(3)(B)(i) or (f)(3)(C), whichever applies.

"(4) CORE BENEFITS.—For purposes of this section, the term 'core benefits' means—

"(A) comprehensive major medical benefits,

"(B) comprehensive hospitalization benefits, and

"(C) at the election of the employer, other benefits specified by the Secretary.

"(5) SPECIAL RULE FOR SMALL EMPLOYERS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a plan maintained by a small employer, if the number of employees determined under paragraph (1)(B) is not a whole number, such number shall be rounded to the next lowest whole number (or to 1 if such number is less than 1).

"(B) SMALL EMPLOYER.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'small employer' means an employer which normally employs 20 or fewer employees per day during the plan year. All employers treated as 1 employer for purposes of subsection (b), (c), (m), (n), or (o) of section 414 shall be so treated for purposes of the preceding sentence.

"(d) EXCLUDED EMPLOYEES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The following employees shall be excluded from consideration under this section:

"(A) Employees who have not completed 6 months of service. An employee shall be excluded from consideration until the 1st day of the 1st month (or 1st day of a period of less than 31 days specified by the plan) beginning after completion of the period of service required under the preceding sentence.

"(B) Employees who normally work less than 30 hours per week.

"(C) Employees who normally work during not more than 6 months during any year.

"(D) Employees who have not attained age 21.

"(E) Employees who are nonresident aliens and who receive no earned income (within the meaning of section 911(d)(2)) from the employer which constitutes income from sources within the United States (within the meaning of section 861(a)(3)).

"(F) Employees who are students if—

"(i) such students are performing services described in section 3121(b)(10), and

"(ii) core benefits are made available to such students by such employer.

"(G) Any of the following:

"(i) Individuals who have attained the age of 55 and—

"(I) who are enrolled in a federally subsidized program under title V of the Older Americans Act, or

"(II) whose employment is funded under a grant or cooperative agreement made pursuant to the Environmental Programs Assistance Act of 1984.

"(ii) Individuals who are students employed under a cooperative education program which is qualified, or would be qualified, under title VIII of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

"(iii) Individuals who perform services at a rehabilitation facility and—

"(I) who are holding a certificate issued pursuant to section 14(c) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, or

"(II) who are receiving benefits under section 223 or title XVI of the Social Security Act.

"(iv) Individuals who are imprisoned in a correctional facility operated by or for the United States or a State (or political subdivision thereof) and who are performing services under a program operated by or for such facility.

"(v) Individuals who are performing services under any other similar Federal or State subsidized program specified by the Secretary.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES FOR EMPLOYEES EXCLUDED ON BASIS OF PERIOD OF SERVICE.—

"(A) SHORTER PERIOD.—If a plan specifies a shorter period of service than the period specified in paragraph (1)(A), paragraph (1)(A) shall be applied by using such shorter period.

"(B) SEPARATE APPLICATION.—If employees not meeting the service requirements of paragraph (1)(A) (after application of subparagraph (A)) are covered under a health plan of the employer, the requirements of this section shall be applied separately with respect to such employees.

"(3) EXCLUSION OF MEDICALLY UNINSURABLE EMPLOYEES OF SMALL EMPLOYERS.—In the case of a small employer (within the meaning of subsection (c)(5)(B)), there shall be excluded from consideration under this section employees of the employer who are determined to be medically uninsurable by a third party insurer providing coverage under the health plan.

"(e) SPECIAL RULES RELATING TO OTHER CLASSES OF EMPLOYEES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) TREATMENT OF UNION EMPLOYEES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If an employer has employees included in any qualified bargaining unit, this section shall be applied separately with respect to employees included in each such unit.

"(B) QUALIFIED BARGAINING UNIT.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'qualified bargaining unit' means any unit of employees covered by an agreement which the Secretary finds to be a collective bargaining agreement between employee representatives and 1 or more employers if—

"(i) there is evidence that health benefits were the subject of good faith bargaining between the employee representatives and such employer or employers, and

"(ii) not more than a de minimis number of such employees are professional employees.

"(2) EXCEPTIONS FOR EMPLOYEES OF MULTIEMPLOYER PLANS AND SIMILAR EMPLOYEES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—There shall be excluded from consideration under this section—

"(i) employees covered by a collective bargaining agreement pursuant to which a health plan which is a multiemployer plan is maintained, and

"(ii) employees with respect to which employer contributions to a health plan are required under—

"(I) the Act of March 3, 1931, commonly referred to as the Davis-Bacon Act (40 U.S.C. 276a, et seq.), or

"(II) any similar Federal law specified by the Secretary.

"(B) SPECIAL RULES FOR PROFESSIONALS AND NONUNION EMPLOYEES.—

"(i) PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYEES.—Subparagraph (A)(i) shall not apply to any employees covered by a multiemployer plan who are professional employees unless there is no more than a de minimis number of such employees covered by such plan.

"(ii) NONUNION EMPLOYEES.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A)(i), if a multiemployer plan covers a de minimis number of individuals—

"(I) who are employees of the plan, and

"(II) who are not covered by any collective bargaining agreement pursuant to which the plan is maintained, such individuals shall be excluded from consideration under this section.

"(3) TREATMENT OF FORMER EMPLOYEES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), this section shall be applied separately to former employees under requirements similar to the requirements that apply to employees.

"(B) MODIFICATIONS OF REQUIREMENTS.—Except as provided in regulations, in applying this section to former employees—

"(i) subsection (c)(2)(B) shall not apply, and

"(ii) in determining whether the requirements of subsection (c)(1)(B) are met, the employer may take into account reasonable differences in eligibility to participate based on the age or service of the former employee.

"(C) FORMER EMPLOYEES SEPARATING BEFORE 1990.—This section shall not apply to any former employee who was separated from service before January 1, 1990 (and who was not reemployed on or after such date).

"(f) OTHER DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) HEALTH PLAN.—The term 'health plan' means an accident or health plan within the meaning of section 105(e).

"(2) HIGHLY COMPENSATED EMPLOYEE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'highly compensated employee' has the meaning given such term by section 414(q); except that paragraph (5)(B) of such section shall not apply.

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR CERTAIN 5-PERCENT OWNERS.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), no amount shall be included under subsection (a) in the gross income of a highly compensated employee for any taxable year if such employee is treated as a highly compensated employee by reason of paragraph (1)(A) of section 414(q) and such employee has adjusted gross income for such taxable year of less than $30,000. In the case of years beginning after 1990, the $30,000 amount under the preceding sentence shall be adjusted at the same time and in the same manner as the $75,000 and $50,000 amounts are adjusted under section 414(q)(1).

"(3) EMPLOYER-PROVIDED BENEFIT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—An employee's employer-provided benefit under any health plan is the value of the coverage provided during the testing year to or on behalf of such employee to the extent attributable to contributions made by the employer.

"(B) VALUE OF COVERAGE.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), the value of the coverage provided under any health plan shall be determined in substantially the same manner as costs under a health plan are determined under section 4980B(f)(4).

"(ii) ELECTION BY EMPLOYER.—At the election of the employer, and except as provided in regulations, the value of the coverage shall be determined under any other reasonable method selected by the employer. This clause shall not apply for purposes of subsection (b) or (c)(2)(B).

"(C) SPECIAL RULE FOR SMALL EMPLOYERS.—Except as provided by the Secretary, in the case of a qualified core health plan with respect to which costs are individually rated, such employer may elect to determine the value of the coverage under the plan for all employees on the basis of the average cost for employees with the same coverage.

"(4) SEPARATE LINE OF BUSINESS EXCEPTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If, under section 414(r), an employer is treated as operating separate lines of business for a year, the employer may apply the provisions of this section separately with respect to employees in each such separate line of business. The preceding sentence shall not apply to any plan unless such plan is available to a group of employees as qualify under a classification set up by the employer and found by the Secretary not to be discriminatory in favor of highly compensated employees.

"(B) OPERATING UNITS.—In applying section 414(r)(7) for purposes of this section, an operating unit shall be treated as in a separate geographic area from another unit if such units are at least 35 miles apart.

"(5) TREATMENT OF SALARY REDUCTION ARRANGEMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any contribution by reason of a salary reduction arrangement shall be treated as an employer contribution for purposes of determining the employer-provided benefit of a highly compensated employee.

"(B) ALLOWABLE COST TEST.—For purposes of subsection (c)(2)(B)—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Any contribution by reason of a salary reduction arrangement (other than a qualified cash payment) shall be treated as an employee contribution.

"(ii) TREATMENT OF QUALIFIED CASH PAYMENTS.—Qualified cash payments shall be treated as employer contributions.

"(C) BASE BENEFIT.—For purposes of subsection (b)(2)(A)(ii), the base benefit under a plan shall be determined—

"(i) by treating any qualified cash payment as an employer-provided benefit, and

"(ii) by treating any other contribution by reason of a salary reduction arrangement as an employer-provided benefit only to the extent such contribution is matched dollar for dollar by an employer contribution which is not made by reason of a salary reduction arrangement.

"(D) QUALIFIED CASH PAYMENT.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified cash payment' means an amount which is payable in cash to an employee and which is made solely because the employee indicates that he is covered by a health plan providing core benefits maintained by another employer.

"(6) TESTING YEAR.—The term 'testing year' means—

"(A) any 12-month period beginning with the calendar month designated in the plan for purposes of this section, or

"(B) if there is no such designation, the calendar year.

No period may be designated under subparagraph (A) unless the same period is designated with respect to all other health plans of the employer. Any designation under subparagraph (A) may be changed only with the consent of the Secretary.

"(7) TIME FOR TESTING.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary, determinations under this section (other than the determination of a highly compensated employee's actual employer-provided benefit) shall be made on the basis of the facts as of the testing day.

"(B) TESTING DAY.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'testing day' means—

"(i) the day designated for the plan as the testing day for purposes of this paragraph, or

"(ii) if there is no day so designated, the last day of the testing year.

"(C) LIMITATIONS.—

"(i) DESIGNATION MUST BE CONSISTENT FOR ALL HEALTH PLANS.—No day may be designated under subparagraph (B)(i) with respect to any plan unless the same day is so designated with respect to all other health plans of the employer.

"(ii) DESIGNATION BINDING.—Any designation under subparagraph (B)(i) shall apply to the testing year for which made and all subsequent years unless revoked with the consent of the Secretary.

"(D) SPECIAL RULE FOR MULTIPLE EMPLOYER PLAN.—In the case of a plan maintained by more than 1 employer (other than a multiemployer plan), each employer may, subject to such rules as the Secretary may prescribe, elect its own testing year under paragraph (6) and its own testing date under this paragraph.

"(8) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN DISPOSITIONS OR ACQUISITIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If a person becomes, or ceases to be, a member of a group described in subsection (b), (c), (m), or (o) of section 414, then the requirements of subsection (c) shall be treated as having been met during the transition period with respect to any plan covering employees of such person or any other member of such group if—

"(i) such requirements were met immediately before such change, and

"(ii) either—

"(I) the coverage under such plan is not significantly changed during the transition period (other than by reason of the change in members of such group), or

"(II) such plan meets such other requirements as the Secretary may prescribe by regulation.

"(B) TRANSITION PERIOD.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'transition period' means the period—

"(i) beginning on the date of the change in members of a group, and

"(ii) ending on the last day of the 1st plan year beginning after such date of change.

"(9) COORDINATION WITH MEDICARE, ETC.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If a plan is coordinated with health or disability benefits provided under any Federal, State, or foreign law or under any other health plan covering the employee or family member of the employee, such plan shall not fail to meet the requirements of subsection (c) merely because the amount of benefits provided to an employee or family member are coordinated in a manner which does not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees.

"(B) CERTAIN DISABILITY PLANS EXEMPT FROM NONDISCRIMINATION RULES.—This section shall not apply to any disability coverage other than disability coverage the benefits of which are excludable from gross income under section 105 (b) or (c).

"(C) ACCIDENTAL DEATH AND DISMEMBERMENT.—In the case of accidental death and dismemberment benefits—

"(i) this section shall not apply, and

"(ii) rules similar to the rules of section 79(d) shall apply to such benefits.

"(10) EMPLOYERS WITH ONLY HIGHLY COMPENSATED EMPLOYEES.—This section shall not apply to any health plan for any year if the only employees of the employer maintaining such plan are highly compensated employees.

"(11) SPECIAL RULES FOR CHURCH EMPLOYEES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—There shall be excluded from consideration under this section church employees covered by a church plan.

"(B) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the terms 'church employee' and 'church plan' have the meanings given such terms by paragraphs (3)(B) and (1) of section 414(e), respectively, except that—

"(i) section 414(e) shall be applied by substituting 'section 501(c)(3)' for 'section 501' each place it appears, and

"(ii) the term 'church employee' shall not include an employee of—

"(I) an organization described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii) above the secondary school level (other than a school for religious training),

"(II) an organization described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(iii), and

"(III) an organization described in section 501(c)(3), the basis of the exemption for which is substantially similar to the basis for exemption of an organization described in subclause (II).

"(g) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.".

(b) EXCISE TAX ON PLANS NOT MEETING CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 43 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 4980C. FAILURE TO SATISFY CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO EMPLOYEE BENEFITS PLANS.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—There is hereby imposed a tax equal to the applicable percentage of the amounts paid or incurred during any taxable year under a specified employee benefit plan which at any time during the taxable year does not meet the requirements of subsection (c).

"(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'applicable percentage' means—

"(i) 10 percent with respect to amounts paid or incurred which are allocable to the 1st 6 months of the correction period,

"(ii) 20 percent with respect to amounts paid or incurred which are allocable to the 2nd 6 months of the correction period, and

"(iii) 34 percent with respect to any other amounts.

"(B) CORRECTION PERIOD.—The term 'correction period' means, with respect to any failure, the period—

"(i) beginning on the date any of the persons referred to in paragraph (3) knew, or exercising reasonable diligence knew, that such failure existed, and

"(ii) ending on the date such failure is corrected.

"(3) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—The following shall be liable for the tax imposed by paragraph (1):

"(A) In the case of a plan other than a multiemployer plan, the employer.

"(B) In the case of a multiemployer plan, the plan.

"(b) LIMITATIONS ON AMOUNT OF TAX.—

"(1) TAX NOT TO APPLY WHERE FAILURE NOT DISCOVERED EXERCISING REASONABLE DILIGENCE.—No tax shall be imposed by subsection (a) on any failure during any period for which it is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary that none of the persons referred to in subsection (a)(3) knew, or exercising reasonable diligence would have known, that such failure existed.

"(2) TAX NOT TO APPLY TO FAILURES CORRECTED WITHIN 180 DAYS.—No tax shall be imposed by subsection (a) on any failure if—

"(A) such failure was due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, and

"(B) such failure is corrected during the 180-day period beginning on the 1st date any of the persons referred to in subsection (a)(3) knew, or exercising reasonable diligence would have known, that such failure existed.

"(3) WAIVER BY THE SECRETARY.—In the case of a failure which is due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the Secretary may waive part or all of the tax imposed by subsection (a) to the extent that the payment of such tax would be excessive relative to the failure involved.

"(c) REQUIREMENTS.—A specified employee benefit plan does not meet the requirements of this subsection unless, except to the extent provided in regulations—

"(1) such plan is in writing,

"(2) the employee's rights under such plan are legally enforceable,

"(3) employees are provided reasonable notification of benefits available in the plan,

"(4) such plan is maintained for the exclusive benefit of employees, and

"(5) such plan was established with the intention of being maintained for an indefinite period of time.

In the case of a plan described in subsection (d)(1) maintained by a small employer (within the meaning of section 89(c)(5)(B)), the requirements of paragraph (1) shall be treated as met if the plan consists of an insurance policy issued by a third party insurer.

"(d) SPECIFIED EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.—For purposes of this section, the term 'specified employee benefit plan' means—

"(1) an accident or health plan (within the meaning of section 105(e)),

"(2) any plan of an employer for providing group-term life insurance (within the meaning of section 79),

"(3) a qualified tuition reduction program (within the meaning of section 117(d)),

"(4) a cafeteria plan (within the meaning of section 125), and

"(5) a plan to which section 505 applies.

Such term shall not include a church plan (within the meaning of section 414(e)).

"(e) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.".

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 43 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 4980C. Failure to satisfy certain requirements with respect to employee benefits plans.".

(c) NONDISCRIMINATION REQUIREMENTS FOR GROUP-TERM LIFE INSURANCE.—

(1) RESTORATION OF PRIOR LAW.—The amendment made by section 1151(c)(1) of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 is hereby repealed and section 79(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be applied and administered as if the amendment made by such section 1151(c)(1) had not been enacted.

(2) EXCLUSION OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES.—Subparagraph (B) of section 79(d)(3) of such Code (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) EXCLUDED EMPLOYEES.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), there shall be excluded from consideration employees—

"(i) who are excluded from consideration under rules similar to the rules under section 89(d), determined—

"(I) by substituting '1 year' for '6 months' in paragraph (1)(A) thereof, and

"(II) without regard to paragraph (3) thereof, and

"(ii) employees not included in the plan who are included in a unit of employees covered by an agreement which the Secretary finds to be a collective bargaining agreement between employee representatives and 1 or more employees, if the benefits provided under the plan were the subject of good faith bargaining between such representatives and employers.".

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1)(A) Sections 117(d)(4), 125(b)(3), and 127(b)(2) of such Code are each amended by striking "section 89(h)" and inserting "rules similar to the rules of subsection (d) of section 89 (determined by substituting '1 year' for '6 months' in paragraph (1)(A) and without regard to paragraph (3))".

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 120(c) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(2) ELIGIBILITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The plan shall benefit employees who qualify under a classification set up by the employer and found by the Secretary not to be discriminatory in favor of employees who are described in paragraph (1).

"(B) EXCLUDED EMPLOYEES.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), there shall be excluded from consideration employees—

"(i) who are excluded from consideration under rules similar to the rules of section 89(d), determined—

"(I) by substituting '1 year' for '6 months' in paragraph (1)(A), and

"(II) without regard to paragraph (3), and

"(ii) employees not included in a plan who are included in a unit of employees covered by an agreement which the Secretary finds to be a collective bargaining agreement between employee representatives and 1 or more employers, if there is evidence that group legal services plan benefits were the subject of good faith bargaining between such representatives and employees.".

(C) Paragraph (8) of section 129(d) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(8) EXCLUDED EMPLOYEES.—For purposes of paragraphs (2), (3), and (7), there shall be excluded from consideration employees—

"(A) who are excluded from consideration under rules similar to the rules of section 89(d), determined—

"(i) by substituting '1 year' for '6 months' in paragraph (1)(A), and

"(ii) without regard to paragraph (3), and

"(B) employees not included in a program who are included in a unit of employees covered by an agreement which the Secretary finds to be a collective bargaining agreement between employee representatives and 1 or more employers, if there is evidence that dependent care benefits were the subject of good faith bargaining between such representatives and employees.".

(D) Paragraph (2) of section 505(b) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(2) EXCLUDED EMPLOYEES.—For purposes of paragraph (1), there shall be excluded from consideration employees—

"(A) who are excluded from consideration under rules similar to the rules of section 89(d), determined—

"(i) by substituting '1 year' for '6 months' in paragraph (1)(A), and

"(ii) without regard to paragraph (3), and

"(B) employees not included in a program who are included in a unit of employees covered by an agreement which the Secretary finds to be a collective bargaining agreement between employee representatives and 1 or more employers, if there is evidence that the class of benefits involved were the subject of good faith bargaining between such representatives and employers.".

(2) Sections 120(b)(2), 125(c)(1), 127(b)(1)(B), and 129(d)(1)(B) of such Code are each amended by striking "89(k)" and inserting "4980C".

(3) Subparagraph (C) of section 125(c)(2) of such Code is amended by striking the last sentence thereof.

(4) Paragraph (1) of section 125(e) of such Code is amended by striking "section 89(a)" and inserting "sections 79(d) and 89(a)".

(5) Subparagraph (B) of section 162(l)(2) of such Code is amended by inserting "and treating individuals who are employees within the meaning of section 401(c)(1) as employees" before the period at the end thereof.

(6)(A) Subsection (b) of section 4976 of such Code is amended by striking paragraph (5).

(B) Subparagraph (B) of section 4976(c)(1) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(B) a health or group-term life insurance plan is part of such fund and benefits under such plan are taxable under chapter 1 by reason of section 79(d) or 89,".

(C) Clause (i) of section 4976(c)(2)(A) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(i) the aggregate taxable benefits referred to in paragraph (1)(B), or".

(D) Clause (ii) of section 4976(c)(2)(A) of such Code is amended by striking "such testing year" and inserting "the plan year".

(E) Section 4976(c) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) TAX NOT TO APPLY IF AMOUNTS REPORTED ON W-2 FORMS.—No tax shall be imposed under paragraph (1) for any plan year if the employer meets the requirements of section 6051(g) for such year.".

(7) Section 6051 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS FOR CERTAIN TAXABLE FRINGE BENEFITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If an employee of an employer maintaining any plan is required to include any amount in gross income under section 79(d) or 89 for any year ending with or within a calendar year, the employer shall separately include such amount on the statement which the employer is required to provide the employee under subsection (a) (and any statement required to be furnished under subsection (d)).

"(2) PENALTY.—

"For penalty for failure to report, see section 6652(k).".

(8)(A) Paragraph (1) of section 6652(k) of such Code is amended by striking "89(l)" and inserting "6051(g)".

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 6652(k) of such Code is amended by striking subparagraph (B) and inserting the following:

"(B) an amount which bears the same ratio to the employer-provided benefit with respect to the individual to whom such failure relates as the amount required to be but not shown on timely statements under sections 6051(a) and 6051(d) bears to the amount required to be shown.

For purposes of subparagraph (B), the term 'employer-provided benefit' means the employer-provided benefit determined under section 89 in the case of a health benefit and the cost of insurance determined under section 79(c) in the case of a plan providing group-term life insurance.".

(9) The table of sections for part II of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to section 89 and inserting the following:

"Sec. 89. Health benefits provided to highly compensated employees.".

(10) Paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of section 3021(c) of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 are hereby repealed.

(11) Section 6070 of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 is hereby repealed.

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall apply as if included in the amendments made by section 1151 of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR COLLECTIVELY BARGAINED PLANS.—In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to 1 or more collective bargaining agreements between employee representatives and 1 or more employers ratified before the date of the enactment of the Child Care and Health Insurance Act of 1989, the amendments made by subsection (a) shall not apply to any employee covered by such an agreement in years beginning before the earlier of—

(A) the date on which the agreement covering such employee expires (without regard to any extension thereof after such date of enactment), or

(B) January 1, 1993.

(3) ELECTION NOT TO HAVE AMENDMENTS APPLY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—An employer may elect not to have the amendments made by subsection (a) apply to health plans maintained by the employer for years beginning in 1990 or 1991. Such election shall be made each year and shall apply to all health plans of the employer maintained during such year.

(B) EFFECT OF AN ELECTION.—If an election is made under subparagraph (A), section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect before the amendments made by subsection (a)) shall apply; except that—

(i) such section shall be treated as if it only applied to health plans,

(ii) section 89(d) of such Code (as in effect after such amendments) shall apply in lieu of section 89(h) of such Code (as in effect before such amendments), and

(iii) paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 89(e) of such Code (as in effect after such amendments) shall apply.

(4) ELECTION NOT TO HAVE AMENDMENTS APPLY TO DEPENDENT CARE ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—An employer maintaining a dependent care assistance program to which section 129 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 applies may elect (in the same manner as under paragraph (2)) not to have the amendments made by this section (to the extent such amendments apply to such program) apply for years beginning in 1990 or 1991.

(B) EFFECT.—If an election is made under this paragraph, paragraph (2)(B) shall apply to the program, except that "dependent care assistance programs" shall be substituted for "health plans".

(5) SPECIAL RULES RELATING TO SMALL EMPLOYERS.—

(A) 1-YEAR DELAY.—In the case of a small employer, section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by subsection (a)) and section 4980C of such Code (as added by subsection (b)) shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 1990.

(B) STUDY.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall conduct a study to determine if discrimination in favor of highly compensated employees occurs in the providing of employee benefits by small employers. Such studies shall consider a broad base of small businesses, including businesses of professionals.

(ii) REPORT.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall report the results of such study to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, including any recommendations. Such committees shall review such report and take appropriate actions with respect to the application of nondiscrimination rules to small employers.

(C) SMALL EMPLOYERS.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term "small employer" has the meaning given such term by section 89(c)(5)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by subsection (a)).

(6) DELAY IN APPLICATION OF QUALIFICATION RULES.—Section 4980C of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by subsection (b)) shall apply to plan years beginning after the later of—

(A) December 31, 1989, or

(B) the earlier of—

(i) 3 months after the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate issues regulations for the application of such section which taxpayers may rely upon, or

(ii) December 31, 1990.

Notwithstanding paragraph (5), in the case of a small employer (as defined in paragraph (5)), section 4980C of such Code shall apply to years beginning after the date which is one year after the date determined under the preceding sentence.

(7) GUIDANCE.—Not later than January 1, 1990, the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate shall issue such guidance as may be necessary to comply with the provisions of section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as amended by subsection (a)).

SEC. 223. OTHER PROVISIONS RELATING TO NONTAXABLE BENEFITS.

(a) TREATMENT OF LEASED EMPLOYEES.—

(1) REPLACEMENT OF HISTORICAL TEST WITH CONTROL TEST.—Subparagraph (C) of section 414(n)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

"(C) such services are performed by such person under the control of the recipient.".

(2) SERVICES INCIDENTAL TO SALES OR CONSTRUCTION DISREGARDED.—Paragraph (2) of section 414(n) of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new flush sentence.

"The term 'leased employee' shall not include an individual solely because such individual is performing services incidental to the sale of goods or equipment or incidental to the construction of a facility. Such term shall include the support staff of professional employees.".

(b) DEPENDENT CARE ASSISTANCE.—

(1) INCLUSION IN INCOME OF EXCESS BENEFITS.—Paragraph (7) of section 129(d) of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(C) FAILURE TO MEET REQUIREMENTS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—If a plan fails to meet the requirements of this paragraph for any plan year—

"(I) such plan shall be treated as a plan which is a dependent care assistance program to which subsection (a) applies, but

"(II) there shall be included in the gross income of each highly compensated employee for the taxable year of such employee with or within which the plan year ends an amount equal to such employee's excess benefit.

"(ii) EXCESS BENEFIT.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the excess benefit of any employee is the excess of the employee's employer-provided benefit under the plan over the highest permitted benefit.

"(iii) HIGHEST PERMITTED BENEFIT.—For purposes of clause (ii), the highest permitted benefit under any plan shall be determined by reducing the nontaxable benefits of highly compensated employees (beginning with employees with the greatest nontaxable benefits) until such plan would be treated as meeting the requirements of subparagraph (A) if such reduced benefits were taken into account.".

(2) INFORMATION REPORTING.—Paragraph (9) of section 6051(a) of such Code is amended by inserting "and the amount of such assistance required to be included in gross income by reason of section 129(d)(7)(C)" after "section 129(d)".

(c) GROUP-TERM LIFE INSURANCE.—

(1) HIGHLY COMPENSATED EMPLOYEES.—

(A) Section 79(d) of such Code is amended by striking "key" each place it appears (other than paragraph (6)) and inserting "highly compensated".

(B) Paragraph (6) of section 79(d) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(6) HIGHLY COMPENSATED EMPLOYEE.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'highly compensated employee' has the meaning given such term by section 414(q).".

(2) COMPENSATION LIMIT.—Paragraph (5) of section 79(d) of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "For purposes of the preceding sentence, compensation for any year shall not be taken into account for such year to the extent it exceeds the amount in effect under section 401(a)(17) for such year.".

(d) HIGHLY COMPENSATED EMPLOYEES.—

(1) COMPENSATION THRESHOLDS.—Subparagraph (D) of section 414(q)(1) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(D) was at any time an officer and received compensation in excess of the amount in effect under subparagraph (C) for such year.".

(2) ROUNDING.—Paragraph (1) of section 414(q) of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "If the amount determined under the preceding sentence is not a multiple of $1,000, such amount shall be rounded to the nearest $1,000 (other than for purposes of applying the preceding sentence).".

(e) LINE OF BUSINESS TEST.—

(1) APPLICATION FOR PERIOD BEFORE GUIDELINES ISSUED.—In the case of any plan year beginning on or before the date the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate issues guidelines under section 414(r)(2)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (and begins issuing determination letters with respect to such section), an employer meeting the requirements of section 414(r)(2) (A) and (B) of such Code with respect to a line of business may treat it as a separate line of business if the employer reasonably determines it to be separate.

(2) APPLICATION TO DEPENDENT CARE PROGRAMS.—Paragraph (1) of section 414(r) of such Code is amended by inserting ", 129(d)(7)," after "section 89".

(f) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this subsection, the amendments made by this section shall take effect as if included in the amendments made by section 1151 of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

(2) SUBSECTION (a).—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1983.

(3) SUBSECTION (b).—The amendments made by subsection (b) shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 1988.

(4) LINE OF BUSINESS.—The provisions of subsection (e)(1) shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 1986.

SEC. 224. STUDY OF SECTION 89.

The United States Bipartisan Commission on Comprehensive Health Care established under section 401 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (42 U.S.C. 1395b note) shall study the implementation and effectiveness of section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. The Commission shall include in its report under section 406(b) of such Act the results of the study, including recommendations with respect to—

(1) improving the effectiveness of section 89 in making employer-provided health insurance more accessible and affordable to low- and middle-income employees, and

(2) alternative methods for improving accessibility and affordability of health insurance available in the work place.

Subtitle C—Other Revenue Provisions

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of section 4251(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking "percent;" and all that follows through the period and inserting "percent.".

(b) TIME FOR DEPOSIT OF TELEPHONE EXCISE TAXES.—Section 4251 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) TIME FOR DEPOSIT OF TAXES.—If, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, a person is required to make deposits of any tax imposed by this section with respect to amounts considered collected by such person during any semi-monthly period, such deposits shall be made not later than the third day (not including Saturdays, Sundays, or legal holidays) after the close of the first week of the second semi-monthly period following the period to which such amounts relate.".

(c) ONE-TIME FILING OF TELEPHONE EXCISE TAX EXEMPTION CERTIFICATES.—Section 4253 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) FILING OF EXEMPTION CERTIFICATES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to claim an exemption under subsection (c), (h), (i), or (j), a person shall provide to the provider of communications services a statement (in such form and manner as the Secretary may provide) certifying that such person is entitled to such exemption.

"(2) DURATION OF CERTIFICATE.—Any statement provided under paragraph (1) shall remain in effect until—

"(A) the provider of communications services has actual knowledge that the information provided in such statement is false, or

"(B) such provider is notified by the Secretary that the provider of the statement is no longer entitled to an exemption described in paragraph (1).

If any information provided in such statement is no longer accurate, the person providing such statement shall inform the provider of communications services within 30 days of any change of information.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) SUBSECTION (a).—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this title.

(2) SUBSECTION (b).—The amendment made by subsection (b) shall apply to the payment of taxes considered collected for semi-monthly periods beginning after June 30, 1990.

(3) SUBSECTION (c).—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The amendment made by subsection (c) shall apply to any claim for exemption made after the date of the enactment of this title.

(B) DURATION OF EXISTING CERTIFICATES.—Any annual certificate of exemption effective on the date of the enactment of this title shall remain effective until the end of the annual period.

SEC. 232. ESTIMATED TAX PAYMENTS REQUIRED FOR S CORPORATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6655(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) APPLICATION OF SECTION TO CERTAIN TAXES IMPOSED ON S CORPORATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), this section shall apply to any of the following taxes imposed on an S corporation:

"(i) The tax imposed by section 1374(a) (or corresponding prior provision of law).

"(ii) The tax imposed by section 1375(a).

"(iii) Any tax imposed by reason of section 1371(d)(2).

"(B) SPECIAL RULES.—In applying this section to an S corporation—

"(i) clause (ii) of subsection (d)(1)(B) shall not apply to the taxes described in clauses (i) and (iii) of subparagraph (A), and

"(ii) paragraph (2) of subsection (d) shall not apply.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to installments required to be made after the date of the enactment of this title with respect to taxable years ending after such date.

(2) SPECIAL RULES.—

(A) PAYMENTS SPREAD OVER REMAINING INSTALLMENTS.—Notwithstanding section 6655(d)(1)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, any estimated payment of any tax relating to an item arising before the date of enactment of this title for any taxable year beginning on or before and ending after such date shall be taken into account ratably among the installments required to be made after such date for such taxable year.

(B) ANNUALIZED INSTALLMENT PAYMENTS.—If subsection (e) of section 6655 of such Code applies with respect to payments described in subparagraph (A), subclauses (II), (III), and (IV) of paragraph (2)(A)(i) of such subsection shall be applied by using the longer time periods prescribed under such subclauses.

TITLE III—SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS

SEC. 301. RETIREMENT TEST EXEMPT AMOUNT INCREASED TO $10,560 IN 1990.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (D) of section 203(f)(8) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 403(f)(8)) is amended to read as follows:

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, the exempt amount which is applicable to an individual who has attained retirement age (as defined in section 216(l)) before the close of the taxable year involved shall be $880 for each month of any taxable year ending after 1989 and before 1991.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 302. REDUCTION FACTOR WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN EARNINGS LOWERED TO 25 PERCENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (3) of section 203(f) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 403(f)) is amended by striking "33⅓ percent" and all that follows through "paragraph (8)" and inserting "equal to the sum of (A) 25 percent of so much of his earnings for such year in excess of the product of the applicable exempt amount as determined under paragraph (8) as does not exceed $5,000, and (B) 33⅓ percent of so much of such earnings in excess of such product as exceeds $5,000,".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 303. PAYMENT OF RECOMPUTED BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (D) of section 215(f)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 415(f)(2)) is amended by striking subparagraph (D) and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

"(D) A recomputation under this paragraph with respect to any year shall be effective—

"(i) in the case of an individual who did not die in that year, for the earlier of—

"(I) monthly benefits beginning with benefits for the fifteenth month following the end of such year, or

"(II) monthly benefits beginning with benefits for the month in which the individual submits a written request for such recomputation; or

"(ii) in the case of an individual who died in that year, for monthly benefits beginning with benefits for the month in which he died.

"(E) Under regulations of the Secretary, monthly benefits increased as a result of a recomputation under this paragraph which became effective pursuant to subparagraph (D)(i) shall be further increased on an actuarial basis (taking into account the age of the individual) to include the value of benefits which would have otherwise been paid if the recomputation were effective beginning with benefits for January of the year following the year with respect to which the recomputation is made.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to recomputations made after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 304. PAYMENT OF CERTAIN RETROACTIVE BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (B) of section 202(j)(4) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 402(j)(4)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating clause (v) as clause (vi), and

(2) by inserting after clause (iv) the following new clause:

"(v) Any retroactive benefits for which an individual is eligible because of clause (i) or (iv) shall be paid to the individual as an increase in the individual's monthly benefit amounts, determined on an actuarial basis pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Secretary.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to applications for benefits made after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 305. MANDATORY PROVISION OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACCOUNT STATEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part A of title XI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1301–1320b-10) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SOCIAL SECURITY ACCOUNT STATEMENTS

"Provision Upon Request

"SEC. 1141. (a)(1) Beginning not later than October 1, 1990, the Secretary shall provide upon the request of an eligible individual a social security account statement (hereinafter referred to as the 'statement').

"(2) Each statement shall contain—

"(A) the amount of wages paid to and self-employment income derived by the eligible individual as shown by the records of the Secretary at the date of the request;

"(B) an estimate of the employee and self-employment, old age, survivors, and disability insurance contributions of the eligible individual as shown by the records of the Secretary at the date of the request;

"(C) a separate estimate of the employee and self-employment hospital insurance contributions of the eligible individual; and

"(D) an estimate of the potential monthly retirement, disability, survivor, and auxiliary benefits payable on the eligible individual's account together with a description of the benefits payable under the medicare program of title XVIII.

"(3) For purposes of this section, the term 'eligible individual' means an individual who—

"(A) has a social security number,

"(B) has attained age 25 or over, and

"(C) has wages or net earnings from self-employment.

"Notice to Eligible Individuals

"(b) The Secretary shall to the maximum extent practicable take such steps as are necessary to assure that eligible individuals are informed of the availability of the statement described in subsection (a).

"Mandatory Provision of Statements

"(c)(1) By not later than September 30, 1994, the Secretary shall provide a statement to each eligible individual who has attained age 60 by October 1, 1993, and who is not receiving benefits under title II and for whom a current mailing address can be determined through such methods as the Secretary deems appropriate. In fiscal years 1994 through 1999 the Secretary shall provide a statement to each eligible individual who attains age 60 in such fiscal years and who is not receiving benefits under title II and for whom a current mailing address can be determined through such methods as the Secretary deems appropriate. The Secretary shall provide with each statement to an eligible individual notice that such statement is updated annually and is available upon request.

"(2) Beginning not later than October 1, 1999, the Secretary shall provide a statement on a biennial basis to each eligible individual who is not receiving benefits under title II and for whom a mailing address can be determined through such methods as the Secretary deems appropriate. With respect to statements provided to eligible individuals who have not attained age 50 such statements need not include estimates of monthly retirement benefits. However, if such statements provided to eligible individuals who have not attained age 50 do not include estimates of retirement benefit amounts, such statements shall include a description of the benefits (including auxiliary benefits) that are available upon retirement.".

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS AND STUDY.—Not later than October 1, 1996, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the implementation of the requirements of this Act and on his specific plans for implementing the final requirements contained in such Act, particularly with regard to estimating retirement benefit amounts for individuals who have not attained the age of 60.

(c) DISCLOSURE OF ADDRESS INFORMATION BY INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE TO SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 6103(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to disclosure of taxpayer identity information) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) SOCIAL SECURITY ACCOUNT STATEMENTS FURNISHED BY SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.—Upon written request by the Commissioner of Social Security, the Secretary may disclose the mailing address of any taxpayer who is entitled to receive a social security account statement pursuant to section 1141(c) of the Social Security Act, for use only by officers, employees, or agents of the Social Security Administration for purposes of mailing such statement to such taxpayer.".

(2) SAFEGUARDS.—The last sentence of section 6103(p)(4) of such Code (relating to safeguards) is amended by striking out "subsection (m)(2) or (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (2), (4), or (6) of subsection (m)".

(3) UNAUTHORIZED DISCLOSURE PENALTIES.—Paragraph (2) of section 7213(a) of such Code (relating to unauthorized disclosure of returns and return information) is amended by striking out "(m)(2) or (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(m) (2), (4), or (6)".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 306. CHILD CARE EARNINGS EXCLUDED FROM WAGES AND SELF-EMPLOYMENT INCOME FOR EXCESS EARNINGS TEST.

(A) WAGES.—Section 203(f)(5)(C) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 403(f)(5)(C)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" at end of clause (i),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof ", or", and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(iii) the amount of any payment made to an employee who has attained retirement age (as defined in section 216(l)) by an employer for child care services (including indirect services) performed by such employee after the month in which such employee initially becomes entitled to insurance benefits under this title.".

(b) SELF-EMPLOYMENT INCOME.—Section 203(f)(5)(D) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 403(f)(5)(D)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (i),

(2) by adding "or" at the end of clause (ii),

(3) by inserting immediately after clause (ii) the following new clause:

"(iii) an individual who has attained retirement age (as defined in section 216(l)) who has become entitled to insurance benefits under this title, any income attributable to child care services (including indirect services) performed after the month in which such individual becomes entitled to such benefits,", and

(4) by striking out "royalties or other income" and inserting in lieu thereof "royalties or income".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply to wages or income earned after the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE IV—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 401. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING THE HIGHER EDUCATION ACT.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) postsecondary education is an increasingly important element in enhancing the productivity of the work force;

(2) the enrollment of students in colleges, junior colleges and technical institutes continues to increase rapidly;

(3) the most rapidly growing segment in such institutions consists of those students who are 25 years of age or older;

(4) postsecondary education must expand its services to meet the needs of the changing student population;

(5) a barrier to continuing education is the lack of affordable, accessible and quality child care;

(6) students are often economically disadvantaged and child care costs are an additional financial burden;

(7) postsecondary schools have limited resources for traditional student services and do not have additional funding for child care; and

(8) the One Hundredth Congress recognized that such problems exist and authorized, but did not appropriate, $10,000,000 for postsecondary institutions to assist students with child care.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that $10,000,000 should be appropriated in fiscal year 1990 to carry out subpart 8 of part A of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1070f).

SEC. 402. PENALTIES FOR DESECRATING THE FLAG.

Subsection (a) of section 700 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whoever knowingly and publicly mutilates, defaces, burns, displays on the floor or ground, or tramples upon any flag of the United States shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.".

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed the following conferees for matters within their respective committees' jurisdictions:

From the Committee on Labor and Human Resources: Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DODD, Mr. PELL, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. HATCH, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. JEFFORDS, and Mr. COATS.

From the Finance Committee: Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. DOLE, and Mr. ROTH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I commend the majority leader for his diligence in pursuing this legislation, which passed last year under the leadership of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD]. I welcome the willingness of the Members of the Republican Party to permit the leader to follow a time-honored procedure so that we could expedite the business of the Senate.

I must say, in listening to the recent exchange and hearing the possible suggestion that this legislation somehow might have been held up as a hostage unless we were going to be prepared to deal with the capital gains, I found that possibility extremely unseemly. The idea that we would try to link a capital gains agreement to trying to provide child care for millions of hardworking men and women in this country I think would have been a shameful procedure at best.

I express my appreciation to the majority leader for his perseverance. I thank him for his reasonableness. I know that this legislation is controversial. We have seen that it has been involved in controversy in the House of Representatives. But it is a matter of enormous importance to millions of hardworking families.

I welcome the fact we were able to get this kind of agreement. I could think of nothing that would be more unseemly than if we would be involved in holding this particular piece of legislation hostage to some debate on capital gains, saying to the working families of this country that we are not prepared to even permit a conference to move forward unless we are going to get resolution of the capital gains issue.

If that measure comes out, and it is scheduled by the leader, we will have an opportunity to debate it. It will take some time, clearly, to be in a position where that would overshadow what I think is the critical work of both the Finance Committee and our Human Resources Committee to try to work out these differences. And to try to get it to the President's desk at the earliest possible time is something we are going to be embarked upon doing.

Once again, I commend the majority leader for moving this extremely complex but enormously important legislation forward, and I welcome the fact we are going to be able to move into the conference and look forward to seeing a quick resolution.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I first of all thank my colleague from Massachusetts for yielding.

I too commend the majority leader for his efforts on behalf of this legislation, as well as to thank the minority leader. I realize these issues, while they are separate issues, are of great concern. About other matters, I am delighted we are going to be able to get to conference, and also glad we are not going to be breaking a time-honored precedent which I think could have been dangerous.

We hope now to be able to get to conference and present to the President a good bill. I think it is in the best interest of both Republicans and Democrats to have a good, strong child-care proposition.

I say to the majority leader and minority leader as well, I intend to go into the conference—I know the chairman does, Senator KENNEDY does—with a strong, open mind to craft good legislation that we can all be behind, supportive of, and send a positive message to the families of America.

I thank the majority leader and my friend from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the colleagues for their remarks. This fortunate result would not have been possible without the full cooperation of the distinguished Republican leader, with whom I have discussed this matter on several occasions and in some detail over the past several days.

He has been, as usual, unfailingly courteous and cooperative and I thank him very much for that effort which has made it possible for proceeding to the matter now.

As I indicated to the distinguished Republican leader, it is my hope and intention that we can now proceed promptly to the Panama-Nicaragua legislation the supplemental appropriation bill which includes aid to Panama and Nicaragua. I will be discussing with him briefly the scheduling of that event in light of the fact that tomorrow is the day on which the inauguration of Mrs. Chamorro will occur and the day on which we hope to take this legislation up and pass it. So I thank the distinguished Republican leader for his cooperation in this regard.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I do not want to leave the record to suggest that there was some linkage between capital gains and child care. There were a number of considerations as to whether we want to go back and reopen child care based on action taken by the House.

Obviously, capital gains is important to the President and this would have been an opportunity, but that was not the primary factor. It may have been one of many. I think it was finally determined that we are better off to go to conference to work out the real differences between the House and Senate bill, if we can, working with the administration where we can, in an effort to get a bill President Bush can sign.

So I do not want the record to reflect, based on the statement by the Senator from Massachusetts, that somehow this is some shameless effort to put capital gains on child care. That was not the crux of my discussion with the White House. They are interested in capital gains. They were last year. The President ran on a promise, so he is not going to overlook any opportunity. But there were other considerations too.

Second, I would just thank the majority leader, because I hope that we can move to the supplemental. Even though it may not be completed on the day of the inauguration, if we are discussing it on the Senate floor, we know we are going to pass something, that should send a strong, clear, positive signal to Mrs. Chamorro and the new government in Nicaragua.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed for 2 minutes on an unrelated item and that the pending amendments en bloc be set aside for that 2-minute period, at which time they would become the pending business again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. BUMPERS pertaining to the introduction of S. 2503 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, are we proceeding as in morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are not. The pending question would be the amendments offered en bloc by Senator HEINZ.

Does the Senator seek to be recognized under a unanimous consent request?

Mr. CHAFEE. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. CHAFEE. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. CHAFEE pertaining to the introduction of S. 2500 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

FAVORED-NATION STATUS FOR HUNGARY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENTS NUMBERED 1505, 1506, AND 1507

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I believe there are three amendments pending at the desk. I ask unanimous consent that they be considred en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would these be amendments numbered 1505, 1506, and 1507 by the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEINZ. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BENTSEN. Will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HEINZ. Yes.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, immediately following the disposition en bloc of the three amendments by the Senator from Pennsylvania, it be followed by the amendment by Senators STANFORD and HELMS of North Carolina, and that they be allowed 30 minutes to be equally divided between the opponents and proponents of the amendment. And that in addition to that, there be a 2-hour agreement equally divided and controlled by the opponents and proponents of the amendment by the Senator from Florida, Senator GRAHAM, concerning his amendment insofar as footwear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BENTSEN. It has come to my attention that we may have an objection to the unanimous consent agreement insofar as the Stanford-Helms amendment is concerned. Therefore, I would withhold that consent agreement, but I would proceed on the request insofar as the 2 hours allocated to the Senator from Florida on his amendment on footwear and that it be equally divided by the opponents and proponents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing no objection, the request, as modified, is agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I believe the Senate is ready to vote on the three pending amendments en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendments numbered 1505, 1506, and 1507, of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendments, (Nos. 1505, 1506, and 1507), were agreed to en bloc.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. Pesident, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1513

(Purpose: To suspend temporarily the duty on ranitidine hydrochloride)

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Mr. HELMS, Mr. DOLE, Mr. DODD, and Mr. MCCONNELL, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD], for himself, Mr. HELMS, Mr. DOLE, Mr. DODD, and Mr. MCCONNELL, proposes an amendment numbered 1513.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 59, after the matter preceding line 1, insert:

SEC. 1432. RANITIDINE HYDROCHLORIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.31.20 N[2-[[5-[(9 dimethyl-amino)methyl]-2-furanyl]methyl]thio] ethyl]-N'-methyl-2-nitro-1,1-ethenediamine, hydrochloride (ranitidine hydrochloride) (Provided for in subheading 2932.19.50)	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92.".

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, this amendment was originally introduced as S. 1342, which would suspend duty on ranitidine hydrochloride, which is produced and imported by Glaxo, Inc., for formulation in Glaxo's facilities in North Carolina, into Zantac, which is an ulcer drug.

Mr. President, Glaxo is a very important North Carolina company. It has invested several hundred million dollars in North Carolina already and is presently proposing an expansion of their facilities in the State in several localities. Glaxo is currently building a 1.5-million-square-foot research facility in Durham, NC, which is my hometown, that will employ over 1,000 scientists and a great many other support personnel. It is expected to be one of the largest pharmaceutical research labs in the world. Glaxo is also preparing for the expansion of its production facilities in several other North Carolina communities.

Glaxo is one of the finest community citizens that we have. Since the American Tobacco Co., and the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., have unfortunately been in decline, Glaxo has now come forward as one of the most influential local corporations. They are extremely important in their civic activities, and their support of community endeavors. Recently Glaxo was the recipient of one of the President's Points of Light awards for its excellent community service.

Ranitidine hydrochloride is a patented compound that cannot be manufactured or used by any other company and therefore it has no direct U.S. competitors. However, the final product, Zantac, is in the same therapeutic class as four other ulcer drugs. Three of the companies making similar ulcer drugs support or do not object to the enactment of this amendment. Only one, SmithKline Beecham, objected to the bill, claiming that it would give Glaxo a competitive advantage over them. However, SmithKline did not object to a similar exemption embodied in S. 2060, a bill approved by the committee, which would suspend duty on sucralfate, a competing ulcer drug, in the same therapeutic class and manufactured by Marion Merrill Dow. Marion Merrill Dow supports this amendment that we now have before us.

Both their provision and the Glaxo provision are identical in scope. They suspend the duty for a patented chemical ingredient in ulcer drugs that cannot be manufactured or used by any other company.

I think just the basic argument here is that it is unfair to allow one company to receive a duty suspension but to disallow the same treatment for a competing company simply because a competitor raises its hand and says I object. It is not the duty of this Senate, it seems to me, to favor one or another competitor. It is our obligation to be evenhanded in what we do. If we are to be evenhanded here, this amendment is the way to do it—simply to give all of these companies that are competing in the ulcer drug market the same competitive position.

Glaxo's ulcer drug really does not compete with the SmithKline product. It is true that they both make an ulcer medicine but the price of Glaxo is considerably higher. It is by far the most expensive. It is true that it is the most widely used but that is because it has been demonstrated that it has so few or no side effects. Therefore, lowering the duty, while it may allow Glaxo to invest more money in North Carolina or to reduce its price, would not change the competitive relationship with SmithKline.

Glaxo's product currently sells at a price approximately 30 percent higher than the SmithKline's price. Thus removing the current 3.7-percent duty would not give Glaxo an unfair competitive advantage.

The objection made by SmithKline is that this amendment would give an unfair advantage. That does not seem to me to be true, and certainly not entirely relevant.

The objection is made that it would encourage other companies to seek import duty suspensions. That strikes me as somewhat ironic because SmithKline has already sought and obtained 1 of 200 duty suspensions in this very bill. Glaxo could have objected to the provision that gave SmithKline its suspension in this bill, but did not. Glaxo believes that free trade is in the best interest of all of the pharmaceutical firms in this country and did not want any part of that.

I do not think the amendment would affect competition between Glaxo and SmithKline. Glaxo's product already has, in this particular part of the drug market, a very large market share because it is a product that a great many people want. It is prescribed widely because of its advantage of not having side effects.

So I believe that this simply comes down to the fact that one company does not want to see a competitor have any advantage in any way, even though there is no direct harm in this particular provision.

We could make the argument against what SmithKline has accepted and received. I do not think that is the real question here. This is an intermediate product. If more of the product is imported, then more of the final product will be made here in the United States using U.S. employees. That is the purpose of these kinds of suspensions. It does increase employment; it does improve our economy.

I think in the name of fairness, if we are going to grant this for the good of the Nation, as we are in 200 cases, certainly there is no justification for leaving this one out. I strongly urge and truly hope my colleagues will support this position.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, on the voice vote just taken, 0 to 3, on the Heinz amendments, en bloc, I specifically moved the clincher to indicate my support for all three of Senator HEINZ' additional amendments. I think he has a total of 28 duty suspension provisions in the bill.

Mr. HEINZ. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HELMS. Yes.

Mr. HEINZ. The Senator is understating the number because with his help just a moment ago—

Mr. HELMS. You bet you.

Mr. HEINZ. I now have 31, so I am extremely grateful.

Mr. HELMS. So plus 3 is 31.

Mr. HEINZ. I could not have done it without the help of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. The Senator is most kind. We have 31 to 1 and it seems to the Senator from North Carolina to be a little bit out of balance. JOHN HEINZ is a good guy and I know he is not going to rise in righteous opposition to one little duty suspension amendment. He is too nice a guy. Besides, I see on license plates, "You Have a Friend in Pennsylvania." I said, "that is right. JOHN HEINZ is my friend."

Seriously, Mr. President, it is remarkable the similarity between the remarks by my friend from North Carolina, my distinguished colleague, Mr. SANFORD, and the remarks that I have prepared.

Mr. President, Senator SANFORD and I introduced S. 1342, which is now being offered in the form of an amendment. We offered it on behalf of Glaxo, Inc., as Senator SANFORD has said. Glaxo is a fine corporate citizen of North Carolina, and Glaxo does use ranitidine hydrochloride to make Zantac, which just happens to be the most popular antiulcer drug on the market. As is the case with most of the 200 or so tariff-relief provisions already in this bill, ranitidine hydrochloride is not produced in the United States. If it were produced in the United States, I would not be standing on this floor. It is not produced anywhere in this country.

Obviously, this amendment, as was the case with our original bill, S. 1342, is vitally important to Senator SANFORD and me. Let me tell my colleagues a few reasons why. In its Zebulon, NC, plant, Glaxo produces all of the Zantac that is consumed in the entire United States of America—all of it. Currently, the Zebulon plant is operating at 100 percent capacity. Yet, the demand for Zantac is growing constantly and by leaps and bounds. People who have ulcers need it; they want it. That is why it has become the most effective medicine on the market.

Consequently, Glaxo is planning to use the revenues saved by this new suspension to invest in additional manufacturing facilities, and I am glad to say the facilities will be in North Carolina, Mr. President. In addition to assuring that there is an adequate supply of Zantac to meet the demands from the consumers of America who need it, such a move to expand will create additional jobs and economic opportunity in my State. I confess the vested interest in it.

Let me emphasize that the ranitidine hydrochloride is not produced in the United States, and I reiterate that if it were, I would not be joining in the cosponsoring of this amendment, and Senator SANFORD would not have been willing to offer it either.

So, Mr. President, with that I am going to withhold any further remarks.

Mr. SYMMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] is recognized.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I want to make a couple brief comments about this amendment. I know of no two Senators in this Chamber who are more gentlemen than Senator HEINZ and Senator HELMS, or Senator SANFORD, for that matter, but they are also more strong minded.

I might say to my colleague from North Carolina that I intended to bring this amendment up in committee, but my colleagues will remember we were involved with the clean air legislation on the Senate floor, and I was going back and forth between the committee and the Chamber. One thing and another, I never got the amendment formally raised at committee, and for that I regret because I think it is an issue we should have completed in committee.

I want to set the record straight. It is famous for politicians throughout history to say half their friends are on one side and half their friends are on the other side and, therefore, they are friends.

I feel somewhat in the middle. We do not make Zantac in Idaho. We use it. We do not make Tagamet in Idaho. We use it. We are not disinterested parties in the issue here. But what really happened is there has been a rule in the committee where if someone objects to one of these things, we do not get the amendment brought up.

I ask an inquiry of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Is there not something like half a billion or 600 million dollars' worth of Tagamet sold in the United States that is made in Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEINZ. I do not have the exact number. I do know that the Glaxo product has the larger share of the market approximately 58 percent. I do not recollect whether that is share of dollars or share of doses, but either way, obviously at 58 percent they are the biggest competitor.

They do a very good job in North Carolina making products. There is no question about it. They also do a very fine job in Pennsylvania.

Mr. SYMMS. The question I wanted to ask is, are we not talking about a really large, significant amount of products that are used to treat ulcers, that are competitive products, and this tariff reduction would be a small amount of money; is that correct?

Mr. HEINZ. My understanding is that the amount of money involved here is $13 million a year. That amount is a relatively large revenue loss for a duty suspension.

For example, Senator HELMS mentioned that there are 28 provisons that I have in this legislation. The average revenue loss of each of those suspensions was about $500,000, so this is 25 times the magnitude of any of those on average. So it is substantial. I will have more to say on that subject at the appropriate time.

Mr. SYMMS. Some of the Senator's constituents came in to see me because I raised the issue in the committee and never offered the amendment. It has been elevated to a visual understanding and I had been contacted. But I wanted to get it into perspective for all of our colleagues.

Mr. SANFORD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SYMMS. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. SANFORD. CBO estimated in the first year the revenue loss would be $7.3 million, the second year $9.9 million and, of course, there will be no third year.

Mr. SYMMS. So it is not $13 million; it would be less than $10 million each year.

Mr. SANFORD. It would be less than $13 million a year and, of course, it will be more as they manufacture more and more of this ulcer product.

Mr. SYMMS. But the question I was asking was to try to put this in perspective. We are talking about large dollar volume sales of both of these two very popular products that are used for some of the same treatment.

Mr. SANFORD. That is correct.

Mr. SYMMS. It depends. We are talking in the neighborhood of $1 to $2 billion if you combine the two products and the two competing interests, but the suspension is less than $10 million.

Mr. SANFORD. Per year.

Mr. SYMMS. So to put it into perspective, it is not a significant thing, and if in fact it ends up that more product is sold it may not cost the Treasury anything.

Mr. SANFORD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SYMMS. I thank my colleagues. I thank them for their indulgence for my questions. I hope the Senators from Pennsylvania and North Carolina can resolve this somehow. I understand it is very difficult to resolve because they both have competing constituencies; that those people in Pennsylvania do not vote in North Carolina and vice versa, and this makes it a difficult question.

It seems to me we are really talking about the American people who have ulcers ending up in the long run, paying for this through higher pharmaceutical costs if there is no suspension. There is no free lunch, so somebody is going to have to pay for it. Ultimately, it will come out of the budget of the consumers of those products.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, let me hand my friend from Pennsylvania a copy of the amendment as modified. I do not know that anybody informed him that Senator SANFORD and I did modify it. The Senator will notice the modification on page 2. That will affect the statistics that we are discussing. I do not want the RECORD to be wrong.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, every so often we get into a legislative difference on the floor that we would all just as soon avoid. There is nobody I take less pleasure in opposing than the distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina and his junior colleague. They are very effective legislators. They are at the same time a wonderful combination of graciousness; they are very thoughtful and quite clear-headed, even tough-minded, legislators. They do an outstanding job for not just their States—we all do the very best job we know how for our States, and they are second to none in that record—but the senior Senator from North Carolina is in fact legendary for the tremendous job he does in fighting for and often winning the causes in which he believes.

He has just demonstrated his graciousness in not objecting to three amendments that I had proposed to this bill, and he was kind enough to remind me that I am a very nice guy, and I appreciate that.

I am beginning to feel almost guilty—I see the junior Senator from North Carolina does not mind my feeling guilty—that I should rise to oppose the amendment of the Senators from North Carolina, and obviously I do so with some personal reluctance. But I do so because I think there are good, substantive reasons to oppose it.

As I listened to the debate and discussion by Senator SANFORD, I noted that he went to considerable lengths, Mr. President, to indicate that these two products do not compete. I understand what he is saying, that the raw imported chemical ranitidine hydrochloride has to be literally shaped into a medication and before it is shaped, packaged, and distributed it obviously does not compete. But I think everybody understands that we have an economic disagreement between two companies, one located in North Carolina, the Glaxo Co., one located in my home State of Pennsylvania, Smith-Kline, Smith-Kline Beecham now, which market competing ulcer medications, one of which uses as its principal component the chemical ranitidine hydrochloride on which the amendment of the Senator would suspend the duty.

I mention this point, while it may be obvious to some, because if indeed these products do compete, the basic argument as I understood it of the Senator from North Carolina would be undermined.

I should like to introduce into the RECORD several documents regarding the nature of this competition and the nature of the use of these two medications. One is from the John F. Kennedy Memorial Hospital in Philadelphia, PA, in which it states that:

"A recent evaluation by the Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee with input and approval from the GI physicians, the Medical Staff, and the Medical Executive Committee, has concluded that for the majority of uses both cimetidine"—that is the product of Smith-Kline—"and ranitidine"—the product of Glaxo—"are therapeutically interchangeable at the recommended doses."

I ask unanimous consent that this entire memorandum be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOHN F. KENNEDY MEMORIAL HOSPITAL
Philadelphia, PA, April 27, 1989.

To: Medical Staff, JFK Mem. Hospital Nursing Staff, JFK Mem. Hospital.

From: Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee.

Subject: H2 Therapeutic Equivalency Statement.

A recent evaluation by the Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee with input and approval from the GI physicians, the Medical Staff and the Medical Executive Committee, has concluded that for the majority of uses both cimetidine and ranitidine are therapeutically interchangeable at the recommended doses. No significant differences in side effects profiles were documented. Differences in drug interactions with these agents were judged to be clinically not significant in the majority of cases. Given therapeutic equivalency, it was concluded that cost differences should determine which drug should be the first drug of choice at John F. Kennedy Memorial Hospital and the following guidelines were adopted:

1. Cimetidine should be the primary H2 antagonist used at JFK.

2. Ranitidine should be reserved for use in cases where cimetidine therapy is documented to be contraindicated, successful therapeutic end points were not achieved with prior trial with cimetidine, or an allergy to cimetidine is known.

3. A switch from the injectable to the oral form of the medication should be accomplished as soon as patients are able to tolerate oral medication.

4. The same shall apply for outpatient oral use, cimetidine will be the primary H2 antagonist of choice at JFK.

Mr. HEINZ. I also ask unanimous consent that the Pharmacy Newsletter printed by the University of Missouri-Columbia Hospital & Clinics, also making essentially the same point, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the newsletter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTRODUCTION

A recent position paper titled, "Improving Medical Education in Therapeutics" (Ann Intern Med 1988: 108: 145-7) authored by the Health and Public Policy Committee, American College of Physicians, provides for a timely introduction to the controversial topic before us. The following points have been taken from the "position paper" and are directly related to the forthcoming discussion.

Continuing medical education in pharmacology can be characterized as largely random, incomplete, and subject to distortion.

The actual prescribing practices of physicians appear to be heavily influenced by the views of the pharmaceutical industry. There should be a wise skepticism of pharmaceutical industry claims.

Increased dissemination of information concerning the activities of the Food and Drug Administration would be particularly useful.

Physicians should be provided with up-to-date and clinically relevant information in therapeutics.

These concerns are a high priority for the Medical Staff's Committee on Pharmacy and Therapeutics. It is with these points in mind that this review has been written.

EFFICACY

Ranitidine (Zantac®) and Cimetidine (Tagamet®) are commonly used medications for inpatients and outpatients at UMCHC as well as worldwide. These drugs are used to treat the conditions or diseases appearing in Table 1.

Cimetidine and Ranitidine work by competitively inhibiting the action of histamine (H-2) receptors of the parietal cells. This inhibition produces a dose-related decrease in the quantity of gastric acid produced. Although ranitidine is more potent on a milligram basis when compared to cimetidine, the agents are equally effective when comparable dosage regimens (see Table 1) are employed.[1,2,3] Contrary to a popular misconception held by some, ranitidine does not have enhanced therapeutic efficacy.

SAFETY—ADVERSE EFFECTS

Much has been said and written about differences in adverse effects between the H-2 antagonists ranitidine and cimetidine. Unfortunately, most of this information has been in the form of uncontrolled, anecdotal reports or subjective opinions. It is obvious that such information does not conform to the evaluation requirements of the "Scientific Method". While this information is of some interest, it is often incomplete and subject to distortion. Needless to say, this type of information should not be used to determine comparative safety profiles between cimetidine and rantidine.

Any discussion of differential safety between equally effective therapeutic agents is not complete unless the actual incidence of adverse effects is kept in perspective. With regard to the H-2 antagonists, it is clear from the treatment of more than 80 million patients (since cimetidine was introduced in 1976 and ranitidine in 1981) that the incidence of significant side effects is extremely low and that these agents enjoy an impressive safety profile. (For safety profile see Table 2). In fact, the F.D.A. recently sent letters to U.S. state formulary boards, which stated that "there are no adequate and substantial data of which we are aware" that show Zantac to be superior to Tagamet in overall safety and effectiveness. These letters, which were actually copies of an admonitory letter sent to Glaxo by the F.D.A, were sent in an effort to counter certain claims made by Glaxo, after strict warnings by the F.D.A., indicating that ranitidine is superior in certain ways to cimetidine. The following list gives examples of some of the claims which have been used in both written and verbal marketing by Glaxo:

(1) Glaxo said that a course of therapy with Tagamet is recommended for a period of four to six weeks; the F.D.A. pointed out that both drugs have comparable healing rates at four weeks.

(2) Glaxo maintained that Zantac heals ulcers in patients who do not respond to Tagamet the F.D.A. noted that while this may be correct, it is also true that Tagamet heals ulcers in patients who do not respond to Zantac.

(3) Glaxo asserted Zantac has fewer side effects than Tagamet, the F.D.A. pointed out this is only natural since Tagamet has been on the market almost twice as long. The longer a drug is on the market, the more adverse reactions are reported.

(4) Glaxo said that experience with Zantac suggests that it does not have antiandrogenic effects of Tagamet the F.D.A. stated that the incidence of reversible impotence is not significantly different between Tagamet and placebo and that a very similar warning appears in Zantac's labelling.

DRUG INTERACTIONS

Two recent extensive reviews provide valuable insight into the complicated issue of clinically important drug interactions as they relate to cimetidine and ranitidine. By carefully reviewing the scientific literature, Smith and Kendall were able to distill most of the information into the following message:

Cimetidine and ranitidine bind to Cytochrome P450 and may inhibit the metabolism of drugs eliminated by the mixed function oxygenase system. In this respect, the pharmacokinetics of many drugs have been shown to be influenced, sometimes substantially, by cimetidine, but only a small degree or not at all by randitine. Resultant effects of clinical significance are rare, but have been confirmed for, Theophyline, Warfarin, Phenytoin, Lidocaine. [Clinical pharmacokinetics 15: 44-56 (1988)]

Regarding drug interactions with Theophylline, Warfarin, Phenytoin, Lidocaine, the current literature recommends the following options: (1) reduce the dosage of the interacting drug, or (2) choose an alternative H-2 antagonist such as ranitidine which minimizes such interactions, and then proceed with dosage stabilization as is otherwise recommended. [Clinical Pharmacokinetics 12: 321-366 (1987)] These recommendations, while appropriate for some patients may not be ideal for others. In order to increase the clinical utility of the above recommendations the following delineation has been made. In those patients who have been stabilized on Theophylline, Warfarin, Phenytoin, or Lidocaine and are to have an H-2 antagonist added to their drug regimen, it is very reasonable to choose an agent such as ranitidine which will minimize any alteration in the phamacokinetics of these drugs.

When the converse situation encountered; that is a patient already receiving cimetidine who needs to have Theophyline, Warfarin, Phenytoin, or Lidocaine added to their drug regimen, then the aforementioned two approaches are appropriate; (1) reduce the dosage of the interacting drug, or (2) choose an alternative H-2 antagonist such as ranitidine which minimizes such interactions* (see below), and then proceed with dosage stabilization as is otherwise recommended.

* Note: Ranitidine has been shown to inhibit the metabolism of warfarin and theophylline to a clinically significant degree. (Ajoy, RK. et al. Am J Med 85: 525-527, 1988) (Desmond, PV. et al. Clin Pharmacol and Ther 35: 338-341, 1984).

In general, the degree of inhibition of drug metabolism by cimetidine is on the order of 10 to 20% with a daily dosage of 300mg to 400mg, 20 to 30% with 400 to 800mg, and 30 to 40% with 800 to 1600mg. The onset of inhibition is rapid, maximum inhibition occurs 24 hours after starting cimetidine. The recovery rate is also rapid and clearance rates return to baseline two to three days after stopping cimetidine, depending on the half-life of the interacting drug; in the case of warfarin, plasma concentrations will not return to pre-cimetidine level for at least 7 days. [Clinical Pharmacokinetics 12: 321-366 (1987)]

Actual studies [4 5 6 7] (not uncontrolled case reports) designed to examine the pharmacokinetic and pharmacodynamic effects of cimetidine on drugs possessing wide therapeutic margins (ie. propranolol or diazepam) have documented a pharmacokinetic interaction, however enhancement of pharmacodynamic effect has not been shown to occur (One early study of propranolol [8] suggested a decrease in resting heart rate but did not evaluate all study subjects—Later studies [5 6], which were prospectively designed to evaluate all study patients for changes in heart rate, failed to confirm these findings). These studies do not prove that changes in drug effect cannot occur in a given patient, but rather, they speak to the extremely low likelihood of a clinically significant change occurring. It is possible that a given patient receiving cimetidine and a drug such as propranolol or diazepam could experience enhanced pharmacodynamic effect as a result of decreased drug metabolism.

Both ranitidine and cimetidine have been shown [9 10] to decrease the renal elimination of Procainamide. The mechanism of this drug interaction involves competition for renal tubular excretion between H-2 antagonists and procainamide, both of which are basic drugs. This interaction is of minimal clinical significance.

In summation, regarding potential drug interactions, the Food and Drug Administration has stated that the current data indicates that clinically significant cimetidine-induced drug interactions occur only for theophylline, phenytoin, lidocaine, and warfarin. That data supporting other clinically significant interactions has been questionable at best.

Additionally, Somogyi and Muirhead [Clinical Pharmacokinetics 12: 321-366 (1987)] have concluded that. "Although cimetidine interacts with a large number of drugs, reports of incidents of drug toxicity are uncommon. This may be due to the fact that physicians are well aware of those drugs with a narrow therapeutic index which interact clinically with cimetidine and have taken appropriate action, or the fact that the majority of drugs have a wide therapeutic index so that a 50% increase in plasma concentrations would not be deleterious to the patient".

When the therapeutic efficacy and safety of two agents are deemed equivalent, it is appropriate to consider cost efficacy. The following table (Table 3) has been designed to provide hospital cost information for the UMCHC prescriber.

TABLE 3.—COST PROFILES OF CIMETIDINE AND RANITIDINE

Cimetidine		Ranitidine
Dosage regimen	Cost/ week	Dosage regimen	Cost/ week
PO:
900mg po hs [1]	$8.40	300mg po hs	$11.50
450mg po bid [2]	8.40	150mg po bid	11.50

[1] 900mg (3x300mg) is used in place of 800mg.
[2] 450mg (1.5x300mg) is used in place of 400mg (300mg tablet breaks in half easily with moderate pressure).
[3] For the prophylaxis of bleeding from stress ulcers, the Comparative Daily Dose is 6 to 1, Cimetidine to Ranitidine; from the only study of sufficient size (Siepler J, et al. Gastroenterology, 1987; 92: 1639).

CONCLUSION—THE BOTTOM LINE

When considering efficacy, safety and cost, it is clear that no one drug is right for all patients. And so it goes for ranitidine and cimetidine.

The bottom line is that in a majority of inpatients and outpatients (i.e. those not receiving phenytoin, lidocaine, theophyline, or warfarin), the preferential use of cimetidine is effective, safe and will result in a cost savings for patients. Therefore, the medical staff's Committee on Pharmacy and Therapeutics has designated ranitidine as formulary reseved starting November 1, 1988.

Mr. HEINZ. I also ask that the Pharmacy Newsletter of the South Miami Hospital in Miami, FL, making substantially the same point, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the newsletter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the South Miami Hospital Pharmacy Newsletter, October/November 1989]

H_2 ANTAGONIST UPDATE: TAGAMET OFFERS SIGNIFICANT PATIENT SAVINGS

The Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee has suggested that Tagamet (cimetidine) and Zantac (ranitidine) are equally efficacious and safe. Furthermore, since the oral route is therapeutically equivalent and is more cost effective (patient savings of more than $40 per day), conversion to oral therapy is encouraged as soon as the patient is able to take oral medication or food.

The cost of Tagamet to the patient as purchased by the pharmacy as part of a VHA group purchasing program is considerably lower than the cost of Zantac. These savings could result in approximately $40,000 in annual savings to the hospital and are subsequently passed on to the patient. The patient charge for Tagamet is 40% (or a savings of $19.50 per day) less than Zantac in therapeutic equivalent dosage at an every 8 hour intermittent frequency or with the use of continuous infusion.

PATIENT COST PER 24 HOURS

	Amount
Tagamet 300 mg I.V. q8° or continuous infusion	$48.00.
Zantac 50 mg I.V. q8° or continuous infusion	[1] 67.50—$90.00.

[1] Continuous infusion.

As a recommendation of the P&T Committee, an H_2 Antagonist Information sheet will be sent to the floor as a reminder of the cost savings resulting from the use of Tagamet and the use of oral vs injectable therapy. Use of a parenteral H_2 antagonist should be reserved for patients who can not take oral medication, or patients in which oral therapy is contraindicated when parenteral administration is required. Advantages of using continuous infusion therapy include: maintaining constant blood levels thus preventing fluctuations in pH, theoretically less side effects and reduced cost to the patient (1 vs 3 I.V. solution charges).

The patient charges for oral therapy are as follows:

	Tagamet	Daily/ total charge	Zantac	Daily/ total charge
Oral Treatment	400 mg ($2.90) b.i.d.	$5.80	150 mg ($4.40) b.i.d..	$8.80
Oral Treatment	800 mg ($3.50) HS.	3.50	300 mg ($5.50) HS.	5.50
Oral Maintenance	400 mg ($2.90) HS.	2.90	150 mg ($4.40) HS.	4.40

Clinically significant drug interactions resulting in increased serum levels of theophylline, phenytoin, or warfarin have been reported with the use of Tagamet. The potential for similar interactions with the use of Zantac also exists. Appropriate clinical monitoring, including the use of serum level determinations, are recommended with these drugs.

Thus, it is recommended that Tagamet should be used as a first-line H_2 antagonist for both oral and I.V. therapy. I.V. Tagamet should be administered by continuous infusion as a 300 mg loading dose, followed by 900 mg/120 ml D_5W at 5 ml/hr. Zantac may be used as a therapeutic alternative in patients receiving concurrent drugs known to produce interactions with cimetidine, resulting in adverse clinical effects.

INFLUENZA VIRUS VACCINE 1989—1990

Influenza vaccine contains two type A and one type B virus strains. The three viruses are representative of Influenza strains recently circulating worldwide and believed likely to circulate in the United States the following winter.

Influenza vaccination is strongly recommended for any person six months of age or over, who by virture of age or underlying medical condition, is at increased risk for complications of influenza. It is also strongly recommended for healthcare workers and others, including household members who may have close contract with high-risk persons.

The 1989—1990 vaccine will contain 15 micrograms each of A/Taiwan/1/86-like, A/Shanghai/11/87-like and B/Yamogata 16/88-like antigens in each 0.5 ml.

Because of the lower potential for causing febrile reactions, only split virus vaccine should be used in children. Children, 6-36 months, should receive 0.25 ml IM of the split-virus vaccine. Children, 3-12 years of age, should receive 0.5 ml IM of the split-virus vaccine. Persons over 12 years should receive whole or split-virus vaccine, 0.5 ml IM.

The recommended site of vaccination is the deltoid muscle for adults and older children. The preferred site for infants and younger children is the anterolateral aspect of the thigh.

Although influenza vaccine often contains one or more antigens used in previous years, immunity declines in the year following vaccination. Therefore, annual vaccination using the current vaccine is required. Remaining 1988-1989 vaccine from last year should not be used for this influenza season.

SOUTH MIAMI HOSPITAL PHARMACY AND THERAPEUTICS COMMITTEE

H2 Antagonists Information Sheet

The Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee has suggested that Tagamet and Zantac are equally efficacious. Furthermore, since the oral route is therapeutically equivalent and more cost effective than the IV route, conversion to oral therapy is encouraged as soon as the patient is able to take oral medications. The cost savings of oral vs IV therapy is very significant without compromising therapy.

Use of parenteral H2 antagonists should be reserved for patients who can't take oral medications or patients where oral therapy is contraindicated. When parenteral administration is required, advantages of using continuous infusion therapy include: Maintaining consistent blood levels thus preventing fluctuations in pH, theoretically less side effects and reduced cost to the patient (one v.s. three D_5W partial fills). A 300 mg IV loading dose is recommended prior to initiation of a continuous infusion.

Significant drug interactions resulting in increased serum levels of theophylline, phenytoin or warfarin have been reported with the use of Tagamet. The potential for similar interactions with the use of Zantac also exists. Appropriate clinical monitoring, including the use of serum level determinations is recommended with these drugs.

There is a potential savings of $40/day when oral vs injectable H2 antagonist is used (includes cost of IV solutions, preparation and administration time).

Cost of H2 Antagonists

	Per days
Tagamet 300 mg IV q 8°	$4.91
Tagamet 300 mg IV q 6°	6.54
Zantac 50 mg IV q 8°	10.14

Tagamet 300 mg (loading dose) followed by 900 mg/120 ml D_5W ml/hr infusion $4.91/day.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I think, therefore, what we need to recognize is we have one of those unpleasant arguments that is strictly an economic one, and I think the economic issues are the ones we should address.

These products compete directly. To say they do not compete is like saying that Ford and Chrysler do not compete because they are different cars, and different people end up driving them, or that Rice Krispies and Corn Flakes do not compete because different people end up eating them, or that imports do not compete with domestic products.

We know all these things are in fact competitive products, and I hope we can dispose of that point.

I think the two major issues here are the revenue loss, which I cited a moment ago as $13 million, and the question of jobs, because were I in the position of the Senators from North Carolina, I too would be concerned about any impact on jobs in their State.

Let me try as I can to reconcile the difference in numbers versus those that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD] mentioned a moment ago. I mentioned the $13 million number. He mentioned in the first year $7.3 million; in the second year, $9.9 million.

I would first say that in either case we are talking about fairly large, substantial numbers. Many of us have come to this floor to argue our cases for amendments and on appropriations bills for amounts far less than either $13 million or $7.3 million or $9.9 million.

I was on this floor arguing a few years ago for just $2 million for adoption assistance. We had a lengthy debate. I was lucky that day; I won my case. The Senate supported that argument. Two million dollars is a lot of money in this body; so is $7 million or $9 million or $13 million.

The Senator from North Carolina correctly states that his numbers are CBO numbers. Those numbers were generated, I am told, either sometimes in 1989 or early in 1990. The date of the CBO document is February 23. When those numbers were received, it is my understanding that everybody who looked at them thought they were low, and that the Glaxo Co. itself estimated that they thought they would save $13 million a year if this duty was suspended because they have been increasing their volume. They have been building their business. They are now the lion's share of the market. They are some 58 percent of this entire market.

The question, then, is what does the United States have in the way of an interest in this question? The answer is very simple. We have somewhere between $9.9 million and $13 million a year interest for every year that this suspension would be in effect. The question is, What do we get out of that revenue loss if the amendment is adopted?

As far as this Senator can tell, we are not going to get anything. This product already is at a higher price. It is currently increasing its share of market. As a former marketing man myself, when you have a product that has the lion's share of the market, which is doing well, you do not bother to cut the price unless you are insane. I do not think the makers of this product are. I think they are rational. I think they are good marketing people and good people.

So this Senator's analysis is that the main thing the United States gets out of this suspension is a revenue loss with no compensation that is identifiable to this Senator or, to the best of my knowledge, anybody else who has taken an objective look at it.

I said that the other issue is jobs. I, just like the Senators from North Carolina, want as many jobs in the United States of America as we can possibly have. While I would rather have them in Pennsylvania, the truth is if the choice is having them in North Carolina or overseas and they cannot come to Pennsylvania, I certainly want them in North Carolina.

It seems to this Senator that the way to encourage this company to build a plant in North Carolina is not to make it cheaper or easier for them to import ranitidine hydrochloride. The cheaper it is for them to import ranitidine hydrochloride, the less likely it is that they are going to manufacture it in the United States. Otherwise, the laws of economics would appear not to apply.

So while I cannot guarantee that the Glaxo Co. will build a plant in North Carolina, while I certainly want them to build a plant in North Carolina, or in Pennsylvania, as the case may be, nonetheless if we make it easier for them to import that which might be made in this country, remember, we reduce the chances of them doing so.

This product, as I understand the world market for it, ranitidine hydrochloride, is certainly doing very well. But it either is not or will not long be in short supply. The Glaxo Co. has just announced the acquisition of a stake in a Soviet drug factory to manufacture ranitidine hydrochloride in the Soviet Union.

As a result, I think that it is highly likely that there certainly should not be any worries about adequate supplies of this chemical that is the basis for this ulcer medication.

So I conclude by saying, Mr. President, that we have here products that compete. Traditionally, when that kind of issue arises before the Finance Committee, it has been our custom to recognize that we are taking sides in an economic dispute. We do not come before the Senate very frquently with anything that is in dispute. This is a rare occurrence, in other words, today.

But let me tell you what is not a rare occurrence. What is not a rare occurrence is when one objection has been raised to a duty suspension in the Finance Committee that there is any argument about dropping it. Over the years, we have agreed not to consider literally dozens of duty suspensions simply because one Member objected, or one Member was asked to object on behalf of another Member. That is because we expected these duty suspensions to be genuinely noncontroversial.

As the Senators from North Carolina pointed out, it is true that the Senator from Pennsylvania has 28 provisions in the original bill in the way of duty suspensions. They are in there not because the Senator from Pennsylvania is necessarily a superior legislative strategist, but frankly they are in there because nobody, after having been notified, after reviewing the provisions as individual bills, after the committee markup had been advertised for a number of weeks, nobody in the U.S. Senate objected.

Had somebody objected to any one of them, or for that matter to all of them, with a legitimate objection, those would not have remained in this bill.

So what this legislation represents is a genuinely noncontroversial measure. Occasionally, we will have times like this where we have to settle those question by a vote, and so it will be today.

So I hope my colleagues bear in mind that there is a significant revenue loss associated with this amendment.

It is real money, it is not pretend money. It is money that we receive each year into the Treasury, somewhere between $10 and $13 million, depending which estimate you want to believe. And, at least in this Senator's judgment, the hopes and desires of the Senators from North Carolina for more jobs and for the production of this specific chemical, ranitidine hydrochloride, in their State would, in my judgment, best be served by retaining this duty and not suspending it.

I yield the floor, Mr. President. I thank the chair.

Mr. SPECTER. I supplement the comments made by my distinguished colleague, Senator HEINZ, briefly, because I think most of the grounds have been covered.

I point out that the issue pending before the Senate, which will soon be called for a vote, is more than a controversy between the Senators from Pennsylvania and the Senators from North Carolina. There is a principled basis upon which this issue should be decided by our colleagues, as they will be called upon to cast a vote on the pending matter.

The standard principles for a duty suspension turn on two considerations: if the material is difficult or impossible to produce in the United States, or because of licensing terms, it is prohibited for the item to be produced in the United States.

The issue in question does not meet either of these tests. Glaxo Holdings, a British company, has a patent on this product, Zantac, and is free to manufacture it in the United States, if it so chooses. Zantac is the largest selling prescription drug in the world and is, in fact, a very profitable item. It accounts for some $2.4 billion annually, and has 60 percent of the market.

This matter had been considered by the Finance Committee, which has jurisdiction over this issue, and on an objection having been lodged, it was decided by the Finance Committee that there would not be a duty suspension in this matter.

The administration opposes the suspension because there is a very considerable revenue loss involved amounting to some $40 million over the 3-year period. Jobs are certainly a consideration, and it would be in all of our interests to have as many jobs in North Carolina and in any State in the United States as we possibly could have. But if you project the estimated number of jobs involved, it would cost the Treasury several hundred thousand dollars for each one of these jobs.

So that as other Senators who may be viewing this debate on their television monitors or listening to it on the Squawk boxes may be hearing what is going on, it is just not simply a debate among four Senators representing the parochial interests of two separate States. We really have issues of principle involved here under standing operating practices, and the duty ought not be suspended when you take into account the very substantial sum of money, some $40 million, that impacts upon the other 48 of the United States.

As my colleague Senator HEINZ pointed out, we never like to come to the floor and debate with our colleagues, Senator HELMS or Senator SANFORD, on issues that affect their States. But that is our responsibility. As others approach it, I submit that on the grounds of established principle, this amendment ought to be rejected. I yield the floor.

ADDITIONAL CONFEREES ON H.R. 3

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, earlier this afternoon, the Chair appointed conferees on behalf of the Senate for the conference of H.R. 3. Two names were inadvertently omitted. I understand that the following request has been cleared with the Republican side of the aisle.

I ask unanimous consent that Senator ADAMS and Senator MIKULSKI be included in with the list of conferees on behalf of the Labor Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FAVORED-NATION STATUS FOR HUNGARY

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, the chairman of the Finance Committee is caught in the crossfire between good friends on both sides of this issue who are eloquently presenting their case.

We are talking about a temporary suspension here of the duty on imported ranitidine hydrochloride, the active ingredient that goes into antiulcer drug. This provision went through the same consideration in the Finance Committee that all the other miscellaneous tariff bills do. We published this and asked for public comment, along with hundreds of other proposed suspensions of duty, and we had an objection to this one. And we had negative comments from SmithKline Beecham, a domestic producer of a competing ulcer drug.

We had a report from the Commerce Department and the administration, also opposing temporary suspension on this particular drug. Therefore, the bill was treated as controversial and was not included in the noncontroversial bills that the committee adopted en bloc and brought before you.

We did have an agreement that if there was a controversy and there was an objection, any member of the committee could propose that that be debated, and if it won on its merits there, it would be included. There were a great number of such amendments presented on behalf of other Members of the Senate.

One of the good reasons, I think, for opposing an amendment such as this, where it is controversial and is objected to is the effect this might have on the new round of trade agreements in the GATT. If we are going to make tariff concessions that affect U.S. producers, we should do it as part of those multilateral negotiations, and we ought to be getting something for that concession.

I appreciate very much that the Senators from North Carolina are doing their best to help a company located in their State, but given that there is a domestic competitor that raises objections, I must oppose the amendment.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I can assure the distinguished chairman and other members of the Finance Committee that if I had been a member of the Finance Committee, I would have done my best to carry that. But neither Senator SANFORD nor I is a member of that committee.

We had a distinguished Senator who is a member of the committee present, who attempted to offer this provision and he was unable to do so. Now, there are over 200——

Mr. BENTSEN. Will the Senator yield on that?

Mr. HELMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BENTSEN. I say to the Senator from North Carolina, I was not aware of any attempt to offer this amendment in the committee by a Senator, and many were offered for other Senators who were not on the committee.

Mr. HELMS. Well, the Senator has so much on his mind and carries such a burden in the Senate, I know he does not recall Senator SYMMS' attempt to offer it.

Mr. BENTSEN. I certainly do not.

Mr. HELMS. That is perfectly understandable to me. I do not have any feelings about that one way or another. But we did do our best, I will say to my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD] both he and I tried to have that done in the committee. I also understand the workings of committees, particularly with legislation of such detail. But the fact remains that there are approximately 200 active duty suspension provisions in this legislation. As for this particular proposed duty suspension, there are four competitors. Three of the competitors are in favor of this amendment. Only one, SmithKline, is opposed to it.

On the other hand, Glaxo has supported SmithKline in every instance according to my understanding. So, this is strictly a competitive thing as Senator HEINZ has accurately stated.

I do hope that the Senate will not get into the business of saying this one can have duty suspension but this one cannot because a competing company, in this case, Smith-Kline, did not want Glaxo to have it.

Mr. President, let me take a moment to clarify some of the revenue estimates that have been thrown around today.

For S. 1342, which is identical to the amendment we have offered, the Congressional Budget Office estimated a revenue loss of $7.3 million for 1990, $9.9 million for 1991, and $9.9 million for 1992. The total comes to $27.1 million over 3 years.

However, let me emphasize that the $27.1 million estimate was on our original bill, which would have taken effect retroactively to January 1, 1990, as many other provisions in this bill do. In fact, one of the provisions in this bill is retroactive to April 1986.

Senator SANFORD and I have significantly modified this amendment so that it takes effect only upon enactment of the bill. As modified, the revenue estimate is approximately $21.7 million over 3 years.

Mr. President, that is certainly not an insignificant amount, but it is not disproportionate when compared to $35.1 million for electrostatic copying machines, $25.7 million for cantaloupes, $18.9 million for Ciprofloxacin, and a number of others that cost around $10 million over 3 years.

In addition, I might note that the Senator from Pennsylvania has 30 provisions in this bill that lose a total of approximately $34 million. That could be higher because several of the provisions were included in the bill even though no CBO revenue estimate was available. In addition, no revenue estimate was given on the three additional amendments that were included earlier by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I am not going to attempt to prolong this debate. I think we have come to the point where we can vote on it.

I simply would add to what my distinguished colleague has pointed out, that it does not seem quite appropriate to the free enterprise system to penalize success. Certainly 90 to 150 new jobs will be created. That produces income. That produces better business and a stronger economy. Any savings will be passed on to the customer, put back into the business, or part of it paid as taxes on profits.

So the whole concept of careful consideration of these suspensions and matters has been accepted and I think a very useful process for the entire econony.

Since we did not have an opportunity to develop discussion of this in the Finance Committee, I would hope that the Finance Committee members would not feel too badly that we wanted to take our opportunity to debate this amendment here on the floor. I understand the rule. It is probably a very good committee rule. If one member objects therein, that ends it. It gives us an opportunity to say that we think it is just fair play for Glaxo to be treated like other companies are treated. We think that Glaxo is the kind of company that is doing a tremendous job in this country and we would like to do our share in helping to promote their success.

It does mean a great deal to North Carolina to have this company there and flourishing. I hope our colleagues will understand our reason for thinking that this is a special case that needs the special attention of the entire Senate and we would be most grateful for their understanding help.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, the fact that one Senator on the committee objects to such an amendment by no means kills it. That means you have debate in the committee, and the majority, of course, rules.

Let me further state to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina that he has every right obviously to bring it to the floor of the Senate and make his case, and the majority rule again will prevail. I certainly have absolutely no animosity in that regard and have only the greatest respect for the two Senators from North Carolina.

Mr. SANFORD. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask for the yea and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I know of no other requests on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 68, nays 30, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Exon

The amendment (No. 1513) was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period of 2 hours of debate, equally divided and controlled, on the pending Graham amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that if there are second-degree amendments to the Graham footwear amendment, they be relevant to the first-degree amendment and be limited to 60 minutes equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida, Senator GRAHAM.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, we are prepared to offer the amendment at this time, but it is my understanding there are two other amendments.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr President, I ask unanimous consent we set aside the Graham amendment and that the Senator from California be allowed to proceed for 2 minutes; that that not cut up the continuity of debate; and that the Senator from Arkansas be allowed to proceed on an amendment that I think will be accepted on both sides of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. WILSON pertaining to the introduction of S. 2505 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR].

AMENDMENT NO. 1514

(Purpose: To eliminate the fee for processing merchandise that is informally entered and to increase the fee for processing merchandise that is formally entered)

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senators SASSER, FORD, DODD, LIEBERMAN, and JOHNSTON, I send an amendment to the desk at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR], for himself, Mr. SASSER, Mr. FORD, Mr. DODD, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. JOHNSTON, proposes an amendment numbered 1514.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 96, strike lines 4 through 11 and insert:

"(9) For the processing of any merchandise that is formally entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption during any fiscal year, a fee in an amount equal to 0.17 percent ad valorem.

On page 97, line 10, strike "and".

On page 97, line 15, strike "(a)(10)" and insert "(a)(9)".

On page 97, line 17, strike "$403" and insert "$553".

On page 97, line 19, strike "$400" and insert "$550".

On page 98, line 2, strike "or (10)".

On page 98, line 13, beginning with "paragraphs", strike all through "(10)" on line 14 and insert "paragraph (9)".

On page 98, line 19, after the end quotation marks, insert a comma and "and".

On page 98, between lines 19 and 20, insert:

(G) in subparagraph (D), as redesignated by this paragraph, by striking "or (10)" each place it appears, and

(H) in subparagraph (E), as redesignated by this paragraph, by striking "(a)(10)" and inserting "(a)(9)".

On page 98, line 25, strike "or (10)".

On page 99, line 25, strike "or (10)".

On page 100, line 14, strike "or (10)".

On page 101, line 20, strike "(10)" and insert "(9)".

On page 101, line 24, strike "$400" and insert "$550".

On page 102, line 3, strike "(10)" and insert "(9)".

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, very quickly, in the bill before us, which is the pending business of the Senate, there is a fee assessed in the committee document on what we call informals in the custom duty area, brought into this country by the major cargo carriers. But these would be the minor items that come into this country. It was decided, after some reconsideration and restudying of this particular issue, that it might be a wise course of action for us to amend this particular version of the committee recommendations by basically shifting the informal fee upon the small items to what we call the formal items or the major imports that are coming into the country. We think that this amendment accomplishes this purpose, Mr. President.

We also are very grateful to the distinguished ranking member of the Finance Committee, Senator PACKWOOD, who I understand has accepted this amendment and, of course, to the distinguished chairman, Senator BENTSEN, who has worked with us the last several days on language that would accommodate the purpose of the Senate. This would be more in keeping with the House provision and certainly I am sure it would be a consideration ultimately in a conference situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. BENTSEN. I am willing to support this amendment. It does make some change in the Customs user fee that we approved in the committee. In the committee, we provided that formal entries would be subject to an ad valorem fee of 0.15 percent with a cap of $400 and a minimum of $20.

Under the committee bill, the informal entries would have come in at $11. The amendment wipes out the fee on the informal entries and would increase the cap on the formal entries to $550. It would increase the ad valorem fee to 0.17 percent, and the minimum fee on formal entries would remain the same. It would bring it much more in line with the House provision. As I recall, their cap was slightly above the $550.

I think this is a good compromise, and I will work with the Senator from Arkansas, the senior Senator from Tennessee, and other Senators to see that we consider this in the conference. I have informed them it is a complex issue and is likely to be reviewed completely in the conference. However, on that basis, I am glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I laud the Senator from Arkansas for the very effective work he has done on this amendment. I am going to support it, but I feel I must say that the administration strongly opposes it. They fear that it again raises the GATT problem and they will raise that issue in conference, but for the moment I am happy to support the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. I thank both the distinguished chairman from Texas and the Senator from Oregon for their consideration in this matter.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to Amendment No. 1514 offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment (No. 1514) was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRYOR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, is there a pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is, unless the Senator makes a request that the pending amendment be set aside.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 1472, 1473, 1474, 1478, 1479, AND 1480

AMENDMENT NO. 1472

(Purpose: To extend the temporary suspension of duty on 2,5-dimethoxyacetanilide)

AMENDMENT NO. 1473

(Purpose: To extend the temporary suspension of duty on 3-4'-aminobenzamido)phenyl-B-hydroxyethylsulfone)

AMENDMENT NO. 1474

(Purpose: To extend the temporary suspension of duty on 4-chloro-2-nitroaniline)

AMENDMENT NO. 1478

(Purpose: To extend the temporary suspension of duty on 2-[(3-nitrophenyl)-sulfonyl]ethanol)

AMENDMENT NO. 1479

(Purpose: To extend the temporary suspension of duty on 4-chloro-2,5-dimethoxyaniline)

AMENDMENT NO. 1480

(Purpose: To extend the temporary suspension of duty on 3,4-diaminophenetole dihydrogen sufate)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I call up the following six amendments and ask they be considered en bloc: 1472, 1473, 1474, 1478, 1479, and 1480.

Mr. President, these amendments will extend for 2 additional years the duty suspensions on the importation of six chemicals that are precursors used in the production of printing inks and dyes for textiles. These particular chemicals are not produced in the United States and the extension of this duty suspension will act to avoid increasing the cost of producing textiles in this country.

As we are all aware, the textile industry has been hit especially hard by imports. I want to do all I can to keep this American industry on a fair competitive footing with foreign textile manufacturers. Because our foreign competitors can print and dye their textiles without the added costs that this duty would impose, our domestic industry would be at a competitive disadvantage if the current suspensions were allowed to expire.

In current duty suspensions for these six chemicals are scheduled to expire on December 31, 1990. These duties have been suspended for less than 2 years, since the enactment of the Omnibus Trade and Competititiveness Act of 1988, Public Law 100-418.

These extensions will provide 2 additional years and will give us time to study the effects of these duty suspensions on the chemical and textile industries. It is senseless to allow the current duty suspensions to expire at the end of this year, since there is no domestic production of these precursors and our textile industry will be helped by reducing the costs of the printing dyes and inks that are manufactured from these precursors.

I would hope the managers of this bill would accept these noncontroversial amendments en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendments.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] proposes amendments numbered 1472, 1473, 1474, 1478, 1479, and 1480:

AMENDMENT No. 1472

On page 17, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new paragraph:
( )Heading 9902.29.52 (relating to 2.5-dimethoxyacetanilide.

AMENDMENT No. 1473

On page 17, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new paragraph:
( )Heading 9902.29.61 (relating to 3-(4'-aminobenzamido)phenyl-B-hydroxyethylsulfone).

AMENDMENT No. 1474

On page 17, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new paragraph:
( )Heading 9902.29.25 (relating to 4-chloro-2-nitroaniline.

AMENDMENT No. 1478

On page 17, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new paragraph:
( ) Heading 9902.29.07 (relating to 2-[(3-nitrophenyl)-sulfonyl]ethanol).

AMENDMENT No. 1479

On page 17, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new paragraph:
( ) Heading 9902.29.42 (relating to 4-chloro-2.5-dimethoxyaniline).

AMENDMENT No. 1480

On page 17, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new paragraph:
( ) Heading 9902.29.45 (relating to 3,4-diaminophenetole dihydrogen sulfate).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be considered en bloc. Is there further debate?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, we have examined the amendments on this side and have no objection to the amendments.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, we have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to amendments 1472, 1473, 1474, 1478, 1479, and 1480 en bloc as offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendments (Nos. 1472, 1473, 1474, 1478, 1479, and 1480) were agreed to en bloc.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I have two more amendments that I would like to consider. Do I have to set aside the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The earlier request is considered to cover these additional amendments.

AMENDMENT NO. 1477

(Purpose: To extend for 2 years the temporary suspension of duty on certain textile machines)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to consider at this time amendment number 1477.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] proposes an amendment numbered 1477.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 17, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new paragraphs:
( ) Heading 9902.84.42 (relating to certain narrow weaving machines).
( ) Heading 9902.84.45 (relating to certain wool carding and spinning machinery).
( ) Heading 9902.84.50 (relating to certain lace braiding machines).

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, this amendment would extend for 2 additional years the current duty suspensions on the following textile machines: Narrow fabric weaving machines, wool carding and spinning machinery, and decorative lace-braiding machines.

The machines covered by this amendment are used in the production of fabrics which have a wide variety of end uses in apparel, medical, industrial, and home furnishing applications. This equipment is not available from domestic manufacturers and must be purchased from foreign suppliers, located primarily in Europe.

These three types of textile machines currently enter the United States duty-free under previously enacted duty suspension legislation, however, these suspensions are scheduled to expire on December 31, 1990. These machines are a vital component of our textile manufacturers efforts to modernize, increase productivity, and continue as players in an extremely competitive international textile and apparel market.

Extension of these current duty suspensions will provide American textile and apparel companies with the opportunity to continue replacing outdated equipment with new high technology machines in a cost-effective manner. Access to new equipment without the penalty of an unnecessary tariff will help to insure that American manufacturers will be more competitive at home and abroad.

Enactment of this amendment will benefit all American consumers by providing them continued access to higher quality American made textile and apparel, at a lower cost. I hope that the managers of this bill will be able to accept this noncontroversial extension of these duty suspensions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, we have examined the amendment and see no objection to it on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there additional debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1477, offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment (No. 1477) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I also move to reconsider the prior vote on the amendments considered en bloc.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1475

(Purpose: To extend the temporary suspension of duty on 2,4-dichloro-5-sulfamoylbenzoic acid)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the last amendment I call up is amendment No. 1475.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] proposes an amendment numbered 1475.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 17, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new paragraph:
( ) Heading 9902.29.86 (relating to 2,4-dichloro-5-suflamoylbenzoic acid).

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, this amendment would extend the current duty suspension for lasamid, a chemical used in the manufacture of furosemide, a widely-used potent diuretic, primiarly prescribed in the treatment of patients who have suffered from congestive heart failures.

Furosemide is currently sold in the United States by Hoechst-Roussel Pharmaceuticals, Inc., and by several other generic drug companies. However, the only company which manufactures furosemide in the United States is Hoechst Celanese Corp. All other furosemide sold in the United States is imported.

Hoechst Celanese produces furosemide in my State of Rhode Island by a process which involves the intensive treatment of the precursor chemical lasamid. There are no known American producers of lasamid, and its only use is as a precursor to the production of furosemide.

By continuing the duty suspension for lasamid, this U.S. producer of furosemide will be more competitive with foreign producers, thereby benefiting the American workers who manufacture this product. It will also contribute to keeping down medical costs, by reducing costs to produce a major drug relied upon by many Americans.

The current duty suspension for lasamid is scheduled to expire on December 31, 1990. This duty has been suspended for less than 2 years, since the enactment of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988, Public Law 100-418.

This extension will provide 2 additional years and will give us time to study the effect of the duty suspension on the pharmaceutical industry to determine if we should then repeal the duty outright or continue the suspension for another period.

I hope the managers of the bill will be able to accept this noncontroversial amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President we have examined the amendment and we have no objection to it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment No. 1475 offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment (No. 1475) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like first to thank the managers of the bill. Second, I would like to thank the distinguished Senator from Florida for letting me proceed with these amendments. I thank them all very much. It was an overwhelming vote of approval on these amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senator from Florida will be recognized at this time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wonder if I might take 5 minutes of my leader time at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized. He has that right.

Mr. DOLE. I do not want to interrupt.

APRIL 24: A DAY OF REMEMBRANCE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today is April 24.

It had been my hope that we, in the Senate, would have declared this day one of remembrance for the victims of the Armenian genocide of 1915-23.

That was not to be.

But I cannot let this day go by without taking personal note of its importance to Armenians around the world; its meaning to men of good will everywhere.

In 1915, experts estimate there were 2 million Armenians living in Ottoman Turkey. Eight years later, there were less than 100,000.

A half million Armenians fled Ottoman Turkey, and could be accounted for in other countries. The remainder—1.5 million people—perished.

Three quarters of the Armenian population of Ottoman Turkey was wiped out. Men, women, and children. Almost all of the rest fled.

Why did such enormous numbers of people die?

The record is clear. They died from many immediate causes—from violence, from starvation, from disease, from deprivation. But they died, almost all of them, because of one central reason: it was the conscious, clearly articulated policy of the Ottoman authorities to see them dead.

I invite the Senate, and the American people, to review the record we made on the floor when we debated Senate Joint Resolution 212. Read the orders issued by Ottoman authorities—to murder men and women; to starve little children.

Read the headlines, and the stories, of the contemporary press. Headline after headline, story after story—of hacking people to death, burning them alive, purposely starving them.

Look at the pictures—if your stomach can bear it. Pictures of piles of human corpses—dozens, hundreds, thousands—dismembered, mutilated, emaciated.

Mr. President, 1.5 million people killed—killed as a result of conscious, vicious policies of authorities of the Ottoman Empire.

History has a name for what happened—a word coined many years later.

History calls it a genocide.

The Senate, as a body refused to apply that term. But let us, individually, today have the compassion and the courage to simply state the truth—it was a genocide.

And it is a mockery of those who died, an insult to those who survived, and a repudiation of the sorrow of their families who live with us today—it is all those things, when we refuse to speak the truth; when we turn our backs on history; when we bury our heads in the sand.

Mr. President, the Senate has not had the requisite compassion and courage to do what we should have done.

We have bowed to the pressure of successive administrations, who feared an overreaction by our important ally and friend, the Republic of Turkey.

We have knuckled under to direct pressure from Turkey—which has expended hundreds of thousands of dollars this year alone in a relentless campaign against Senate Joint Resolution 212.

We have been taken-in by the bluster and blandishments of Turkey's high-priced lobbyists.

And we have caved-in to threats from large American companies who do lots of business in Turkey—and have been served notice by Turkey that their profits would be in jeopardy if Senate Joint Resolution 212 passed.

As I said at the time of our debate—it was a battle between the "David" of Armenia; and the "Goliath" of Turkey, with all of the weapons I have just mentioned.

And sadly, shamefully, Goliath won the battle.

Mr. President, all of those weapons brought to the battle by opponents of the resolution—they were formidable. Perhaps some believe I am setting too high a standard for this body, in suggesting we should have acted in spite of that impressive array of power.

But am I setting such an impossibly high standard?

The Senate, itself, declared there was a genocide, way back in 1920—not using the word, itself, only because the word had not then been coined.

The European Parliament has declared there was a genocide—in the face of the same kind of threats and blackmail that Turkey, its allies and lobbyists brought to bear against us. The European Parliament acted anyway.

The U.N. Human Rights Commission has acknowledged the genocide.

The man who coined the term "genocide"—he applied the term to the events in Ottoman Turkey from 1915 to 1923.

Elie Weisel—the "Voice of the Holocaust"—he did, too. We celebrated that tragedy today.

All of these institutions—all of these people—had the compassion and courage to speak the truth.

The Senate did not—and we ought to be ashamed.

Mr. President, some say, what is past is past; why dredge up this ancient history; whose interest is served?

I will conclude by saying there are two answers.

One comes from the lips of Adolf Hitler. When he was plotting his genocide—his mass murder of an entire people—some tried to dissuade him. They told him, "You can't do it; the people of the world, and history, will judge you too harshly."

Hitler's chilling response lives with us today: "Who," said Hitler, "remembers the Armenians?"

One reason 6 million Jews were slaughtered was Hitler's conviction that no one remembered the Armenian genocide.

One reason we can have some hope that there will be no more genocides is that we have remembered—we will never forget—the subsequent genocides that have occurred, or were attempted: in Nazi Germany, in Cambodia's killing fields, in Ethiopia.

Today, by coincidence, also marks the annual observance organized by the Holocaust Memorial Council, to remember the victims of past genocides. Their solemn ceremony was held in the Capitol rotunda this afternoon.

I should note: The Holocaust Memorial Council has taken a decision to include the Armenian genocide in its archives and displays.

But the basic point is: The entire rationale behind the Holocaust Memorial project boils down to these words—we shall never forget; boils down to this thought—if we forget, we increase the prospects that one day we will again experience the horror of a new genocide.

So that is one answer to the question—why worry about this now, after all these years.

The other answer is even simpler, and even more important.

Why remember now? Because it is right.

It is right historically.

It is right morally.

It is right—because 1.5 million human beings perished, and it would be profoundly wrong to pretend that they never existed; to forget that they lost their lives.

It is right.

When you get to an issue like this, that ought to be our compelling guide.

Not, is it convenient? Will it upset anyone? Will it jeopardize some political interest?

Is it right?

That is the question here.

Mr. President, we acted in the Senate. I accept that decision.

I hope someday we will correct the wrong we have committed.

I hope today, individually, many of us will do what we, as a body, have failed to do.

Do what is right—for history, for the victims of the genocide, for their survivors, and, above all, for the conscience of this Senate, and this America.

Mr. President, I reserve any time I may have remaining.

FAVORED-NATION STATUS FOR HUNGARY

The Senate continued with consideration of the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I am pleased at this point that the Senate turned its attention to title II in the legislation before us, the extension of the Caribbean Basin Initiative.

Mr. President, as stated in the findings of legislation, the Caribbean basin legislation is very much a mutuality of interest, interest of the United States of America, interest of our neighbors in the Caribbean and Central America.

In section 2002 of the pending legislation, Congress makes these findings. First, a stable political and economic climate in the Caribbean region is necessary for the development of the countries in that region and for the security and economic interest of the United States; second, the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act was enacted in 1983 to assist in the achievement of such a climate by stimulating the development of the export potential of the region; and, third, the commitment of the United States to the successful development of the region, as evidenced by the enactment of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act, should be reaffirmed and further strengthened by amending the act to improve its operation.

Mr. President, I greatly appreciate the willingness and the commitment of the Finance Committee which enacted this legislation in 1983 and which has brought it before us today for floor action. This legislation culminates a 3-year effort to enhance the Caribbean Basin Initiative.

Much has happened during the 3 years since this effort began. There has been a veritable election binge, unprecedented in the Caribbean Basin of modern history. In 1989, elections were held in Belize, El Salvador, Honduras, Antigua, Jamaica, St. Kitts, and St. Vincent. Costa Rica already had an election this year. Others are scheduled for Guatemala, the Dominican Republic, Grenada, Dominica, and possibly Guyana. And of course, a historic change occurred on February 25, when Nicaraguans went to the polls and overwhelmingly elected as their new President, Mrs. Violeta Chamorro. it is appropriate, Mr. President, that we reach the consideration of this legislation on the eve of her inauguaration as President of Nicaragua.

At a time when revolutionary change is sweeping through the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, it is all to easy to lose sight of those facts, those facts of an emerging spirit of democracy within our own hemisphere. What is happening across the Atlantic is extremely important but so, too, is what is happening in our own region.

I am very concerned that we are losing sight of our hemispheric responsibilities and opportunities. I agree with our colleague, DICK LUGAR, that we are facing a crisis not of U.S. intervention, but of U.S. inattention. U.S. economic assistance to the Caribbean Basin has fallen over 22 percent this year. Economic support funds have been zeroed out for every country in the Caribbean except Jamaica and Guyana.

At the same time, a desperately needed aid package for Nicaragua and Panama awaits Senate action. This, at a time when fragile democratic governments are trying to consolidate, at a time when we are asking our friends of the region to wage an expensive fight against narcotics.

The Chair and I both had an opportunity of hearing the Prime Minister of Jamaica, who made the ironic observation that the amount of aid reduction to his country last year from the United States almost precisely coincided with the increased expenditures by the Government of Jamaica to increase its narcotic control activities, much of that increase having been at the direct request and recommendation of the United States of America.

All of this is occurring at a time when we are asking these neighbors to make painful but necessary economic reforms. This division, a division of great change against inattention, of tremendous need against a waivering willingness to extend a hand of friendship does not make sense. At great cost, we have made real progress in the last decade in promoting democratic pluralism in this region. Nicaragua is only the latest example of that proof.

Indeed, for 10 years, many Members of the Senate have argued—and I believe correctly—that the primary problem afflicting the region was economic. We now have an opportunity to act on that premise. This is not a time to be distracted, to walk away or to wallow in inaction. It is a time to build on our gains.

I want to make three general comments about the legislation before us:

First, Mr. President, this legislation addresses any future uncertainty about the availability of duty-free treatment and quota reductions by making CBI permanent. This is essential if we are to maintain the investment confidence we have worked so hard to build. Second, we try to reasonably expand duty-free treatment by expanding it to articles wholly assembled from U.S. components.

Finally, I must say that as important as making this program permanent is, this bill does not go far enough. That is why I am joining with my colleague, Senator PACKWOOD, as well as Senators BRADLEY, KERRY, DODD, DOLE, LUGAR, HATCH, and DURENBERGER in proposing an amendment which would extend the Caribbean Basin Initiative by providing special treatment for a certain class of footwear manufactured in the Caribbean.

AMENDMENT NO. 1515

(Purpose: To reduce by 50 percent the duty on rubber-soled and fabric upper footwear imported from Caribbean Basin countries)

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I send to the desk the amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM], for himself, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. KERRY, Mr. DODD, Mr. DOLE, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. HATCH, AND Mr. DURENBERGER, proposes an amendment numbered 1515.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 85, between lines 12 and 13, insert:

SEC. 2014. 50 PERCENT REDUCTION IN DUTY ON CERTAIN FOOTWEAR.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 213 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2703) in amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) RUBBER-SOLED AND FABRIC UPPER FOOTWEAR.—

"(1) RATE OF DUTY.—The rate of duty on any footwear that—

"(A) is a product of a beneficiary country;

"(B) is footwear with outer soles of rubber or plastics and uppers of textile material provided for in HTS item numbers 6404.11.40, 6404.11.50, 6404.11.60, 6404.11.70, 6404.11.80, 6404.11.90, 6404.19.25, 6404.19.30, 6404.19.35, 6404.19.40, 6404.19.50, 6404.19.60, 6404.19.70, 6404.19.80, and 6404.19.90; and

"(C) was not designated on August 5, 1983, as an eligible article for the purpose of the generalized system of preferences under title V of the Trade Act of 1974, is a rate equal to 50 percent of the general column 1 rate of duty under the HTS that would apply to such article but for this subsection.

"(2) ADMINISTRATION.—

"(A) The President shall proclaim the rates of duty imposed under paragraph (1).

"(B) The duty applied under paragraph (1) is in lieu of the duty provided for that article under general column 1 of the HTS."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (2) of section 213(b) of the Caribbean Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2703(b)(2)) is amended by inserting "except as provided in subsection (h)," before "footwear".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to goods entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, or or after the 30th day after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. GRAHAM. In considering further steps to be taken for the United States and participating countries, there was a search for an economic area and of additional opportunity which met the following standards.

One, it was an area that would take advantage of the rich pool of people in the Caribbean and Central America anxious to work to achieve economic progress through their own labor. We were looking for areas which would be compatible with the level of economic development of the region and of the individual countries, and we were looking for areas that would have none, or minimal, impact on U.S. business and industry.

Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered will strengthen the Caribbean Basin Initiative that will not have all but a minimal impact on the domestic shoe industry. The administration supports this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that letters of support from Secretary of State Baker and Trade Representative Carla Hills be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, April 5, 1990.

BOB PACKWOOD,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR PACKWOOD: We are writing to urge your support for legislation to enhance the Caribbean Basin Initiative that is contained in H.R. 1594.

More than ever, events bear witness that America's combination of free politics and free enterprise has become the model for millions around the world. In many ways, we are seeing a world-wide triumph of American values.

From the Caribbean and Central America, the symbol of America's commitment to free enterprise and free institutions is the Caribbean Basin Initiative. CBI's trade and investment benefits drive much of the region's economic vitality. By fostering prosperity, CBI contributes to a more democratic and stable region.

CBI's enactment in 1983 was a major political statement—a vote of confidence in the strength of democracy in the region. Today the region is no less important to us. Vital foreign policy interests are at stake not only in Panama and Central America but elsewhere in the Caribbean as well. Fragile democracies are struggling to survive and must have our unambiguous support. Failure to enact legislation would signal that the Caribbean Basin is of less importance to us than before. We do not want to be seen as running away from past commitments and diverting our attention and resources solely to Eastern Europe.

Too much is at stake to let CBI expire in 1995. In the case of Panama, for example, we must keep that fledgling democracy alive by helping the economy to get back on its feet as quickly as we can. To do that, Panama needs millions in new investment quickly. This is not the time to leave potential CBI investors wondering whether the incentive of duty-free entry into the United States, the world's largest market, will be around in 1995. We have also entered an era when it is tough to find foreign aid for even our closet friends. More than ever, countries must depend on private investment as the engine of economic growth.

We urge the Congress not only to extend CBI permanently but also to strengthen it. All of us know that important domestic interests must be weighed in extending CBI's duty-free treatment to the few but important products currently excluded, such as apparel and footwear. We ask, however, that Congress not close its mind to carefully crafted amendments which provide economic benefits to the Caribbean Basin without constituting a real threat to our industry. A region that prospers economically and creates jobs for its people is a region in which democracy can flourish.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that from the standpoint of the Administration's program there is no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,

CARLA A. HILLS.
JAMES A. BAKER III.

THE U.S. TRADE REPRESENTATIVE,
Washington, DC, April 16, 1990.

HON. GEORGE J. MITCHELL,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. MAJORITY LEADER: I am asking for your support for an amendment to legislation designed to enhance the Caribbean Basin Initiative (CBI), which is part of H.R. 1594.

Since its enactment in 1984, the CBI has greatly helped U.S. efforts to promote the benefits countries in the region can derive from a free-market approach to economic development. Permanent extension of this program—as provided in H.R. 1594—is an extremely valuable provision which would encourage long term investment in the Caribbean Basin. But more can and should be done.

An important objective of new CBI legislation is to expand access to the U.S. market for Caribbean products that offer potential for future growth. We have found that countries in the region have taken advantage of the tariff preferences offered by the CBI on a broad range of products. As currently formulated, H.R. 1594 provides very little improvement in this area over the current CBI law.

We have been searching for a balance between enhanced market access for the Caribbean Basin and the legitimate interests of our domestic industries. We believe an amendment on footwear—as proposed by Senator Packwood at the March 1, 1990, markup of the CBI legislation—would benefit the region without harming this sector of the U.S. economy.

Senator Packwood's amendment would reduce duties by 50 percent only on a narrow range of footwear—shoes with rubber soles and fabric uppers produced in the Caribbean Basin. This amendment would not reduce tariffs on leather footwear or protective rubber footwear.

We believe a tariff reduction on rubber/fabric footwear would have very little impact on the U.S. industry because:

this type of footwear accounts for under 18 percent of U.S. footwear consumption;

total employment in this segment of the of the shoe industry has actually increased since 1986;

under one percent of the $400 million of U.S. rubber/fabric footwear imports came from the Caribbean region—the vast majority was imported from Asia;

a cut of 50 percent of the U.S. tariffs on rubber/fabric footwear, which currently range from 20 percent to 67 percent, would still leave these products with a tariff level far above the U.S. average—under 5 percent;

there has been no apparent adverse impact on U.S. production or employment as a result of the tariffs on these products that were eliminated under the U.S.-Israel Free Trade Agreement (FTA) and that were reduced by 50 percent under the U.S.-Canada FTA.

We believe a tariff reduction on rubber/fabric footwear would be much more likely to encourage production to shift to the Caribbean Basin from certain Asian countries—where the wage rates are increasing—than to displace U.S. production. New CBI legislation provides us an opportunity to stimulate this relocation process in the type of labor intensive industry needed for the Caribbean Basin.

Sincerely,

CARLA A. HILLS.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, since one issue is going to come up later in this debate, the issue of the impact of this proposal on GATT negotiations, I think of particular significance is the letter which arrived on April 16 from Miss Carla Hills, the U.S. Trade Representative, who, of course, has primary responsibility for representing the United States in those GATT negotiations.

I wish to quote the concluding paragraph of Miss Hills' letter:

> We believe a tariff reduction on rubber fabric footwear would be much more likely to encourage production to shift to the Caribbean Basin from certain Asian countries—where the wage rates are increasing—than to displace U.S. production. New CBI legislation provides us an opportunity to stimulate this relocation process in the type of labor intensive industry needed for the Caribbean Basin.

Mr. President, this amendment would cut tariffs 50 percent only on rubber-soled, fabric upper footwear produced in the Caribbean Basin; in other words, inexpensive tennis shoes. Mr. President, I have two examples of the type of shoe that would be covered by this particular amendment. Both of these shoes happen to be made in China. That is not unexpected, since 50 percent of the imported shoes of this type are made in China; 97 percent of the imported shoes of this nature are made in the Pacific Rim. This one shoe has a price of $4.99.

The next shoe, which is probably increasingly desirable now, in light of a movie, the "Teen-aged Mutant Ninja Turtles" shoe, made in China, and it retails for $7.99.

These are two examples of the types of shoes which, if this amendment is adopted, will be allowed to be produced in the Caribbean Basin countries, with a 50-percent reduction in the level of tariff currently being paid on their importation from China and other primarily Pacific Rim countries.

The amendment does not provide for duty reductions on other footwear. It does not apply to leather, plastic, rubber/protective or any other type of nonrubber footwear.

Mr. President, we have drafted a very narrow amendment in an effort to help the Caribbean without hurting the domestic industry.

We think we have accomplished that goal, despite the arguments being made by those on the other side of this issue.

Out of total U.S. footwear production of over $4 billion, this type of footwear represents less than $400 million—or less than 10 percent of all U.S.-made shoes. It accounts for under 18 percent of all U.S. footwear consumption by volume.

A 50-percent duty reduction would have little or no impact on U.S. industry. About 70 percent of the footwear in this category is already imported from overseas, as I indicated previously, 50 percent from China, 97 percent from the Pacific rim.

Giving Caribbean Basin countries this duty advantage would result in the shift of shoe imports of these products from Pacific rim producers to CBI countries. It would not result in additional shoe imports.

A number of companies—including Reebok, K-Swiss, Inc., Stride Rite, and Kinney Shoe—already have made clear in letters to the distinguished ranking member of the Finance Committee, Senator PACKWOOD, their intentions to seriously consider sourcing their production from CBI countries rather than Pacific rim countries if this amendment is approved.

And no wonder. Current U.S. tariffs on rubber/fabric footwear range from 20 to 67 percent.

A tariff cut of 50 percent would be a clear incentive, even though such a reduction would still leave duties on rubber/fabric footwear far above the U.S. average, which is under 5 percent duty.

Opponents argue that if this amendment is approved the remaining U.S. producers will shift operations to the Caribbean. Wrong again.

The fact is that the shoes made in the United States are largely machine-made and require little labor.

I have an example here of a tennis shoe made in the United States by Tetron that retails for $29.99.

This shoe, typical of shoes of this type made in the United States, is an injection molded shoe; that is, by machine the fabric upper is attached to the rubber sole. These shoes, such as the $4.99 shoe that I indicated earlier, are by hand attached with fabric upper to the rubber sole. That is the fundamental difference between the U.S shoe industry of this type of shoe and those that are imported. The U.S. shoes are typically machine intensive in their assembly process whereas the imported shoes are labor intensive. The U.S. shoes in this case sell for almost six times the price of the imported shoe.

Under the reality that 80 percent of U.S. tennis-type shoes are made through the injected molded process and that this is a machine capital intensive process, there obviously would be no incentive to move offshore to take advantage of lower labor rates when you have already made the capital investment that is allowing you to compete successfully.

Finally, Mr. President, the tariffs on these products were eliminated under the United States-Israel Free-Trade Agreement [FTA] and have already been reduced by 50 percent under the United States-Canada FTA with no apparent adverse impact on United States production or employement.

Let me repeat that. We have already eliminated the duty under the United States-Israel Free-Trade Agreement and have done exactly for Canada what we propose in this amendment to do for the Caribbean Basin which is a 50-percent reduction with no apparent adversary impact on United States production or employment.

The amendment being proposed would help Caribbean Basin countries at a time when we are asking them to help us in waging an expensive war on drugs.

And do not be misled by the opponents into thinking this will not be a meaningful provision for CBI countries. CBI countries, which presumably know what is in their own interests, disagree and strongly have urged the adoption of this amendment.

Indeed, at a time when aid dollars are extremely scarce and have been declining in the region, this single provision is potentially worth up to $500 million in trade for Caribbean Basin countries. That was the dollar amount of imports in this shoe category that came into the United States from China and other countries in the Far East last year. That amount of additional trade would provide between 10,000 and 20,000 additional jobs, jobs that would be transferred from the Pacific rim to the Caribbean Basin.

At present Asian countries, particularly China are reaping these benefits. Does it not make more sense to allow our democratic neighbors in Central America, like Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Honduras, Guatemala, El Salvador, and Panama, and those in the Caribbean like Jamaica, Haiti, and others to reap those benefits and by so doing provide an enhanced level of stability and national security in our own backyard?

Right now that is certainly not the case. The total United States import of these rubber soled fabric upper footwear from the Caribbean Basin amounted last year to only $519,000. That is not a million dollars, Mr. President. That is $519,000 which represented one-tenth of 1 percent of all U.S. imports of these shoes.

Countries like Nicaragua and Haiti desperately need to be able to trade in order to achieve a level of economic health particularly as they are making painful transitions to democracy and attempting to throw off authoritarian government.

Let us look at some of the economics. Nicaragua now rivals Haiti as one of the poorest nations of the hemisphere and on this Earth. In Nicaragua where tomorrow a democratic government will take office, Mrs. Chamorro will preside over a country whose annual per capita income is $300, unemployment 30 percent, inflation over 1,500 percent.

In comparison, one of the countries that is currently a significant producer of these shoes, South Korea, has a per capita income of $4,434, almost 15 times, unemployment rate 2.7 percent, inflation 5.2 percent.

Haiti has an annual per capita income of $372 and unemployment has passed 50 percent.

Taiwan, another manufacturer of these shoes, has a per capita income of $7,518, an unemployment rate of 1.7 percent.

Mr. President, leaders in this region and their people are eager to embrace the benefits of democracy. They are anxious to build a free enterprise economic foundation for that democracy. But they are going to need some help if they are to consolidate the fragile gains made thus far and to make the necessary free market economic reforms. Their success in doing so is in our national interest. It is in their national interest.

Today we have an opportunity to send in the most meaningful and powerful manner a signal to this region that we share in common our belief in a better future for the people of this hemisphere and our willingness to a good neighborhood to see that we all achieve it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Texas controls the time.

Mr. BENTSEN. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina who is seeking recognition to speak against the amendment.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to yield about 5 or 7 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BENTSEN. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I have been a strong supporter of the Caribbean Basin Initiative, and a strong believer in the need to extend this piece of legislation. I was pleased to be a cosponsor of the CBI bill, despite some concerns from companies in my State about it.

In fact, I talked with the textile industry to see if we could find the kind of balance that would indeed permit an expansion of certain industries in the Caribbean Basin. I said at the time that our textile manufacturers were good citizens and understood the need to extend the opportunities to develop economically to Central America and to the Caribbean Basin.

So I come to opposition of this amendment from a background of having had and continuing to have a strong feeling about our need to help develop and certainly to stabilize the economies in the countries of this hemisphere.

I thought we struck a good balance in this legislation. I believe that this bill as introduced helps them without taking unfair advantage of workers in this country. Certainly as our Caribbean neighbors prosper, we in turn will prosper. But I am afraid that the enactment of the Graham amendment would tip that balance at a tremendous cost to the already threatened rubber footwear industry in the United States.

I happen to know something about this industry because North Carolina has an important part of it. But I do not speak purely because it is a North Carolina industry. I think it is an industry that we need to consider because already it has suffered tremendous losses; already, imports account for nearly 70 percent of the domestic market for our fabric upper rubber-soled footwear.

North Carolina is the proud home of the Converse plant located in Lumberton, NC. Many in the State have been concerned about the economic development of the county where Lumberton is located. It is one-third Indian, one-third black, and one-third white, largely rural, and it needs all of the economic assistance and help that we can provide.

The Converse plant there has been a tremendous boost to the economy of this region in North Carolina. It employs 1,350 people—people whose jobs could very well be lost it this amendment passes. I have a pair of shoes that were made there that I bring to the floor, since my distinguished colleague from Florida has shoes made abroad. I have a pair of ordinary sneakers, or tennis shoes, as we always called them, made in the U.S.A. This kind of a product is very much the kind of a product that would feel the competition of these low-cost shoes that the distinguished Senator from Florida is talking about. And it is the people who make these very shoes whose lives would be affected by this amendment; 1,350 jobs may not sound like a lot, but they are crucial jobs in Lumberton, NC.

We simply cannot afford to let all of this industry go by the board. I think the Converse plant has done all that it could to maintain its competitive position in this country, in spite of the fact that so many others have gone out of business.

Nike closed its plant in Maine. Now, it is a 100-percent importer. Uniroyal closed its plants in Connecticut and Georgia, went out of the rubber footwear business and sold its Keds brand to an importer. B.F. Goodrich sold its plant. Gold Seal has gone out of business. Prevue has gone out of business, and a great many others.

So already we are seeing that the footwear business of this kind has suffered tremendous cutbacks. I think for us now to add this to an already balanced bill of assistance to the CBI is simply unwarranted.

Under the existing tariff levels, the Dominican Republic has asserted that it already has a thriving footwear industry, including vital parts for the rubber footwear exported from the Dominican Republic to the United States. The Government, after a thorough study, exempted rubber footwear from duty cuts in the Kennedy round, the Tokyo round, the GSP legislation, and in the current CBI law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes has expired.

Mr. SANFORD. May I have 1 more minute?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I yield another minute to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for an additional minute.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, tariff cuts may very well result in the Uruguay round. I hope not, but if that is so, that is a proper time and a proper place for such cuts.

Right now, it seems to me the rationale for exempting rubber-soled fabric upper footwear from these cuts from the current CBI law is unwarranted. This industry has been decimated over the past 20 years by import penetration. To sacrifice what is left of the rubber footwear industry in the name of foreign assistance at this time would be irresponsible.

Thank you Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Will the Senator from Florida yield me 10 minutes?

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I want to compliment the Senator from Florida, and I am happy to join with him in the amendment. Very frankly, much of what he said, I was going to say. So let me put it as succinctly as I can as to what this amendment is really about.

The question is not are jobs going to be lost in the United States. No one is seriously making a contention that jobs will be lost because this kind of shoe would be made in the Caribbean rather than in China. This is a shoe that sells for about $4.50, $5. A reduction in the tariff on it by 50 percent will cut it not to a 50-percent tariff, but would cut it someplace in the range of making it a 23- to 28-percent tariff.

The real debate on this is whether or not we are going to move production from China to the Caribbean. Mainland China is the overwhelming producer of this type of shoe. Between 1989 and 1990, the quantity of U.S. imports of rubber-fabric imports increased approximately 20 percent, or about 33 million pairs—an increase of 33 million pairs. China was responsible for 98 percent of that increase.

I would like to read just two or three letters, if I could, from significant manufacturers of these shoes. From Reebok:

DEAR SENATOR PACKWOOD: We understand that you plan to offer an amendment to the Caribbean Basin Initiative Bill to reduce duties by 50 percent on rubber/canvas footwear produced in Caribbean Basin countries. In this regard, we thought you might be interested in the following information:

1. Reebok currently imports rubber/canvas footwear from several countries in the far East, including at present South Korea, Thailand, and Indonesia.

2. If duties are reduced on these shoes in Caribbean Basin countries by 50 percent, Reebok will seriously consider shifting some or all of this production to Caribbean Basin countries. In fact, we are now taking steps to look into possibilities in this area.

From K-Swiss:

DEAR SENATOR PACKWOOD: K-Swiss Inc. has been manufacturing athletic footwear for twenty-three years. Presently we are known as one of the fastest growing companies in the footwear industry.

Our Company currently imports rubber/canvas footwear from China and other Far East sources. Should the CBI bill reducing duties on rubber/canvas footwear by fifty percent be adopted, this Company would seriously consider sourcing of this product from the Caribbean Basin countries.

From Kinney Shoe Corp.:

The Kinney Shoe Corporation operates nearly 3,600 footwear stores throughout the United States, and we'll sell more than 33,000,000 pair of athletic footwear in 1990.

Most of these athletic shoes are being imported from the Far East and China, and your amendment to reduce duties by 50 percent on rubber and canvas footwear produced in the Caribbean Basin countries, on Wednesday, April 18, would certainly provide an opportunity for sourcing athletic footwear much closer to the point of sale.

I'm sure, with the assistance from many retailers in the United States, the Caribbean could very quickly produce the same high-quality, rubber and canvas footwear that is being imported by our Company, and many other retailers, from China and the Far East.

Lastly, from AVIA:

We believe that the current tariff structure on footwear imports serves no beneficial purpose, and in fact, simply increases the price of footwear to U.S. consumers. We are, therefore, in strong support of your initiatives to reduce duties on rubber/canvas footwear produced in Caribbean Basin countries.

Currently, AVIA manufactures and imports some rubber/canvas footwear from Korea. If duties would be reduced on these types of shoes in Caribbean Basin countries by 50 percent AVIA would consider shifting some or all of this production to Caribbean Basin countries.

So, let me emphasize again, Mr. President, we are not making the bulk of these handmade shoes in the United States. The injection-made shoes that the Senator from Florida showed—that I know are made in Pennsylvania—are a different type of shoe. It is a capital-intensive, machine-intensive business. They are not going to pick up very expensive machines and move them to the Caribbean. But where there is an immense amount of hand labor, the United States lost that business years ago. It was not a good-paying job in this country. It was a low-paying job.

Now we have a choice as to whether we want to keep that business in mainland China, keep that business in the country that massacred the students at Tiananmen Square, or whether we want to give a boost to our neighbors in the Caribbean, who have been very generous in not asking for great quantities of money. They have simply asked that we let their people go to work and make the things that a country with a workforce having a relatively limited education can do. They can make good shoes. They can make good textiles. They are cheaper ones. They are not high value, they are not high cost.

But, if we can move jobs from China to Jamaica, to Trinidad, to the Virgin Island, to other areas, we will do more to enhance their economy, we will do more to help our security, and we will do more to benefit the consumers of this country, than any other step we can take.

So I very much hope the Senate would adopt the amendment of the Senator from Florida and let us move this business from a repressive China to fledgling and struggling democracies in the Caribbean.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KOHL). Who yields time?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes Senator COHEN.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I strongly oppose the proposed amendment to reduce imports tariffs on rubber footwear produced in the Caribbean Basin. This amendment was previously offered in the Finance Committee, where it was properly rejected.

At the outset, let me make two points to clarify the facts on what the effects of this amendment will be. First, this amendment applies to all rubber-sole/fabric-upper footwear—not just "inexpensive tennis shoes," as some Members have been led to believe. The United States produces rubber footwear of all price classifications which would be directly and adversely affected by this amendment.

Second, the amendment will, in fact, cause U.S. jobs to be lost. Statements to the contrary are simply untrue. By reducing tariffs for footwear produced in the Caribbean Basin, more footwear will be produced in that region for import to the United States. This increase in production must be offset by a corresponding decrease in production elsewhere in the world. There have been claims made that this decrease will occur only among the Asian producers. Certainly, there will be a shift in production from Asia to the Caribbean to take advantage of the lower duties. By the same rationale, however, U.S. producers will also shift production to the Caribbean. The domestic footwear industry's steady exodus offshore has been stemmed only through the use of tariffs. Without these tariffs, the floodgates will open, and what remains of the U.S. footwear industry will move en masse to the Caribbean. There isn't a single U.S. company that does not have a contingency plan to move offshore if tariffs are reduced. If this happens, the real losers will be those men and women who have worked hard all their lives in the footwear industry.

I am pleased to know that one of principal sponsors of this amendment, the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon, is not unsympathetic to the concerns of preserving jobs in the United States. When he introduced his amendment to ban the export of raw logs from Federal lands, he justified it as a necessary means to protect U.S. jobs. I was pleased to hear that my colleague from Oregon and I agree on the importance of this goal.

In fact, my colleague from Oregon presented a very convincing case for the need to protect U.S. jobs by banning the export of unprocessed logs. He cited the fact that the U.S. lumber industry presently faces a 30-percent import penetration level, that the United States has been injured by unfair foreign competitors, and that the burden has fallen hardest on the small towns of his State.

I agree with the conclusion that we must protect our lumber industry from unfair foreign competition. I must add, however, that the case to protect the U.S. footwear industry is even stronger. While the lumber industry faces a 30-percent import penetration rate, the rubber footwear industry faces a 74-percent import penetration rate—one that is steadily rising.

Likewise, just as the lumber industry has been damaged by unfair practices of some of its foreign competitors, there are legion examples of similar barriers that U.S. footwear has been forced to contend with.

Also, by comparison, just as the loss of jobs in the U.S. lumber industry has taken its greatest toll on the small towns of Oregon, like Sutherland and Roseburg, towns in Maine, like Skowhegan and Auburn, are the ones that continue to bear the brunt of job losses in the footwear industry.

Finally, my colleague from Oregon noted that it is a "humorous contradiction" that the AFL-CIO would support his logging amendment but oppose this footwear amendment. I respectfully suggest that the contradiction lies, not with the AFL-CIO, but with what the sponsors of this bill are trying to do: On the one hand, to protect U.S. jobs in the lumber industry and, on the other, to jeopardize U.S. jobs in the footwear industry.

My point is simply this: If a strong case can be made to protect the U.S. lumber industry from unfair foreign competition, an even stronger one can be made for the footwear industry.

As you know, the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act [CBERA] was enacted in 1983 to provide incentives for expanding the economies of the Caribbean countries through a system of duty-free preferences. With good reason, however, these preferences did not apply to many import-sensitive commodities, including certain footwear. The rationale in 1983 was that the footwear industry in the United States has been decimated over the past 20 years by import penetration and that to sacrifice what was left of the rubber footwear industry in the name of foreign assistance would be irresponsible. The facts supporting that rationale are all the more true in 1990. Currently, about three-fourths of the rubber footwear sold in the United States are imported. The effect on my State alone has been tremendous. Since 1980, over 7,000 Maine footwear workers have lost their jobs and over 30 plants have shut their doors.

Who are these people? Who are the people who are being impacted? They are women, mostly between the ages of late forties and early sixties with a sixth-grade education, many of them. They live in towns where there are few economic alternatives.

I recall what President Reagan said to displaced workers. He said, "Well, just vote with your feet. Just go out and vote with your feet: Get out of town. Pick up your family and feed off 'The Grapes of Wrath,' and join this long pilgrim march to prosperity."

Now the Senator from Florida, joined by the Senator from Oregon, is recommending a new policy. It is not a "beggar thy neighbor" policy; it is a "begger thy native" policy. That is what this amendment amounts to. What few jobs remain in the industry are going to be eliminated if this amendment is allowed to prevail.

There will not only be a shifting of production from the East Asian countries to the Caribbean, but also a shift out of the United States. I think it is one thing to have adopted a policy of benign neglect toward the American shoe worker. It is quite another to actively promote a policy that is guaranteed to eliminate the jobs of American workers.

We have seen some demonstrative evidence here today. The sponsors of this legislation have suggested that this amendment will pertain to inexpensive tennis shoes only. That is simply not the case. If this amendment were confined to shoes that are selling on the market for $4, as the Senator from Florida suggested, I would have no objection.

But, ask yourself when was the last time you bought a pair of Reeboks for $4? or $7? or $20? or $25?

The fact of the matter is that, under this amendment, items that retail for over $50 will be eligible for the lower duty.

What the sponsors of this amendment are really talking about is the ability of American manufacturers or companies to shift their operations out of East Asia or China to the Caribbean to enjoy the lower costs. Are we going to pass this savings on to the American consumer? I have not seen the evidence of it yet. The companies would merely maximize profits, rather than pass the savings on to the consumer. Indeed, I did not hear any commitment made that if we have a 50 percent reduction on the tariff on these particular articles, there will be a corresponding reduction in prices.

I fully support efforts to improve the CBI legislation and to facilitate economic development in the Caribbean Basin. However, the net economic benefit that the proposed amendment would confer to the Caribbean Basin would be minimal. On the other hand, the adverse effects on the U.S. footwear industry would be substantial. Under these circumstances, to cut tariffs on rubber footwear produced in the Caribbean Basin would be irresponsible to our own domestic industry.

Two weeks ago, I joined 54 of my colleagues in introducing legislation to protect our domestic footwear industry from further erosion from unfair foreign competition. I realize that some of my colleagues may be opposed to such legislative efforts and feel that Congress should remain neutral in this matter and let the economic chips fall where they may. Obviously, I disagree with that view. Today, however, we are considering a very different matter. The proposed amendment says not only should Congress stand by and let the domestic footwear industry die, but that Congress should take active steps to kill the industry.

Mr. President, it is one thing to say that Congress should remain neutral in matters regarding the economic decimation of the domestic footwear industry caused by an avalanche of imports. It is quite another thing, however, to say that Congress should take an active role in promoting footwear imports.

I urge my colleagues to reject this amendment and not adopt a policy of beggaring, as I indicated, not thy neighbor but thy natives.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I oppose this amendment. It is a misguided attempt to help the Caribbean Basin Initiative countries at the expense of the U.S. footwear industry. Current law provides duty-free treatment to most CBI products, but certain import-sensitive products have been excluded since the beginning of the program. Those include textiles, apparel, and footwear. In 1983, when the Congress considered the original CBI legislation, we determined that these products should be exempt, as we did when enacting legislation establishing the generalized system of preferences. The reason these goods were exempted from duty-free benefits is because those industries were being seriously injured by imports.

As a matter of fact, the import penetration of foreign footwear was 63.7 percent in 1983, and it is worse today—over 80 percent. That's why S. 2411, my new textile bill, includes a freeze on imports of footwear at 1989 levels. Domestic production of footwear is at a level matched only during the Great Depression. Specifically, special tariff relief is not needed for canvas upper footwear—already, we import 61 percent of our fabric uppers from CBI countries. And we also import 1 million pairs of the finished footwear.

Proponents of this amendment claim that if imports from the CBI increase, that will happen at the expense of other foreign suppliers. I have heard this argument each and every time a new trade concession for a particular country or group of countries is proposed. Our experience is that, in import-sensitive industries like apparel, footwear, and so forth, imports simply increase—one set of imports does not displace another, it displaces American jobs. There are currently over 90 foreign suppliers of footwear to the U.S. market—20 years ago, there were only a handful. As the number of off-shore suppliers grew, so did import penetration from 20 to 80 percent. As each new supplier appeared, imports from traditional suppliers increased, as well as imports from the new entrants.

I cannot support an amendment lowering tariffs on footwear which will lead to an overall increase in imports. It is bad enough that the few high tariffs we have left are under attack in the Uruguay round by our trading partners. We do not need to unilaterally disarm. I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I strongly oppose this amendment to reduce tariffs by 50 percent on canvas-upper, rubber-soled footwear. Make no mistake about the effect of this amendment if it were to be enacted. American jobs are at stake. And in my view, it is unacceptable to endanger these jobs and the people and families who depend on them.

Proponents of the amendment argue for it by claiming that there is little U.S. industry left in this sector. But I would like my colleagues to consider Carter Footwear, as one example, which is a U.S. producer of fabric-upper, rubber-soled footwear and which has a plant in Parsons, WV employing over 200 people. The 200 workers in this Parsons footwear plant don't believe they are insignificant. They understand this amendment, and they oppose it for fear that it will mean the permanent loss of their jobs.

Yes, it is true that footwear tariffs are relatively high, but it is also true that imported footwear has a hold of over 80 percent of our market. Rubber footwear employment has plummeted from 26,000 jobs for Americans to 9,000 today. The U.S. Government, after thorough study, exempted rubber footwear from duty cuts in the Kennedy Round, the Tokyo Round, GSP legislation, and CBI-I. Import penetration is greater now than it was at the time of any of those actions.

In 1988, in spite of high tariffs, the CBI countries shipped 1 million pairs of rubber footwear and $15 million of fabric-uppers to the United States. In fact, 61 percent of all fabric-upper imports came from the CBI in 1989.

The case for this import sensitivity of footwear has long been established. Suffice it to say, that since 1980, hundreds of U.S. plants have closed, and tens of thousands of American workers have lost their jobs. In fact, domestic footwear production has declined to a level matched only during the years of the Great Depression. Why? The reasons include below-subsistence wages of our foreign suppliers, closed markets and high tariffs overseas, and subsidization for foreign governments.

The one thing we do not need to do, Mr. President, is to unilaterally lower footwear tariffs, especially in the middle of the Uruguay round. Unfortunately, the actual experience and history of footwear imports from new suppliers is that they do not displace other foreign suppliers, they displace U.S. production. We cannot afford for this to happen. I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment by a wide margin.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM]. I believe adoption of this amendment would provide some meaningful expansion of the benefits of the CBI program and give this bill some real substance. This amendment would cut the 48 to 67 percent tariff on rubber-soled fabric uppers footwear produced in the CBI. This is what we used to call sneakers, and I suppose some refer to as tennis shoes.

The vast majority of this type of shoe is imported from Asia, with South Korea supplying 50 percent. Less than 1 percent of our imports of this product come from the Caribbean region.

Mr. President, I think a 50-percent tariff reduction on this limited category of footwear will encourage a shift of production from rapidly developing Pacific Rim countries to the Caribbean. That is what the CBI initiative should be all about, and I do not think that this tariff reduction will have anything more than a marginal impact on the small domestic industry that still makes these fabric athletic shoes. The domestic industry will still be protected by tariffs of 24 to 33 percent. That seems ample protection for the industry, and I hope my colleagues will support this amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, I oppose this amendment. The Finance Committee rejected this amendment by a vote of 11 to 6 during the committee markup and the full Senate should reject it now. It threatens to kill this bill—and to kill our opportunity to make the CBI Program permanent.

This amendment seeks to change the terms of the original CBI Program to give additional products preferential tariff treatment. It would cut in half the duty on rubber-soled shoes with fabric uppers, such as tennis shoes, that are imported from CBI countries.

We learned during the Finance Committee's consideration of this bill that this amendment is highly controversial. The bill I have brought to the floor is the subject of compromise. I am afraid that if this amendment passes, that balance could be upset and we might lose the entire bill. Therefore, I urge my colleagues who favor the CBI Program to vote against this amendment.

Let me begin by reiterating what I said earlier—that the CBI Program is already one of the most generous—if not the most generous—trade benefits program we offer our foreign trading partners. It is a one-way free trade arrangement. The United States grants duty-free treatment to imports from CBI countries, and asks for no reciprocal treatment in return, as we do, for example, with Canada and Israel.

This program is also better than the GSP Program, which benefits all developing countries. Most products are eligible for duty-free treatment under CBI, with few exceptions. Compare that to the GSP Program in which only about one-third of all products are eligible for duty-free treatment. Simply put, this is already a generous program for the CBI countries.

The results of that program have been dramatic. Since the CBI Program was initiated in 1983, investment in the CBI countries has increased by $1 to $1.5 billion. Why? Because investors are looking for duty-free entry into the U.S. market, which they get with the current program. That is why the most important change we can make for the Caribbean is to make this treatment permanent. Investors want that certainty. We will then see even more impressive growth in investment in the Caribbean, providing jobs for Caribbean workers.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida seeks to expand the benefits of the CBI Program further. While I am a strong supporter of the CBI Program, I cannot support this amendment.

The reason is simple: This bill is the result of a compromise among all interested Senators. The bill makes the CBI permanent, but it preserves the product exclusions that have existed since the program was first enacted in 1983. These exclusions involve sensitive industries. Congress determined in 1983 that eliminating the tariffs in these sectors would put American jobs at risk. So they were excluded from duty-free treatment. These were the compromises needed to put the CBI Program into law in 1983. The law strikes a balance between the needs of the CBI countries and the needs of our own domestic industries.

That balance is particularly important in the context of the footwear industry. The 1980's have been a boom time for the Caribbean footwear industry. The number of shoe companies in the CBI countries jumped 286 percent. Employment rose over 500 percent. And I should mention that this has occurred at a time when U.S. shoe industry employment has been cut in half and the industry has experienced record plant closings.

The Caribbean shoe industry is learning to stand on its own two feet. That is good. But the U.S. shoe industry is on its knees. And it is not fair to make matters worse.

The boom in Caribbean shoe production is due in large part to U.S. trade policy. My colleague from Florida is correct in saying that shoes do not enter duty-free from the CBI countries. However, Caribbean shoes companies do benefit substantially by using the provisions of section 807 of the tariff schedules.

Under that provision, U.S. shoe companies commonly cut the shoe leather in the United States, ship it to the Caribbean for stitching and assembly, then ship it back to the United States paying duty only on the value added overseas. So U.S. trade policy—plus the geographical proximity of the Caribbean to the United States—already gives Caribbean shoe producers considerable benefits.

The pending amendment would make U.S. trade policy even more generous. More importantly, it threatens to upset the compromise that has existed since the CBI Program was first enacted. If that happens, this bill may not pass. In other words, this amendment, if passed, threatens to bring this bill down with it.

That would be a mistake. It would prevent us from making CBI Program permanent. It would kill the other provisions of this bill, which contain provisions offered by 57 Senators. And it would be a loss for good trade policy.

So I urge my colleagues—particularly those Senators who favor the CBI Program—to vote against this amendment. The CBI Program is a success. Let us keep it that way and let us make it permanent—by rejecting this amendment.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally charged to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to lay the pending amendment temporarily aside so that I might offer an amendment that has been cleared on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1516

(Purpose: To clarify that excess COBRA user fee funds may be used by the Customs Service to provide additional inspection services)

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] proposes an amendment numbered 1516.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Beginning on page 99, line 20, strike all through page 101, line 10, and insert:

"(3)(A) The Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930 and without regard to apportionment or any other administrative practice or limitation, shall directly reimburse, from the fees collected under subsection (a) (other than subsection (a) (9) or (10)), each appropriation for the amount paid out of that appropriation for the costs incurred by the Secretary—

"(i) in providing—

"(I) inspectional overtime services, and

"(II) all preclearance services,

for which the recipients of such services are not required to reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury, and

"(ii) to the extent funds remain available to make reimbursements under clause (i), in providing salaries for full-time and part-time inspectional personnel and equipment that enhance customs services for those persons or entities that are required to pay fees under paragraphs (1) through (8) of subsection (a) (distributed on a basis proportionate to the fees collected under subsection (a)(1) through (a)(8)).

Funds described in clause (ii) shall only be available to reimburse costs in excess of the highest amount appropriated for such costs during the period beginning with fiscal year 1990 and ending with the current fiscal year.

"(B) Reimbursement under this paragraph shall be made at least quarterly. To the extent necessary, reimbursement of appropriations under this paragraph may be made on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury and adjustments shall be made in subsequent reimbursements to the extent that the estimates were in excess of, or less than, the amounts required to be reimbursed.

"(C)(i) For fiscal year 1991 and subsequent fiscal years, the amount required to fully reimburse inspectional overtime and preclearance costs shall be projected from actual requirements, and the excess of collections over such projected costs for such fiscal year shall be used as provided in subparagraph (A)(ii).

"(ii) The excess of collections over inspectional overtime and preclearance costs (under subparagraph (A)(i)) reimbursed for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 shall be available in fiscal year 1991 and subsequent fiscal years for the purposes described in subparagraph (A)(ii), except that $30,000,000 of such excess shall remain without fiscal year limitation in a contingency fund and, in any fiscal year in which receipts are insufficient to cover the costs described in subparagraph (A) (i) and (ii), shall be used for—

"(I) the costs of providing the services described in subparagraph (A)(i), and

"(II) after the costs described in subclause (I) are paid, the costs of providing the personnel and equipment described in subparagraph (A)(ii) at the preceding fiscal year level.

"(D) At the close of each fiscal year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit a report to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives summarizing the expenditures for which reimbursement has been provided under subparagraph (A)(ii)."

(c) EXTENSION OF FEES.—Paragraph (3) of section 1303(j) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(j)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) Fees may not be charged—

"(A) under paragraphs (1) through (8) of subsection (a) after September 30, 2005, or

"(B) under paragraphs (9) and (10) of subsection (a) after September 30, 1991.".

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, this amendment is entirely consistent with the purpose of the COBRA user fee language in the bill.

The substitute language does not change the intention or effect of the bill, it merely clarifies that intention.

The amendment specifies that the surplus user fee revenues, after reimbursement of overtime and preclearance costs, will be applied to salaries and equipment for improved customs service, in proportion to the payment of user fees by each class of user.

The amendment establishes a baseline for Customs staffing, funded by regular appropriations, of fiscal year 1990 or a subsequent year, whichever may be higher. The purpose of specifying this baseline is to prevent the user of offsetting reductions of funds as the user fee revenues are added.

The amendment also meets the concerns of labor groups that past revenue surpluses, now held in the Treasury, be designated to offset any downturn in user fee revenues, in the unlikely event of a downturn in trade and transport.

The Customs Service has thoroughly reviewed, and fully supports, this change.

This substitute language has no relationship to and does not affect the other user fee called the merchandise processing fee.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, we have no objection on this side. It is a good amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hearing no objection, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1516) was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that it be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I have an amendment I would like to propose on behalf of myself and Senator PACKWOOD, and I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be temporarily set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1517

(Purpose: Technical changes to the trade laws)

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, on April 3, Senator PACKWOOD and I filed an amendment to this bill containing a number of technical changes that the Administration and the International Trade Commission had brought to our attention regarding the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement and the 1988 Trade Act. We filed the amendment so that Members of the Senate, as well as the public, would be aware of the proposed changes and could voice their concerns.

To date, no controversy has arisen with respect to these amendments. The administration has proposed a few technical changes that were brought to their attention. Therefore, I now propose an amendment incorporating these changes and urge its adoption by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendment is set aside.

Will the Senator submit the amendment?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, the chairman said it very well. These are very minor technical problems that have come up under the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement. The public has been aware of these. They have been out for comment. We know of no objection to them. They simply smooth out a few glitches that we did not foresee at the time when we passed the Canadian-American Free-Trade Agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], for himself and Mr. PACKWOOD, proposes an amendment numbered 1517.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 106, after line 3, insert:

SEC. . OTHER TECHNICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 337 OF THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930.—

(1) Subsection (e) of section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1337(e)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) The proceeds from the forfeiture of any bond posted under paragraph (1) or (2) shall be deposited into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States."

(2) Paragraph (1) of section 337(g) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1337(g)(1)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Commission may delay issuing an exclusion or a cease or desist order under this paragraph until the completion of all (or a portion of) the investigation with respect to the complaint if the Commission determines such delay is appropriate."

(3) Subparagraph (C) of section 337(g)(1) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1337(g)(1)(C)) is amended—

(A) by striking "or otherwise" before "fails to appear", and inserting a comma; and

(B) by inserting before the semicolon ", or otherwise substantially fails to meet the requirements for participation in the investigation".

(4) Section 337(n) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1337(n)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) Any correspondence, private letters of reprimand, and other documents and files relating to violations or possible violations of administrative protective orders issued by the Commission in connection with investigations or other proceedings under this section shall be treated as information described in section 552(b)(3) of title 5, United States Code."

(5) The amendments made by this subsection shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 777 OF THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930.—

(1) Subparagraph (A) of section 777(c)(1) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1677f(c)(1)(A) is amended by inserting "customer names," after "classified information".

(2) Section 777 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1677f) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) INFORMATION RELATING TO VIOLATIONS OF PROTECTIVE ORDERS AND SANCTIONS.—The administering authority and the Commission may withhold from disclosure any correspondence, private letters of reprimand, settlement agreements, and documents and files compiled in relation to investigations and actions involving a violation or possible violation of a protective order issued under subsection (c) or (d), and such information shall be treated as information described in section 552(b)(3) of title 5, United States Code."

(3) The amendments made by this subsection shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) AMENDMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES-CANADA FREE-TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT OF 1988.—

(1) Section 313(n) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1313(n)) is amended—

(A) by inserting ", except an article" before "made from or substituted for", and

(B) by striking "of 1988" the second place it appears and inserting a comma.

(2) Section 313(o) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1313(o)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence" "This subsection shall apply to vessels delivered to Canadian account or owner, or to the Government of Canada, on and after January 1, 1994 (or, if later, the date proclaimed by the President under section 204(b)(2)(B) of the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement Implementation Act of 1988."

(3) U.S. Note 1 to subchapter XIII of chapter 98 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States (19 U.S.C. 3007) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(c) For purposes of this subchapter, the shipment of Canada of an article entered into the United States under heading 9813.00.05 shall not constitute an exportation, unless the article is a drawback eligible good under section 204(a) of the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement Implementation Act of 1988. This paragraph shall apply to shipments on or after January 1, 1994 (or, if later, the date proclaimed by the President under section 204(b)(2)(B) of such Act)."

(4) Section 516A of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1516a) is amended—

(A) in subsection (a)(5)—

(i) by striking subparagraph (A) and inserting:

"(A) the date of notice of any determination described in paragraph (1)(B) or a determination described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of paragraph (2)(B),", and

(ii) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting ", or", and by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) the date as of which—

"(i) a binational panel has dismissed the binational panel review for lack of jurisdiction, and

(ii) any interested party seeking review under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) has provided timely notice under subsection (g)(3)(B), except that if a request for an extraordinary challenge committee has been made with respect to the decision to dismiss, the date under this subparagraph shall not be earlier than the date on which such committee determines that such panel acted properly when it dismissed for lack of jurisdiction,"; and

(B) in subsection (g)(3)—

(i) by striking "or" at the end of subparagraph (A)(ii), by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (A)(iii) and inserting ", or", and by adding at the end of subparagraph (A) the following new clause:

"(iv) a determination which a binational panel has determined under paragraph (2)(A) is not reviewable by the binational panel.", and

(ii) by inserting "or (iv)" after "subparagraph (A)(i)" in subparagraph (B).

(5) Section 777(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1677f(d)), as added by section 501(a) of the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement Implementation Act of 1988, is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1)(A)—

(i) by striking "(but not privileged material as defined by the rules of procedure referred to in article 1904(14) of the United States-Canada Agreement)", and

(ii) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "If the administering authority or the Commission claims a privilege as to a document or portion of a document in the administrative record of the proceeding in question and a binational panel finds that in camera inspection or limited disclosure of that document or portion thereof is required by United States law, the administering authority or the Commission, as appropriate, may restrict access to such document or portion thereof to the authorized persons identified by the panel as requiring access and may require such persons to obtain access under a protective order described in paragraph (2).";

(B) in paragraph (1)(B)—

(i) by inserting ", and persons under the direction and control," after "employees" in clause (ii),

(ii) by striking "and" at the end of clause (ii),

(iii) by striking all after "in order to" in clause (iii) and inserting "make recommendations to the Trade Representative regarding the convening of extraordinary challenge committees under chapter 19 of the Agreement, and"; and

(iv) by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(iv) any officer or employee of the Government of Canada designated by an authorized agency of Canada to whom disclosure is necessary in order to make decisions regarding the convening of extraordinary challenge committees under chapter 19 of the Agreement.";

(C) in paragraph (3)—

(i) by striking "or" after "violate," each place it appears, and

(ii) by inserting "or knowingly to receive information the receipt of which constitutes a violation of," after "violation of," each place it appears; and

(D) in paragraph (4)—

(i) by striking "or" after "for violation,", and

(ii) by inserting "or receipt of information with reason to know that such information was disclosed in violation of," after "violation of,".

(6) Section 406(b) of the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement Implementation Act of 1988 (19 U.S.C. 2112 note) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) If the Canadian Secretariat described in chapter 19 of the Agreement provides funds during any fiscal year for the purpose of paying, in accordance with Annex 1901.2 of the Agreement, the Canadian share of the expenses of binational panels, the United States Secretariat established under section 405(e)(1) may hereafter retain and use such funds for such purposes."

(7) Section 408(c) of the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement Implementation of 1988 (19 U.S.C. 2112 note) is amended by striking all after "persons" and inserting "who would otherwise be entitled under Canadian law to commence procedures for judicial review of a final antidumping or countervailing duty determination made by a competent investigating authority of Canada."

(8) Section 409(b)(3)(A) of the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement Implementation Act of 1988 (19 U.S.C. 2112 note) is amended by striking "section 305" and inserting "section 308".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1517) was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time on the amendment?

AMENDMENT NO. 1518

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I have a technical amendment to the protective sports clothing amendment. This amendment makes a technical change to that provision in the bill relating to protective sports clothing. It makes the provision consistent with the committee's action. My understanding is it is acceptable to both sides, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, it has been cleared on this side and we have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendment is set aside.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] proposes an amendment numbered 1518.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 51, in the matter preceding line 5, strike "or 6203.43" in the second column and insert ", 6203.43, 6101.30, or 6103.43".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1518) was agreed to.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time on the amendment?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that it be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1519

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to setting aside the pending amendment?

Without objection, the pending amendment is set aside.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] proposes an amendment numbered 1519.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 17 between lines 21 and 22, insert the following new paragraph:

( ) Heading 9902.25.04 (relating to graphite).

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment that will extend for 2 years the current suspension of the duty on imports of graphite. This suspension, which has been in effect since 1974, is essential for the survival of the American pencil manufacturers. It would have no adverse effect on the domestic economy because graphite has not been mined in this country since the late 1970's.

I understand the amendment is supported by the administration and cleared on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, the manager on this side, has examined the amendment and sees no objection to it. I support it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. We agree on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1519) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1515

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise in strong opposition to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, will the opponents of the amendment yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise in strong opposition to the Packwood amendment. This amendment would substantially reduce the duty on imported rubber footwear where fabric uppers come in from the CBI.

Mr. President, there are a number of critical reasons why this amendment is wrong. It is wrong because it will cost jobs, it is wrong because it is unneeded, and it is bad trade policy.

There have been allegations made in the consideration of this amendment that this amendment will not cost any jobs. Maybe that is because as of 1989 some 70 percent of the rubber footwear with fabric covers took 70 percent of the market, and so much of it has been lost. But I brought to the Senate floor two pairs of the kinds of shoes we are talking about, what you might call tennis shoes. The pair in my right hand is a pair of imports. The pair in my left hand are made with uppers already made in the Dominican Republic, one of the beneficiaries of the CBI bill, but with the soles, the rubber bottoms, put on in Wilkes-Barre. PA.

If the legislation before us goes through, the fact is that the manufacturer in Wilkes-Barre, PA, Carter Footwear, who employs right now 600 people, many of them at very modest skills, an extremely hard-pressed region, will have to close its doors. If it happens to reopen its doors they will reopen their doors in the Dominican Republic, which might be fine for the Dominican Republic but it is bad for my constituents in Wilkes-Barre, PA, most of whom, I might add, are people without college education and job-training skills, options and alternatives, which many people in this body take for granted.

Indeed, the amendment as a whole is not only unfair to these 600 men and of course a lot of women in Wilkes-Barre, PA, but it is unfair to disadvantaged and poor workers who are predominantly the employees in this industry.

So this amendment is unfair to a class of people, people who are what we call entry level jobs, and who will not only, if this amendment passes, be denied entry in the future, but they will be put out the back door into the garbage heap tomorrow.

The fact that this industry is already devastated should not only be a cause of some sympathy and a reason to defeat the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, it should also tell those people who for some reason might be thinking of supporting a Packwood amendment why it is unnecessary. The fact is that there are countries with much higher labor rates, among them Taiwan, Korea, Thailand, Malaysia, a lot farther away than the Caribbean Basin Initiative countries, who have taken very large pieces of the existing market. They are the people who are responsible for most of that 70 percent. The Caribbean Basin countries can compete here. They do not need this help. Indeed, as I pointed out a minute ago, half of this pair of tennis shoes is already made in the Caribbean Basin.

So there is, it seems to me, no good reason to say that the Caribbean Basin Initiative is going to be made or broken based on this amendment. To the contrary, there is a third reason that we should reject this amendment. That is that we should not make preemptive concessions in the Uruguay round, the trade negotiations in which we find ourselves. If there is going to be anything given away, well, that is the place to give it away so we will get something in return. We should not be trading away important bargaining chips, let alone 600, maybe 6,000 jobs here on the Senate floor at this hour.

I would very much appreciate it, Mr. President, if the proponent of the amendment, Senator PACKWOOD, would be willing to answer one or two questions that I might propound to him.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I will try to. I indicated the Senator from Florida proposed the amendment.

Mr. HEINZ. I apologize. I will correct the record. But, of course, the Senator from Oregon proposed this amendment in the Finance Committee. So he has a lengthy association with it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thought the Senator was going to use the word "RECORD."

Mr. HEINZ. Yes. Mr. President, I will correct the RECORD in that regard, too. He has a record.

In 1988, it is my understanding that the U.S. International Trade Commission presented to the USTR its confidential advice on the impact of further tariff reductions in the Uruguay round negotiations. One of the categories I understand specifically addressed was a 50-percent duty reduction on rubber footwear, the substance of what we have before us here today.

That report is classified, as I understand it.

I would like to ask the Senator from Oregon if he is familiar with that study by the U.S. International Trade Commission.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I have to confess I am not familiar with it, have not seen it, and have not heard about it.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I think it is significant, and if the Senator has the opportunity on some other occasion, he should address that report, and I think he would find that the conclusions are indeed not favorable to the position that he takes or the Senator from Florida takes on this amendment. Indeed, the import sensitivity of this industry is extremely well recognized. That is why it was expected from duty cuts in the Kennedy round, in the Tokyo round, in the generalized system of preferences legislation, and in this existing legislation before us.

Mr. President, I urge the rejection of the Graham-Packwood amendment, hope that my colleagues will vote against the destruction of jobs in this country, setting a bad precedent both for trade policy, and for helping the poor and needy who have those jobs yesterday—and need them today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask that it be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I oppose the amendment of the Senator from Florida, and I urge my colleagues to vote against it. This amendment will destroy an American industry which has already been decimated by imports over the last 20 years. Contrary to the assertions of its proponents, this amendment will result in still more factory closings in this country and cost hundreds, if not thousands, of jobs in this country.

The Caribbean Basin Initiative was originally enacted to provide certain limited and specific trade benefits to Caribbean nations. The original principle of that legislation, like all other trade preference rules, was that benefits are provided subject to certain exceptions necessary to protect trade-sensitive American industries. Nowhere was it ever stated or intended that there would be total disregard for American jobs and American industries in the provision of benefits to the Caribbean nations.

Proponents of this amendment would abandon that principle. They are targeting one import-sensitive American industry, indeed, the very most important-sensitive American industry, and asking it and the workers in that industry to contribute disproportionately to the burden of helping Caribbean nations.

There is probably no industry in the United States which, over the last decade, has been more damaged by imports than the domestic footwear manufacturing industry. Indeed, the distinguished Senator from Oregon referred to it in the past tense. He said we have lost those jobs; they are gone.

That is true as to tens, indeed hundreds of thousands of American workers who have lost their jobs, but it is not true as to all of them. And the thousands of citizens in my State who now work in these jobs, those jobs are not yet gone. This amendment would see to it that they are gone.

Today imports control over 80 percent—I believe the figure is close to 84 percent—of the nonrubber footwear market and 74 percent of the rubber footwear market.

Mr. President, that means that 84 percent of the nonrubber footwear market in the United States is controlled by imports. So that of every 100 pairs of such footwear sold in the United States, 84 pairs are made elsewhere.

The figure is 74 with respect to the rubber footwear market, and that is apparently not enough. We now have only 26 out of every 100 pairs of such footwear sold in the United States that is made in the United States. The proponents would reduce that even further, until the Senator's statement could become a self-fulfilling prophecy and the industry will be a thing of the past.

In the last 15 years, imports of rubber footwear have already tripled, and at the same time employment in this country has been reduced by two-thirds. During that period, the industry has been in turmoil and decline. Several companies have gone out of business; scores of plants have been shut down; thousands of Americans have lost their jobs.

There are only a handful of domestic manufacturers remaining, and as they struggle to hold onto their domestic operations, these large multinational importers that have so devastated the business of Americans want even more. They have now set their sights on the Caribbean, and are poised to capture an even larger share of the American market with this proposed 50-percent reduction in duty.

Mr. President, I do not agree with all of the assertions made by the proponents of this legislation. They have maintained that this amendment is simply designed to cause a few jobs now in the Far East to shift to the Caribbean nations. We are told that this poses no threat to American workers, because Americans make shoes which are much higher priced and which, therefore, do not compete against these imports.

I dispute these assertions. I do not believe they are accurate. Contrary to these assertions, U.S. rubber footwear manufacturers like Converse, Etonic, New Balance, and Carter compete directly with imports at every price level. And contrary to the suggestion of its proponents, this amendment is not limited by its terms to inexpensive tennis shoes.

That has been what is talked about here. That has been what is shown here. But the amendment refers to import categories covering all fabric upper rubber-soled footwear, including high-priced Nikes selling for more than $50 a pair.

So it is one thing to hold up a $9 sneaker and say that is what we are talking about, but that is not what the amendment says. That is not what we are voting on. We are voting on an amendment that is not limited to examples which were shown here to make the case of the proponents.

The proponents maintain that it will not cost any American jobs. I disagree, respectfully. If this amendment is adopted, American companies would suddenly face competition whose duties have been cut in half. They would have to react in some way, and the choice they will face is either to concede even more market share, close down still more plants in the United States, or to shift their operations to the Caribbean.

I am advised that American companies now have contingency plans to do just that, to shift their operations to the Caribbean. That would cause an increase in footwear employment in the Caribbean, but if so, it will cause a direct loss of jobs in the United States.

In effect, if adopted, this amendment will shift jobs from the United States to the Caribbean. We can do that. We can say we want to create employment in footwear in the Caribbean, and we will create a job in a Caribbean country. But let us not close our eyes to the fact that in so doing, we will be causing the loss of a job in the United States.

And is it our policy to say that the way we are going to help people in the Caribbean is to penalize people in West Virginia, or North Carolina, or Georgia, or Pennsylvania, or Maine? That is what this amendment would cause. Do we now say that the way to help people in other countries is to shift jobs from Americans to them? I say there ought to be a better way to help out countries than to do it at a direct cost of American jobs.

Almost all of these plants in this country are located in small towns, in rural areas that can ill afford the enormous economic dislocation that results from a plant closing.

In Maine alone, the New Balance and Etonic plants employ more than 800 rubber footwear workers. Well, 800 is not a lot in a big State, but in a State like Maine, with just over 1 million population, 800 jobs are a lot of jobs. And to the person who loses his job, it is no consolation that he or she is 1 of only 800.

The job loss is just as great to the individual and his or her family if it is the only job lost or if it is 1 of 80 or 1 of 800, but it is especially pronounced in these small towns where there are no other centers of employment. Many of these workers are women; all are of modest means.

The Senator from Oregon pointed out that these are low-paying jobs. Yes, they are. But for these people it is their only means of income and causing the loss of an American job to an American worker because it is a low-paying job seems to me the reverse of what we should be doing. These workers are among the most vulnerable in our society, not possessing the skills and education necessary to find alternative employment.

Why should these vulnerable people be asked to bear the full burden of American foreign policy objectives in the Caribbean? If we want to give economic benefits to the Caribbean nations, which I favor, we can and we should do so in a fair manner that distributes the burden equitably among all in our society. Footwear manufacturing workers do not oppose that. They prefer that such assistance be provided directly and fairly rather than the export of their jobs.

This amendment would export jobs. And so if we are saying we can afford to lose these jobs because they are low paying, what I am saying is just the opposite; because these are low-paying jobs, they are poor people, they are the ones in our society least equipped to be asked to bear this burden. It is those of us who have higher incomes who ought to be asked to be bearing this burden, not those at the bottom end of the income scale who are in the most difficult situation and are most vulnerable when they do lose their jobs.

So, Mr. President, I applaud the desire of the Senator from Florida to provide assistance to the Caribbean nations. I share that objective. But I do not favor doing so in a manner that is as inequitable as the result which will be produced by this amendment.

I understand the position of the proponents. I respect their point of view, but I do not agree that this is a case of Chinese jobs and Caribbean jobs. This is a case of American jobs. This is a case of Americans losing their jobs. This is a case of an industry which, in my State alone, has in recent years seen employment decline from 30,000 to now about 10,000 or 11,000. To those 10,000 or 11,000 it is the way they make their living, it is the way they support their families, it is the way they feed their kids, and they are entitled not to be asked to share wholly upon their shoulders the burden of this foreign policy objective.

If we want to do something to advance American foreign policy interests, let us do so in a manner that distributes the burden among all Americans of all income classes, not a handful or a few hundred or a few thousand of Americans who are the most vulnerable, least able persons to bear that burden.

I urge the defeat of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield a few minutes?

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, one argument made by the Senator from Pennsylvania was that this was an item best left for the Uruguay round where we could negotiate and trade for something rather than giving this away. I find that kind of a catch-22 argument.

One of the principal reasons we have this amendment before us is that the footwear industry wanted a promise from the administration that there would be no consideration of footwear imports in the Uruguay round. So when people say leave it to the Uruguay round, they never wanted it left to the Uruguay round, and now they are supporting this amendment out of pique because it is being considered in the Uruguay round. But, despite the fact it is being considered in the Uruguay round, I have a letter from Carla Hills, our U.S. Trade Representative, who is our chief negotiator in the Uruguay round. If anybody would be concerned as to whether this should be negotiated in that round or not, it would be Ambassador Hills. In this letter she specifically asks that this amendment be adopted. So let us put to rest the argument that this should be left for the Uruguay round. Our principal negotiator in that round says, "Give me this amendment now."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter, dated April 16, 1990, from our U.S. Trade Representative to the chairman of the Finance Committee.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE U.S. TRADE REPRESENTATIVE,
Washington, DC, April 16, 1990.

Hon. LLOYD BENTSEN,
Chairman, Committee on Finance, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am asking for your support for an amendment to legislation designed to enhance the Caribbean Basin Initiative (CBI), which is part of H.R. 1594.

Since its enactment in 1984, the CBI has greatly helped U.S. efforts to promote the benefits countries in the region can derive from a free-market approach to economic development. Permanent extension of this program—as provided in H.R. 1594—is an extremely valuable provision which would encourage long term investment in the Caribbean Basin. But more can and should be done.

An important objective of new CBI legislation is to expand access to the U.S. market for Caribbean products that offer potential for future growth. We have found that countries in the region have taken advantage of the tariff preferences offered by the CBI on a broad range of products. As currently formulated, H.R. 1594 provides very little improvement in this area over the current CBI law.

We have been searching for a balance between enhanced market access for the Caribbean Basin and the legitimate interests of our domestic industries. We believe an amendment on footwear—as proposed by Senator Packwood at the March 1, 1990, markup of the CBI legislation—would benefit the region without harming this sector of the U.S. economy.

Senator Packwood's amendment would reduce duties by 50 percent only on a narrow range of footwear—shoes with rubber soles and fabric uppers produced in the Caribbean Basin. This amendment would not reduce tariffs on leather footwear or protective rubber footwear.

We believe a tariff reduction on rubber/fabric footwear would have very little impact on the U.S. industry because:

This type of footwear accounts for under 18 percent of U.S. footwear consumption;

Total employment in this segment of the shoe industry has actually increased since 1986;

Under one percent of the $400 million of U.S. rubber/fabric footwear imports came from the Caribbean region—the vast majority was imported from Asia;

A cut of 50 percent of the U.S. tariffs on rubber/fabric footwear, which currently range from 20 percent to 67 percent would still leave these products with a tariff level far above the U.S. average—under 5 percent; and

There has been no apparent adverse impact on U.S. production or employment as a result of the tariffs on these products that were eliminated under the U.S.-Israel Free Trade Agreement (FTA) and that were reduced by 50 percent under the U.S.-Canada FTA.

We believe a tariff reduction on rubber/fabric footwear would be much more likely to encourage production to shift to the Caribbean Basin from certain Asian countries—where the wage rates are increasing—than to displace U.S. production. New CBI legislation provides us an opportunity to stimulate this relocation process in the type of labor intensive industry needed for the Caribbean Basin.

Sincerely,

CARLA A. HILLS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, if all others have completed their debate, I will close for the proponents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, we have heard a debate this afternoon which is worthy of the significance which trade policy has had in our American history.

One of the issues around which our two great political parties were formed was the issue of trade policy. Alexander Hamilton, at that time Secretary of the Treasury, advocated a policy of tariff that went beyond revenue generation for purposes of providing protection to fledging American industry.

Thomas Jefferson advocated a policy of open trade. It was Thomas Jefferson's belief, as one of his corollaries, that the best government was the least government, that the most appropriate way to determine the allocation of economic benefits was through an expansion of the open market, and even in those earliest days with our Thirteen Colonies attempting to establish nationhood, Jefferson was prepared to have the United States compete with the world, not hide behind barriers.

Suggestions have been made that we are trying to allocate pain through this legislation, that we are attempting to focus on a small group of Americans and say, "You shall bear the burden."

There are a couple assumptions that underlie that statement. One is that nobody is bearing any burden today, that we are in a free-of-pain circumstance. In fact, quite to the contrary, it has been stated by the most competent economists, that one-third of the U.S. current trade deficit, one-third of our trade deficit, is a direct result of the decline in the economies of the Caribbean and Latin America and, therefore, their inability to trade with us.

A very persuasive article outlining the extent of that economic injury to the United States of America and its citizens appeared recently in the Wall Street Journal authored by Mr. Peter Drunker. The president of the American Soybean Association appeared before the Senate Banking Committee recently, and he testified as to the dramatic reduction in the sale of U.S. soybeans to Latin America as a result of Latin America's economic demise.

There are farmers in Camilla, GA, and in Havana, FL, and in States across the Nation that are suffering because we have had a trade policy and a policy of economic indifference which has contributed to that decline in Latin America.

Mr. President, we are not doing this out of a sense of total philanthropy because we think it would be a nice thing to do for our neighbors in the Caribbean and Central America. The actions in 1983, the actions that we are going to take today, the actions, which I hope we will take by virtue of adopting this amendment, are being done because they are in the interests of the citizens of the United States of America.

Some have suggested that we have already done enough, that in 1983 we gave enough benefits to these countries, we do not need to do any more. The facts belie that statement. During the period 1981 to 1989, the Dominican Republican had a growth of 2 percent in its per capita income, 2 percent over that 9-year period. In contrast Haiti had a decline in already one of the lowest per capita incomes in the world of 18 percent; Honduras had a decline of 12 percent; Jamaica, 12.8 percent; Guatemala, 18 percent; El Salvador, 17 percent; and the country which tomorrow will inaugurate a freely elected democratic president, Nicaragua, suffered a decline during that 9-year period of 33 percent in per capita income.

Frankly, Mr. President, I believe that the passage of the CBI in 1983 was a positive force. The figures would have been worse if that had not happened. But for anyone to represent that we have done enough, that we have extended the extent of our mutual self-interest in the economies of those countries, I say misses the reality of what has occurred. And what has occurred in the last decade has been a grinding reduction in the standards of living in virtually every country to the south of the United States of America, for which the United States has paid a dear price.

Part of that price has been the one-third of our trade deficit which can be assigned to the decline of the economies in Latin America. And who pays for that? There is a worker in Peoria, IL, who is not building a Caterpillar tractor because the farmers in the Dominican Republic cannot afford to buy his Caterpillar tractor. There are chicken farmers in Arkansas who are not selling chickens to Trinidad because they cannot afford to buy the chickens, a country, Mr. President, with one of the highest per capita incomes in the region, which buys almost 70 percent of its food from the United States of America.

We have a great economic stake in these countries. But our interest is not just economic. Mr. President, think of where the United States has committed its great military resources in recent years. Do we send our troops to war against North Korea? Do we send our troops over the line into Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Romania, the Soviet Union? No, Mr. President, fortunately we do not find that to be necessary.

Mr. President, it is true that we have sent our troops into Grenada, and most recently into Panama. There is where we saw that we had a national interest. Our security stake was so high that it warranted us committing forces. We paid a price in blood because of our assessment of the national security interest to the United States of America of those two relatively small neighbor countries.

The United States has a stake in this issue because of refugees. We have had an enormous tide of refugees come across the Rio Grande, across the Caribbean, and across the Gulf of Mexico, because of this grinding poverty. If you lived in a country like Guatemala, which is one of the largest countries in the region, with a population of over 8 million people and an 18-percent decline in your per capita income since 1981, you might figure that there is a better place for you as well, that individual, that peasant who comes from Guatemala to Mexico and then to Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona, and elsewhere in the country. The real interest of the United States is in seeing that that person feels hope and optimism in their home country.

Finally, Mr. President, just to mention, in terms of our mutuality of interest—we are not doing this simply as a unilateral action of good will—is the tremendous stake which the whole nation has in the issue of illicit drugs and the recognition that this region is not a producer but the most significant site of transport of drugs and has also been used as organizational headquarters as the site of money laundering and other financial transactions which support the total drug enterprise.

So, Mr. President, we have a great stake in what will happen in this region. I believe it is appropriate that we go beyond the vision of 1983 and ask what can we do to create some jobs that are labor intensive, that relate to the skill levels of the people, that will not be unduly disruptive of our industries.

I believe that we have found such a proposal in this modest extension of the ability to produce footwear in the Caribbean. We are not talking about eliminating duties. We still have some of the highest duties of any products on these shoes produced in the Caribbean under the amendment that is before the Senate. Remembering that the average duty in the United States is less than 5 percent, if this amendment were to be adopted, the duty on this shoe, the "Teen-age Mutant Ninja Turtle Shoe," would still be 24 percent. The duty on this shoe, a $4.99 simple canvas shoe, would still be almost 20 percent. We are not proposing an abolition, but rather the same level of duties that currently apply in the United States-Canada Trade Agreement relative to these same products.

This is an industry which today imports 74 percent from outside the United States. Nine percent of the products that are imported come from the Pacific Rim, 50 percent from China. The fact is that the domestic footwear industry of this type of shoe has actually been increasing in employment since 1986. This is not an industry which is flat on its back. It is an industry which has demonstrated, because it is willing to spend the money and go in to capital intensive production of shoes, as this Tretorn produced in the United States, that they can be competitive. There is a niche in this business where the United States can be successful. We are being successful. We are increasing employment in this type of shoe. This is where our future is, not in the Ninja turtle shoe.

Mr. President, I conclude by stating the obvious. This is a time of tremendous change, transition, and opportunity around the world. We have been focused on that which has been so dramatically in evidence in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. But a great change has been occurring within our own hemisphere.

A symbol of that change will occur tomorrow in Managua, Nicaragua, when, for one of the first times in the long, beleaguered history of that country, a dramatically elected president will assume office. Mrs. Chamorro will assume office over a country which has been devastated by 20 years of civil conflict. She will take control of a country whose per capita income is now $300 per citizen; 33-percent less than it was 10 years ago. She will take control of a country with a 50 percent unemployment rate, and a 1,500-percent level of inflation.

Are we going to say on this eve of her inauguration that, when given this modest opportunity to provide a hand of friendship and support in a tangible way that is not a gift but rather an opportunity for the people of that country and others in similar circumstances to buy the enterprise of their own effort, to improve their lot, and to build a foundation of support for democratic values, for human rights, and for an economic system built on private enterprise, are we to say that, "We had that opportunity, Mrs. Chamorro, but we decided that we were not bold enough, we were not sufficiently able to see our own self-interest, that that self-interest of the United States had been shadowed by the small clouds of timidity and of immediate focused interest"?

Mr. President, I hope that is not the message that we are going to deliver. Mrs. Chamorro will give us tomorrow a statement of the values of the human spirit which are highest in our lexicon of America. I hope that we will be willing to take this small step to meet her leadership at a time of great challenge and opportunity.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HELMS. Would the distinguished Senator yield me some time?

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am delighted to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes Senator HELMS for 5 minutes.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, sitting here this afternoon and this evening listening to the debate, I began to reminisce. In 1941, a very pretty young lady caught my eye. She is now my favorite grandma. Her father was the number one salesman for a very fine shoe company in Lynchburg, VA, Craddock-Terry Shoe Corp.

Inasmuch as I wanted to get along with the gentleman whom I hoped would be my father-in-law, and he turned out to be, I listened many hours to his lamentation about what was happening to the shoe industry even then. I have thought so many times this afternoon how prophetic he was, because there is no Craddock-Terry Shoe Corp. in Lynchburg, VA, or anywhere else today.

So we can trace the demise of this industry, and we can assign the reasons for it.

I have listened with interest to the comments by the two distinguished Senators from Maine, the able majority leader and the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN] and the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. BENTSEN. In my judgment, they have been exactly right in everything they have said.

Mr. President, when the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act was enacted back in 1983, its purpose—and it was emphasized over and over again—was to help the economies of the Caribbean countries to provide certain duty-free preferences to products coming out of those countries. All well and good. That effort was widely supported then, and I think it is supported now. For the most part it has been successful.

But, at that time, it was recognized that certain industries in the United States were just too important to this country and too sensitive to the import problem to include among the duty preference items. One of those industries was the footwear industry.

Since that time the situation for the footwear industry has not improved, not one bit. It has become worse and worse, deteriorating steadily before our eyes.

Senator MITCHELL, Senator COHEN, and Senator BENTSEN have all pointed out that in 1989, 74 percent of the rubber-soled fabric-upper footwear sold in the United States was imported. There are few—in fact, I do not believe there are any—industries which have such a tremendously high import penetration rate.

In my State we had a number of shoe manufacturers. Now, we have one, Converse, in Lumberton, NC.

So, I have watched this over the years, as have other Senators, and I must say that I am absolutely reluctant to do anything that will encourage or assist further imports in the footwear industry, because somewhere we have to draw the line. In fact, as I look back over the years, we should have drawn the line earlier.

As Senator MITCHELL has so aptly said—and I will not repeat all of the remarks that he made so eloquently—if there were any way to be certain that the only effect of the amendment would be to shift imports from China to the Caribbean, that would be one thing. But as Senator MITCHELL and Senator COHEN have both pointed out, that is not covered in the amendment. In fact, it is obvious that this amendment will shift production of shoes from the United States to the Caribbean. We simply cannot allow that to happen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. BENTSEN. I have no further speakers on my side, and I am ready to yield back the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida, Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. GRAHAM. The proponents yield back the remainder of their time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Maine.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is time remaining. The motion is not in order.

The Chair recognizes Senator BENTSEN.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I also ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has all the time been yielded back?

Mr. BENTSEN. I yield back such time as we have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, on the motion to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Florida, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table.

The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask that we have a rollcall on final passage.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] is necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGAMAN). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced, yeas 63, nays 33, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table the amendment (No. 1515) was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1520

(Purpose: To authorize the transfer of certain seized property)

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PRYOR). The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] proposes an amendment numbered 1520.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. . The Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer to the University Medical Center, Tucson, Arizona, for medical and emergency transportation purposes, an air worthy turboprop aircraft that—

(1) was forfeited to the United States under the customs laws;

(2) is not transferred to any Federal agency or State or local law enforcement agency under section 616 of the Tariff Act of 1930; and

(3) would, but for the purpose of this section, be sold at public auction under section 609 of the Tariff Act of 1930. Section 616(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930 applies to the aircraft transferred under this section.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am offering an amendment to H.R. 1594, an act making miscellaneous and technical changes to the various trade laws, to transfer aircraft seized under the U.S. Customs forfeiture law to the University of Arizona Medical Center, which is part of the Arizona Health Science Center of the University of Arizona.

The amendment would simply authorize the U.S. Customs Service to transfer a seized turboprop aircraft to the University Medical Center, which has the world's only airborne intensive care unit in operation today.

Mr. President, although Arizona is a large State, three-quarters of the population is concentrated in the Tucson and Phoenix metropolitan areas.

Most sophisticated medical facilities and medical professions also are located in these areas. Consequently, many small communities located in remote rural areas are medically underserved.

The University Medical Center's airborne intensive care unit had the capability to sustain cardiac and trauma patients while en route from remote areas in Arizona and New Mexico to the University Medical Center or other metropolitan hospitals for further treatment.

Mr. President, the Arizona Health Science Center is the premier facility for medical research in Arizona and the desert southwest, as well as an important regional center for patients with a wide variety of serious medical conditions. The center, located in Tucson, is the home of the University of Arizona, College of Medicine, Nursing, Pharmacy, University Physicians, The school of health-related professionals and the University Medical Center, a 300-bed hospital that serves as a primary teaching center with the colleges.

Because the Arizona Health Science Center is the home of the most sophisticated research and treatment program in the State it is the center of choice for care in many medical areas and its reputation brings patients from even beyond the bounds of Arizona.

Presently, the University Medical Center is renting an aircraft which must be retrofitted on a recurring basis with medical beds, intensive care, and other equipment. Transfer of an airworthy turboprop aircraft, which will probably need some work once received, will allow the university to use its limited funds to support the cost of medical outreach and procedures that are very costly now to patients from throughout the State and even outside of Arizona. The aircraft would be used not only to transport cardiac patients, but also victims of drug-related crimes along the Southwest border, which has been designated as a high-intensity drug trafficking area in the President's national drug control strategy.

Mr. President, my state has almost 200,000 native Americans. They live mostly in rural areas. This aircraft, if it was transferred, would be available to transport native Americans as well to this University Medical Center as well as to other hospitals.

Mr. President, we are not setting any new precedent with this amendment. Authorizations to transfer seized aircraft have been adopted before. In the 1988 drug bill, language was included transferring a seized custom aircraft to the Marian County Sheriff's Office in Indiana. So there is already precedence for this.

Mr. President, I have talked to Treasury about this. They indicate no opposition to granting this. If this happened to be a DEA asset, it could already occur because they have the authority to transfer. But the DEA does not have any such assets. The U.S. Customs does, and will be, and would be willing to transfer this for medical purposes. I hope the chairman and the ranking member see fit to accept this amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. This amendment is a rifle shot, pure and simple.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I cannot hear the distinguished chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Those Senators conversing in the back of the Senate Chamber will please retire to the Cloakroom. Those Senators conversing in the back of the Chamber will please retire to the cloakroom.

The Senator from Texas.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, thank you.

Mr. President, this amendment is a rifle shot, pure and simple. This is the type of thing which is criticized in the committee and where the burden of proof is on those that propose it. The other amendments that we have had, the vast majority of them, have been public and people can make their comments concerning them. This was not.

This amendment has been proposed at the last minute. It proposes to take a valuable piece of property that belongs to the Federal Government and give it to a specific institution in the State of Arizona.

What about the State of Texas? I have similar problems too. The State of Louisiana, the State of Connecticut, let us line up and see how many things we can transfer tonight.

That is not the way it is done. We have here a valuable piece of property. the Federal Government is broke, running an enormous deficit, while the State of Arizona ran a surplus last year, and is projected, according to the Arizona budget office, to run a surplus for the coming year. Where is the equity in that kind of situation,

So I urge my colleagues, unless we are all going to line up to see what we can get tonight, to oppose this amendment. Let us get on with the job of passing a tariff bill.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I strongly echo the comments of the chairman. I hope with very little discussion we move to table this. I hope there will be a rollcall vote.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, let me just take a couple of moments here. I do not want to prolong the Senate this evening. I know the chairman and ranking members want to get this bill passed and out of here. I do, too, Mr. President.

If Texas has a need to service indigent Hispanics or native Americans in some hospital, I think it is very appropriate that seized aircraft taken from drug dealers might be considered to be transferred to that institution. That is what we are asking here.

I am proud that my State of Arizona did not run a surplus but it does not have a deficit because we have a constitutional amendment that does not permit it. But that really is not the issue here. If this aircraft were in the DEA inventory the law provides they can transfer it to medical or any other governmental agency.

Unfortunately, the DEA does not have any seized airplanes or it would not be here asking for this. I am here asking for this because the Customs does have the airplanes. They have been seized from drug dealers. They are going to be used to transport rural individuals in Arizona and in New Mexico, and native Americans, and you can even justify some people who are going to be shot in drugs. We have already had two police officers, border patrol, transported by helicopter to the medical center who were shot along the border. There is plenty justification to tie this.

This bill that we are going to pass here—we have done a lot of things here. We have changed the tariff for bicycles with 26-inch wheels. We changed the tariff for treatment of molasses, for instance. Those are all items and justifiable.

I am not here to criticize anybody for it. But I am just asking for some assistance to a major medical institution that needs an airplane, can identify one, that is in or going to be in the inventory. Actually the one they wanted, they just could not get it. But they are coming across our borders, as the Senator from Texas knows so well, and we are going to have more of them. They need the autorization.

I hope that the chairman and the ranking member would at least take this to conference and discuss it with the House. I think the case is very important to my State. Yes, it is for a single State. Yes. it is for a single hospital. Yes, it is for native Americans and rural Arizonans. But it is because there is a cardiac center, and the northeastern part of our State is over 400 miles away from this hospital. There is no way to get those people there. They have the capacity if they just had the air transport.

So I certainly hope that the chairman could at least take this to conference.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, we have a procedure to dispose of seized aircraft by Customs, DEA, and other Government agencies. It is set up to see that the Government receives the proper compensation for valuable pieces of property.

If we were to try to set up something up for hospitals or rural communities, then it ought to be something that is administered equally across this Nation and to take care of the places that have the most need.

Arizona might qualify very highly in that regard. I admire the Senator for his eloquence in trying to pursue this. But in all candor, it has no place on this tariff bill. It is something that I strongly oppose and urge its defeat.

Mr. DECONCINI. Last year the Senate passed this bill, passed this on to the Appropriations Committee. I advised the Senator and the staff, and there was no objection. He comes so often and objects to those sort of things. We voted it out of here without any contention, and it did not go through the conference because the Ways and Means Committee says it technically should be in the Finance Committee or Ways and Means Committee bill and to find something to put it on.

So here I am now, victimized, after having passed it out of the Senate last year, with no objection, going to conference, and getting the commitment from the Ways and Means Committee chairman that if it comes back on a vehicle here from the proper jurisdictional committee it would be accepted.

So, Mr. President, I am caught in a very difficult position now having acceded to the chairman on the other side to put it in the proper bill. I have it in the proper bill. We have precedents for this. When they transferred last year to Marian County, that particular item, it was in 1988. We transferred an aircraft to Marian County.

There was no payment for Marion County over to them and there was no offset or anything else. It was a justificable thing to do. So I urge adoption of this. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is not a sufficient second.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I will continue then. We find that in the bill so far we have adopted amendment No. 1491 to direct the harmonized tariff schedule of the United States as it applies to parts of the ionization smoke detectors. That is an amendment added to this trade bill. It is very important to a Senator who wanted that because of certain manufacturers in their State. We also added amendment 1492 to collect the harmonized tariff schedule to the United States as it applies to outer garments treated as water resistants. And that was passed earlier in the debate of this bill.

Amendment No. 1493, to suspend temporarily the duty on Pigment Red No. 179, has been passed and adopted here.

Also, amendment No. 1495 to suspend temporarily the duty on Pigment Red 149 Dye, and Pigment Red 149 precast has been brought up here and amendments that have been included herein.

Amendment 1497 to deny generalized systems of preferences benefits to nations supporting international terrorism has been added.

Amendment No. 1498 to direct the U.S. Customs Service to study the validity of establishing a pilot Customs preclearance station in Jamaica to guard against drug traffickers. These have all be included in this bill. So, Mr. President, I hope I can get a vote, and I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DECONCINI. I thank my colleague for giving me a second on it. I hope that those that were here understand that this is going to a medical center for use in rural Arizona of Native Americans who cannot get to a hospital and other rural Arizonans and some from New Mexico who have no access and cannot transport themselves. This is a seized aircraft, and it is being transferred, if authorized, from the forfeiture of Customs.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I strongly oppose the amendment. Otherwise we might as well line up and see how many we can get for Texas, Minnesota, North Carolina, and others. We have a recognized procedure for handling such things, and I urge that we table the amendment. I move to table the amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion to table. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROCKEFELLER). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 1520 was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1521

(Purpose: Prohibiting the Importation of all articles originating in Burma)

Mr. SANFORD: Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, and Mr. HELMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD], for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, and Mr. HELMS, proposes an amendment numbered 1521.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 104, beginning with line 4, strike all through page 105, line 23, and insert:

SEC. 4004. PROHIBITION ON THE IMPORTATION OF ALL ARTICLES ORIGINATING IN BURMA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—After the date of the enactment of this Act, any article which is the growth, product, or manufacture of Burma may not be imported into the United States or any territory or possession of the United States.

(b) ENFORCEMENT.—

(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(2) The regulations under paragraph (1) shall require any importer of any article that—

(A) is imported from, or has passed through, Burma, or

(B) is imported from, or has passed through, any foreign country whose nationals are allowed to acquire articles which are the growth of Burma by a treaty or agreement between Burma and the foreign country and/or such nationals, to submit, at the time of the importation into the United States or any territory or possession of the United States, to the Secretary of the Treasury a statement certifying the country of origin of the article.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is entirely correct. The Senate will be in order. There are Senators in various parts of the Chamber who are in conversation and the Senate will not proceed until there is silence in the Senate. The Chair will be patient, but there will be no further proceedings until the Senate is silent, and there are Senators at this moment in conversation in the Chamber.

The Senator from North Carolina may proceed.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New York, who is a cosponsor of this amendment, had placed in the original bill successfully a provision that banned the importation of all teakwood products and fish products from Burma because of the extremely severe violations of human rights now occurring in Burma. This amendment expands the ban of teakwood and fish from Burma currently contained in this bill to all products imported from Burma. First, I would like to thank my colleague, Senator MOYNIHAN for raising this issue and for his diligence in bringing the deplorable human rights situation in Burma to our attention. I am in complete agreement with the Senator from New York that the human rights violations in Burma are abominable and must be stopped. As such, I think it is important that we send the strongest signal possible to the Government of Burma that their practices are unacceptable. If the situation in Burma is bad enough to warrant sanctions on teak and fish—and it certainly is—then it is bad enough to warrant sanctions on all products from Burma.

This amendment is essential for two reasons. The first, is that of the strength of the message we are sending to the Burmese Government. We must show the Burmese Government that we disapprove of the violence that has occurred there. This cannot be done by signaling out only two products: Teakwood and fish. Instead, I propose a ban on all imports from Burma.

Mr. President, Senator MOYNIHAN believes that the import ban of fish and teak will be of great symbolic support to the opposition prodemocracy forces. It is obvious that expanding the ban to all products imported from Burma will simply give more potency and credence to such a symbolic act. If we are going to send the Burmese Government a symbolic message it is important that we not send an incomplete one.

Mr. President, it is time that we show the Burmese Government we mean business. The Government has previously ignored two resolutions by the United Nations in March 1989, and February 1990, which criticized the human rights abuses there. Previous Senate resolutions have had little impact. The State Department and others note that Burma's human rights situation continues to deteriorate from an already intolerable position. It is also important that we take positive steps toward action before the upcoming local election on May 27.

The second reason I have called upon my fellow Senators to consider this amendment is in the area of fairness. As the Senator from New York is aware, I and others have constituents that import teak from Burma. They feel, with some justification, that they have been singled out. While imposing any trade sanctions on a country always burdens some companies, I believe that it is important that this ban be perceived as fair and just to all those it damages. It is unfair and unjust that only certain communities in the United States must bear the brunt of confronting Burma. Each and everyone of us should bear an equal burden in opposition to the Burmese Government's activities. While applying the ban to all products will not mitigate the economic damage that the ban poses for my constituents, it will remove the perception of unfairness in the process and the choice to single out teak and fish products. I think it is important that the perception of unfairness be eliminated if we are asking companies to suffer financial losses due to this ban.

By expanding this ban, we are barring the imports from Burma of gemstones, pearls, certain textile and apparel products, and a host of items that we import in very small numbers.

Mr. President, in light of the Burmese Government's blatant disregard for human life, I am sure that Senator MOYNIHAN and my fellow Senators will not fault me for an attempt to send the fairest and strongest message possible to the Burmese Government.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished friends from North Carolina for the measures they have taken to expand the scope of this measure.

Mr. President, the Senate has taken an inspiring and noble step today in voting to completely ban all imports from Burma. The military junta in Burma is one of the world's most perfidious regimes. It is an active participant, according to the State Department, in Burma's huge trade in opium. The opium that ends up on the streets of the United States and other countries as heroin. Burma produces most of the opium from the Golden Triangle, and the Burmese Army and the Burmese regime are direct and active participants in the conspiracy to traffic these narcotics.

The tragedy of Burma is one of enormity. Twenty-eight years of criminal mismanagement has left Burma, once the richest nation in Southeast Asia, as one of the world's very poorest. In the spring of 1988 the democratic wave sweeping the globe also struck Burma. Massive peaceful prodemocracy demonstrations erupted. Literally millions of people took to the streets to demand the ouster of the corrupt and decaying regime of General Ne Win who has ruled since a 1962 coup overthrew the last democratically elected government in Burma. Tiananmen Square happened at the Shwedagon Pagoda in Rangoon long before the drama began in China. Unfortunately, the results were the same, some new faces were brought in, and the demonstrations were ruthlessly ended. In Burma people were shot and shot and shot, until they were forced off the streets.

The new junta promised liberalization, both economic and political. Free elections were to take place in Burma on this coming May 27—but all hopes for such elections have long since disappeared. All opposition leaders have been arrested and imprisoned. All press censored, and campaigning strictly controlled. Martial law reigns. Arbitrary arrests, imprisonment, torture, and murder have turned Burma into a hell for human rights.

The latest outrage is the forced relocations of an estimated half-million people—nobody knows the true number—from the cities to rural death camps. This situation recalls the horrors of Pol Pot's Cambodia. All the while, the Burmese Army continues its offensive against the ethnic minorities who have been so long repressed. Meanwhile, the regime does nothing against the opium war lords. On the contrary, they are business partners.

On March 1, 1990, for the second year in a row, the President decertified Burma under the Narcotics Control Trade Act of 1986. Only three other countries stand in this category, and the President has imposed economic sanctions against all of them. The President has not, until now, taken action against Burma. If we mean what we say in that law then sanctions must be imposed upon Burma. And I am inspirited in this effort by the vote of the Senate today.

As we know, the effort to impose sanctions on Burma began about 1 year ago when I introduced S. 822, to ban the import of teak and fish products from Burma. It was after all these two natural resources that the regime began to sell at a furious pace to Thai and other companies. It was in truth all that Burma has left to sell. And these resources are being stolen by the Burmese regime from the Burmese people. We have an obligation not to buy them. Stolen goods cannot pass title.

Mr. President, I was soon joined in this effort by my distinguished colleague from both the Committees on Finance and Environment and Public Works, Senator SYMMS. Together we offered S. 822 in the markup to the bill now before the Senate. And at the urging of Senators SANFORD and HELMS, we are today broadening this import ban to be against all products. They have urged us not to single out any particular items, and we think their suggestion a fair one.

As we act today in the Senate, we will soon take this matter with the House. A companion bill has already been introduced, and enjoys the support of some 20 cosponsors. And we would expect that as more Members become aware of the nature and threat posed by the current regime, even more support will be forthcoming.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to acknowledge the commitment of many organizations to the sanctions that we are today voting to impose. Let me start by mentioning, the many environmental groups who recognize the hideous and painful devastation that the Burmese regime and their Thai collaborators are causing in the remaining tropical forests in Burma. Teak and other tropical timbers are not only being torn from the forests of Burma with no care or regard for the future, they are also being harvested over, literally speaking, the dead bodies of the indigenous Karen and Mon people. It is no hyperbole to say that with every log from the forests comes a dead Burmese minority.

The support of the Sierra Club, Greenpeace, Natural Resources Defense Council, National Wildlife Federation, Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund, the National Audubon Society, the Rainforest Action Network, the Rainforest Alliance, was critical to the efforts of Senator SYMMS and myself. Even groups from Thailand and Malaysia support this measure. They know well the costs of irresponsible forest management.

Human rights and church groups also support the efforts to impose sanctions on Burma. They include Asia Watch, the U.S. Committee for Refugees, the Church of the Brethren, American Baptist Churches, USA, the United Methodist Church, the National Council of the Churches of Christ, and the Mennonite Central Committee. We also have the support of the AFL-CIO, which has shown a keen and careful attention to the desperate conditions in Burma.

Let me also recognize the very invaluable support this effort has been given by Mr. Paul Hawken, of Smith & Hawken. Mr. Hawken is one teak importer who investigated the facts and voluntarily stopped buying teak from Burma. He has since provided us with most valuable information and guidance on the teak market, and explained that alternatives exist to the woods coming from Burma.

Let me close by noting that this measure has the support of the people we ought to listen to the most in these matters—the Burmese prodemocracy opposition themselves. They have asked the world to stop commerce with Burma, and I am gratified that today the Senate has heard them and listened. Whether it is the All Burma Students Democratic Front or that most noble and consequential of leaders, Aung San Suu Kyi, they have asked the world not to forget them. Today the U.S. Senate has taken an important step forward on their behalf.

I ask unanimous consent that a list of organizations supporting the original measure and statements from some of those organizations be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALL BURMA STUDENTS' DEMOCRATIC FRONT,
April 3, 1990.

Senator DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
(Attention Andrew Samet)
Russell Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: As members of the All Burma Students' Democratic Front, we would like to express our sincere appreciation to you for your introduction of SB822 to Congress. As we understand it, this bill, if passed, would ban all imports of wood and fish products which originate from Burma.

This is very important to us, and to the Burmese people's struggle for freedom and justice. The Saw Maung regime is now selling off our natural resources at a tremendous rate, and all of the earnings are being used by the military to further oppress the people. As long as they are earning this money, they will never negotiate, and the civil war will grow. This will result in more destruction of our country, and continued death of our innocent people.

As you know, the Burmese military is now carrying out a severe dry-season offensive against the ethnic people and the student camps. Many people have died, and at least 20,000 ethnic villagers have been made homeless during the past several months. This could have been avoided if countries like Thailand, Japan and others would have delayed their investments in Burma until after true democracy had been established. Their investments have resulted in terrible suffering for our people and our country. This fact history will never be able to cover up.

We urge you to continue your work to put economic pressure on the Saw Maung regime, as we feel this is the only way peace can come to our motherland with less bloodshed.

We wish you good luck in your fight to get this bill passed.

Sincerely,

DR. THAUNG HTUN,
Foreign Affairs,
All Burma Students' Democratic Front.

SMITH & HAWKEN,
Mill Valley, CA, March 13, 1990.

Hon. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: As a former importer of tropical timber from the country of Burma, I want to express my wholehearted support for S. 822 which, among other things, would ban the importation of teak and rosewood products and timber harvested from the Burmese forests.

As you know, Burma once had a model tropical timber program that was initiated by Dr. Brandis in 1856. The Brandis Selection System has become a model worldwide of responsible and sustainably managed use of tropical forests. In recent years, however, particularly since the rise to power by General Saw Maung, Burma has abandoned its traditional forestry system and has sold off huge concessions on the Thai-Burma border. This fire sale of Burma's precious natural resources does nothing more than prop up a military dictatorship that has been accused of some of the grossest violations of human rights in the world today. Not only are funds from the sales of these concessions going to fight ethnic opposition groups in Burma, but the logging practices used in these areas will guarantee the rapid diminution of these important resources, perhaps even their destruction.

Today responsibly harvested and grown teak is available from the island of Java. This teak, grown on plantations begun over 100 years ago, is harvested on a 60 to 80-year rotation and involves no destruction whatsoever of primary or natural forests. Java teak is now the primary supplier of teak worldwide, and the plantation system used in Java provides a model for lesser developed tropical countries to create timber revenue without the wholesale destruction of primary forests. It has been stated by opposition groups representing the topical timber industry that they will suffer without the importation of timber from Burma. Because Burma is cutting older trees of a significantly larger caliper than those available in tree farms in Java, there are some dimensions of timber that are now only available from the Burmese forests. This timber has no commercial use except in the construction of very large and expensive yachts. There is no other commercial use for which there is not a number of other practical and worthwhile substitutes. Timber of this size represents a tiny fraction of 1% of all teak imported into the United States. It would be, in my opinion, inappropriate to continue the importation of Burma teak for the sake of a few rich yacht owners when both tribes and forests are being destroyed by this government.

I applaud your pursuit of what seems to others to be an obscure issue. But there's nothing obscure about the violation of human rights wherever they occur. Whatever we can do to put pressure on the present Burmese regime to change their practices and bring about democratic reform are to be lauded and supported. That we do.

Sincerely,

PAUL HAWKEN.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS,
Washington, DC, March 12, 1990.

Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
SR-464, Senate Russell Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: The AFL-CIO strongly supports your legislation to deny

U.S. access to Burmese teak and fish products. As you are aware, the AFL-CIO was successful in petitioning the U.S. government to remove Burma's duty free trade privileges under GSP last year. The Burmese government responded to the removal of GSP by continuing threats and physical violence against its citizens. On January 16, the government ruled that the most popular political figure in Burma, Aung San Suu Kyi, General Secretary for the National League for Democracy, could not be a candidate for the new election. These May elections will be a sham. In addition, there has been systematic repression of workers and prosecution of union leaders in Burma. Therefore, on February 21, the AFL-CIO Executive Council urged additional restrictions upon Burma and specifically urged the Japanese to discontinue their foreign aid to this repressive regime. (Executive Council Statement is attached for your information.)

Your legislation banning Burmese teak and fish products deserves the support of the Senate. Both of these products are being exploited and over-harvested to maintain the repressive military regime in Burma. Burmese citizens are being denied basic human rights. Therefore, the AFL-CIO strongly urges the Senate to adopt your legislation and send a clear message of solidarity to the oppressed people of Burma.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM J. CUNNINGHAM,
Legislative Representative.

STATEMENT BY THE AFL-CIO EXECUTIVE COUNCIL ON BURMA, FEBRUARY 21, 1990, BAL HARBOUR, FL

At a time when much of the world is being swept by a democratic revolution, the Burmese military dictatorship continues to pursue policies that systematically violate basic human and trade union rights.

In the spring and autumn of 1988, Burma's security forces suppressed a series of pro-democracy demonstrations by massacring at least 3,000 students, workers and monks. The military arrested, threatened and terrorized thousands more, including leaders of newly formed unions. The brutal crackdown in Burma was the government's reply to the legitimate democratic demands of a peaceful movement for change.

In an attempt to rally some popular support, Burma's military authorities—constituting themselves as the "State Law and Order Restoration Council"—have set a nationwide election on May 27 for a new National Assembly that is to draft a new constitution. But that election, the country's first in 29 years, will be a charade.

Of the major opposition leaders, most are either in jail, under house arrest, or in hiding. The government's latest blow against the pro-democracy forces came on January 16, when it ruled that Aung San Suu Kyi, general secretary of the National League for Democracy, could not be a candidate. The most popular leader to emerge from the 1988 demonstrations, she has been under house arrest since July 1989.

Last year, the U.S. government suspended aid to Burma, and, in response to an AFL-CIO petition charging worker rights violations, canceled Burma's duty-free trade privileges under the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP).

Shamefully, as the U.S. was moving to exert new pressure on the Burmese dictatorship, Japan, Burma's largest supplier of foreign aid, resumed its assistance program. At that time, democratic leader Suu Kyi criticized Japan's business-first policy, and said: "There can be no real progress on the economic front until the political situation has been sorted out." Still, several multinational corporations are starting to do business with Burma's bloody regime, thus bolstering tyranny.

The United States has applied great pressure on the Burmese government. Now it is time for America's allies—particularly Japan, Singapore and Thailand—to cut off their support for a regime so fearful of democracy that it murders its own people by the thousands.

SIERRA CLUB,
Washington, DC, March 23, 1990.

Hon. DANIEL MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: While the Sierra Club is not in support of an across the board ban on the importation of tropical timber, I am writing to express our support of your legislation (S. 822) to ban the importation into the United States of teak and other hardwoods from Burma.

We are extremely concerned over the loss of tropical forests due to the lack of sustainable management practices by the Burmese government. The government's massive sale of teak and other hardwood trees should neither be supported nor encouraged by our continued importation.

On a more global scale, the Sierra Club is interested in the possibility of Congressional legislation being introduced that would require the labeling of the country of origin of all tropical woods imported into the U.S., whether it comes in as raw lumber or finished products. Such a labeling law would give the consumer the option of buying products made of tropical woods that come from countries that are managing their timber on a sustainable basis. It would be our hope that the market place approach would cause the other tropical timber producing nations to amend their forestry practices so as to avoid a U.S. consumer boycott of their products.

This approach would be preferable to us rather than a complete ban on the importation of all tropical woods. Such a non-targeted approach would result in the punishment of all tropical timber exporting countries. Legislation to label all tropical woods imported into the U.S. would likely result in improved forest management.

Sincerely,

LARRY WILLIAMS,
Washington Director,
International Program.

NATURAL RESOURCES DEFENSE COUNCIL,
April 18, 1990.

Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: The Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) strongly supports S. 822, the bill you introduced which prohibits the import into the United States of teak, teak products, and fisheries products originating in Burma, now known as Myanmar.

This bill is urgently needed to stop the devastation of Burmese forests and marine resources currently being perpetrated by that country's military regime. Burma holds one of the largest remaining tracts of tropical forest on the Asian mainland. This forest holds eighty percent of the world's remaining teak. Recognizing that this teak can be immediately converted to hard currency, which can be used to buy military hardware, Burma's totalitarian government has sold off huge logging concessions to timber companies from Thailand, Japan, South Korea, and other nations. The result has been a tremendous and unsustainable increase in logging which threatens to obliterate Burma's tropical forests. Similarly, rights to Burma's rich fisheries are being auctioned off to the highest foreign bidders, placing those resources, and the lives of people who depend upon them for basic needs, in jeopardy.

Burma's rich natural resources are being liquidated to pay for weapons that are being used to prop up a failed socialist regime that has resisted pressures for democratic reform with brute force. For instance, in 1988, the army killed approximately 3,000 Burmese demonstrators who were peacefully protesting for democracy. Ready access to American markets for tropical timber and fisheries threatens to continue this repression. It also threatens to wreak wholesale destruction on Burma's tropical forests and fisheries.

NRDC commends you for your leadership role on these issues and strongly endorses S. 822.

Sincerely,

ERIC CHRISTENSEN,
Project Attorney.
PIERRE ERVILLE,
Legal Intern.

SIERRA CLUB,
LEGAL DEFENSE FUND, INC.,
San Francisco, CA, March 20, 1990.

Senator MOYNIHAN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: I am writing in support of your bill, S. 822, which if enacted into law would prohibit the importation of tropical timber and other products from Burma. As you know, the military dictatorship in that country is cutting Burma's tropical forests at an alarming rate in order to finance its war against ethnic opposition groups.

During the past year, the Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund has become aware of a number of situations around the world where human rights, particularly the rights of indigenous peoples, are being threatened by environmental degradation. Last summer and again this winter lawyers we retained presented evidence of such situations to the United Nations Subcommission and Commission on Human Rights in Geneva. I am enclosing for your information a copy of the document we distributed in Geneva earlier this month.

Thank you for your efforts to protect the forests of Burma and the rights of the ethnic populations there.

Sincerely yours,

FREDRIC P. SUTHERLAND.

NATIONAL WILDLIFE FEDERATION,
Washington, DC, March 23, 1990.

Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: The National Wildlife Federation (NWF) has recently become aware of the Senate's impending vote on S. 822, a bill to prohibit the importation into the United States of Burmese teak wood and fish products. NWF endorses this legislation and urges its speedy passage in the Senate and the House and its prompt signing into law by the President.

The pattern of unsustainable resource extraction in Burma under the current military government undermines that country's future economic potential. This is particularly true for Burma's forests, which contain 80% of the world's remaining teak reserves. These forests previously were harvested in a sustainable manner by local inhabitants under the 130-year-old "Burma Selection System." Today they are being clear-cut under the government's policy of selling logging concessions to foreign companies and its failure to monitor the ensuing timber extraction.

Similarly, sales of fishing concessions to foreign interests threaten Burma's shrimp and fish populations. It is estimated that the government's failure to police foreign companies' fishing in the Andaman Sea will cause the depletion of these resources in three to four years.

By continuing to import these products, the United States directly supports a political system that is generating widespread destruction of tropical forests and marine resources in Burma. Your legislation will send a strong message to the current government of Burma that they must support sustainable resource use in order to guarantee an ecologically and economically viable future.

Sincerely,

LYNN A. GREENWALT,
Vice President,
International Affairs.

GREENSPACE, USA
Washington, DC., March 13, 1990.

Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: We are writing on behalf of Greenspace USA's two million supporters in the U.S. to express our support for S. 822 which you introduced to ban the importation of teak, other hardwoods, and fisheries products from Burma into the U.S. It is apparent from the evidence available that Burma's willful destruction of its forest and marine resources to finance the repression of tribal groups and other opponents to its brutal regime demands action from the U.S. and other concerned nations.

The suspension of foreign aid by the U.S. and other countries to Burma was an important first step in responding to the flagrant human rights abuses by the government in 1988. Now that desperation has moved the Burmese military rulers to start liquidating its natural resources, one of the largest remaining tracts of tropical forests on the Southeast Asian mainland is in imminent jeopardy. The government's massive sale of teak and other hardwood trees with no concern for long-term management threatens to eradicate these important forests and the tribal groups which depend on them for their survival.

While your legislation properly identifies the Burmese government as the major culprit in this affair, we encourage you to find ways for the U.S. government to urge Thailand, Japan, Singapore, Hong Kong, and other countries to follow the U.S. lead in suspending support for these irresponsible Burmese activities. If the U.S. only acts alone in this case, it will not generate sufficient pressure to halt the environmental destruction in and around Burma.

The Thai government in particular should be approached to stop its own logging companies from further facilitation of the wholesale devastation in neighboring Burma. Thailand's complicity in this affair is particularly repugnant since it only recently banned logging in its own territory as one measure to preserve what little forest remains in its country.

Please keep us informed about the progress of this bill. We will inform our supporters about its importance and pledge to help its passage in whatever ways we can.

Thank you for your much needed efforts on this critical issue.

Sincerely,

PETER BAHOUTH,
Executive Director,
Greenspace USA.

CHURCH OF THE BRETHREN
WASHINGTON OFFICE,
Washington, DC, April 11, 1990.

Hon. PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: The Church of the Brethren Washington Office strongly supports your bill S. 822 which will prohibit the importation to the United States of teakwood and fish products originating in Burma.

We have a long history of concern for peace with justice and for support of human rights, having come from a background of religious persecution as a denomination in Germany. We denounce the Burmese military's handling of the demonstrations in 1988, and the continuing violence perpetrated by the military.

In addition, our denomination has great concern for the deforestation that is the result of the profiteering involved, and for this reason also strongly supports the ban. We understand that is a symbolic move.

Thank you,

Sincerely,

MELVA B. JIMERSON,
Acting Director.

INTERNATIONAL MINISTRIES, ABC/USA,
Valley Forge, PA, April 27, 1989.

DEAR FRIEND: Since you are one who has an interest in Burma and the struggle of its people during the past year, we are writing to urge your support for proposed legislation in Congress. If passed, it will protect Burma's natural resources and the future of its economic well-being.

Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan has introduced a bill, S. 822, which will prohibit the importation to the United States of teakwood and fish products originating in Burma. The bill would require that a certificate of origin accompany all teak products entering the U.S.A. and all fish products from countries fishing in Burmese waters.

In the months since it brutally suppressed all public dissent and returned the country to martial law status, the government of President Saw Maung has been in serious need of foreign currency to keep the military forces loyal and active. Attention has been drawn to the sales of profitable logging and fishing concessions by the military regime to corporations from Thailand, Singapore, South Korea, Japan, Hong Kong and Australia.

"The money from these concessions," said Sen. Moynihan, "will not help ordinary Burmese. Rather, the profits will prolong the life of the current government and equip the military for yet more violence. The massive logging concessions are all the more troublesome in light of the need to control deforestation."

On April 13 of this year, President Bush suspended Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) trade preferences for Burma due to its failure to protect internationally recognized workers' rights. Sen. Moynihan had requested such a suspension in December, 1988.

Although the Saw Maung government has promised elections, the many opposition parties have had difficulty mobilizing and publicly conveying their political positions, making the elections a questionable proposition.

A fact sheet with background to Sen. Moynihan's legislation is enclosed with this letter.

GENERAL BOARD OF GLOBAL MINISTRIES,
THE UNITED METHODIST CHURCH,
Washington, DC, March 30, 1990.

Hon. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: I am writing in support of a ban on the importation of Burmese teak and fish products into the United States, as proposed in S. 822.

We do so out of our church's long-standing concern for human rights and out of our concern for the environment.

The military government of Burma is noted for its gross violations of human rights, particularly against its ethnic minority peoples. These violations have been documented by such respected organizations as Amnesty International, Asia Watch and by our own State Department. The military government is harvesting its teak forests in an environmentally unsound manner in order to gain foreign currency and thus maintain its despotic rule over its people.

We believe it is timely for the U.S. to end its importation of these products in order to send a message in support of democracy, human rights, and care of the environment in Burma.

Sincerely,

JOYCE V. HAMLIN,
Executive Secretary for Public Policy.

SOUTHERN ASIA OFFICE,
New York, NY, March 14, 1990.

Hon. DANIEL P. MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MOYNIHAN: I understand you have introduced an amendment, S. 822, to a larger trade bill which is coming before the Senate shortly. Your amendment seeks to ban imports to the U.S. of teak and fish products from Burma (Myanmar). We strongly support your effort, both on ecological as well as human rights grounds. I have just received word from my counterpart with the National Council of Churches of Christ (USA), who visited the Thai-Burma border areas where dissident Burmese students have taken refuge. He says the situation is grim, and Burma needs to be called to account by the international community.

Yours sincerely,

ERIC A. GASS.

GENERAL CONFERENCE OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS,

Senator PATRICK MONYIHAN,
c/o Mr. Andrew Samet, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Re: Burma Sanctions.

Dear Sir: It has come to my attention that S. 822, which now is included in the trade bill, bans imports of tropical timber and fish from Burma because of adverse human rights conditions in that country. The General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists takes no official part in the imposition of sanctions against foreign nations. However, as an individual I can and herewith do express strong support for the measure that you have initiated.

Yours sincerely,

GARY M. ROSS, PH.D.,
Associate Director.

COALITION FOR PEACE & DEVELOPMENT,
Rachathevi, Bangkok, April 23, 1990.

Senator DANIEL MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DANIEL MOYNIHAN: We, for the organisations undersigned, would like to express our strong support for a bill which will ban the import of fish and wood products originating in Burma into the United States.

As a Thai citizen as well as member of world community, we are deeply concerned on a huge ravages of Burma's rain forests by Thai companies, organisations from student and non-government organisations on environment, peace and human rights, on an occasion of Earth Day 1990, have submitted protest letter to the Thai logging companies to withdraw its concessions in Burma. This is not only because of our realization on its nature impact that might be on Thailand and the world as a whole but our intolerance to see a handful of Thai opportunists, private or non-private, taking advantage of its neighborhood country's internal instability, to exploit and senselessly destroy one of the world richest natural resources for the sake of their own immediate benefits. With its cold heart that they use every means to get the concessions with knowledge that money paid will be spent for arms to kill innocent people.

We, therefore, would like to appeal to you and all the U.S. senators to take up this bill seriously and have it legislated as soon as possible to save their rain forest where contains the world's richest remaining teak. It is our hope that our tiny but strong voice could be heard by you all.

Sincerely yours,

Laddawan Tantivitayapitak, Coalition for Peace and Development; Suchart Pongpaniux, International Action Committee for Democracy in Burma; Amornrat Kriangkajorn, Environment Conservation 16 University Clubs; Pracha Hutanuwatr, Santi Pracha Dhamma Institute; Sutin Borrommajet, Union for Civil Liberty; Saravut Pratooaraj, Coordinating Group for Religion in Society; Gawin Chutima, Thai Development Support Committee; Mangkorn Tengpravat, Project for Forest Community; Narong Chuaylua, Thailand Student Christian Movement.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, in August of last year, I joined the able Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] in introducing a resolution condemning the human rights violations that were taking place in Burma. That resolution passed by voice vote.

Unfortunately, the human rights situation in Burma continues to deteriorate, while government control over the population, and interference in individual lives, have significantly increased.

In fact, during the past several months, the Burmese military regime has forcibly relocated hundreds of thousands of residents of some Burmese cities to satellite towns that are totally isolated.

During this relocation process, countless thousands have lost their homes and property. There are credible reports of many deaths due to disease as a result of the relocations.

Mr. President, we have received reports of torture, wide-scale arbitrary arrests, and disappearances. There have also been numerous reports of torture and mistreatment of political detainees.

There is evidence of an undetermined number of civilian deaths at the hands of military government officials and individual soldiers over the past year, including reports of summary executions.

The State Department says that eyewitnesses report having seen deaths of men who had been impressed as Burmese army porters after they were forced to walk ahead of troops through mine-infested terrain.

The political climate in Burma is unspeakably repressive. It is clear that the current regime has no intention of allowing free and fair elections scheduled for May 27.

In fact, Mr. President, according to reports, the leading opposition leaders have been placed under arrest and banned from running as candidates. Several thousand other members of opposition parties have been jailed throughout Burma since last summer.

Mr. President, I commend my friend from New York for his efforts to encourage our Government to take action to help rectify the unfortunate situation in Burma. He has continued his efforts in this legislation by including in it a provision to prohibit the importation of hardwoods and fish from Burma.

Since the United States is not a major trading partner of Burma, I am not sure that this limited trade ban will have a significant impact on the Burmese Government, especially if it is limited to only fish and hardwoods.

In addition, the provision has a clause that will render it ineffective if the President certifies in writing to Congress that the provision would be in violation of our obligations under GATT. I am informed that he will probably issue such a certification if this provision is enacted.

Nevertheless, passage of this provision by the Senate will send an important signal to the Burmese Government. My only reservation about the provision is that it covers only the importation of fish and hardwoods. If we are determined to pass trade sanctions, I do not understand why we should limit them to just a few specific products when there are a number of other products that we import from Burma.

Mr. President, if we are going to pass trade sanctions against the Burmese Government, we should do so across the board. In that way we do not put an unfair burden on those domestic businesses who happen to import the products that are targeted. The amendment offered by my colleague from North Carolina and myself will do just that.

Again, I commend my colleagues from New York and North Carolina, and I am pleased that we were able to reach the accommodation necessary to join in offering the pending amendment.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I would like to have a colloquy with the managers of the bill on our intent in passing the import prohibitions on articles from Burma. As we know, the bill contains an import ban on articles from Burma.

The purpose of this ban is to take action against the current regime which was again decertified by President Bush on March 1, 1990—having already been decertified for the first time on March 1, 1989—under the 1986 Narcotics Control Trade Act. The State Department's "International Narcotics Control Strategy Report" dated March 1990, makes the following statement about the current regime: "heroin refining and narcotics trafficking have increased due to the lack of enforcement, eradication, and a policy of accommodation with the main narcotics producing and trafficking organizations." A policy of accommodation. Indeed. The regime in Burma is corrupt, brutal, and stupid. And those leaders oversee a nation that supplies one half of the world's heroin supply. The same supply that end up on our streets.

The 1986 Narcotics Control Trade Act requires the President to impose trade sanctions on countries that are decertified. Thus far, the President has not done, although sanctions are imposed on other decertified countries, including Iran, Afghanistan, and Syria.

The Senate has now passed sactions. And we hope that the Senate's action will encourage the President to give further consideration to the authority he now has to take action against Burma.

At the same time, the Burmese regime's desperation has led it to offer fire sale concessions for foreign companies, principally from Thailand, to log Burma's remaining teak forests and to fish in Burma's territorial waters. Burma contains one of the world's last great teak forests, something on the order of 80 percent of global reserves. But these forests are now being ravaged and are headed toward depletion in a very short time. A global resource will soon be wasted. And the heritage of the Burmese people stolen from them.

Finally, I do not need to remind my colleagues of the absolute hell for human rights that now exists in Burma. I need only cite to the State Department's "Country Reports on Human Rights for 1989."

To the managers of this bill, I would ask that they address the intent of the language in section 4004(c) which states: "The provisions of this section shall not apply if the President submits to the Congress a written statement certifying that the provisions of this section violate the obligations of the United States under the GATT."

My understanding of this language is to incorporate the intent of the congress that if this provision is determined to be a violation of the GATT, that the President need not come back to the Congress to seek additional legislation to revoke the provision. It is also my understanding that it is also the intent of the managers that these import prohibitions become effective, and that the ability of the President to certify a GATT violation in no way is to be taken to state or imply, directly or indirectly, that such a violation exists. On the contrary, it is my view and I trust that of the managers that the Burma prohibitions are consistent with our sanctions against South Africa, Cuba, and Nicaragua. Therefore, any certification by the President to the contrary should be based upon a careful and detailed consideration of the GATT obligations and the bases upon which the United States has on other occasions justified trade measure exceptions, and should the President conclude otherwise that his feelings should be fully detailed in writing to the Congress.

Mr. BENTSEN. I concur with the understanding of the Senator from New York.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I too, concur with the views expressed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee has examined the amendment and the able Senator from New York has exercised leadership on this issue for some time. I think the contribution of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina is quite helpful to the amendment. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I do not know anything about this amendment. I do not have why we single out Burma over another country. All I can say is that this appears to me to be a very unfortunate way of doing business. I do not know where this came from. Were there hearings on this in the Foreign Relations Committee? Why is Burma singled out over Albania or other nations of the world? Apparently there is a head of steam behind this thing, but I would just like to be recorded as being opposed to the amendment. Not that I am necessarily in favor of imports from Burma, but I dislike the whole process that is taking place here. It gives me grave concern.

Mr. BENTSEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, let me say, as far as the concerns of the Senator, that this was a part of the committee bill in general. It was put out for comment, and it has now been amplified some in the additional version of it. But it was not an unusual process and it was taken up in the committee.

Mr. CHAFEE. Originally, I understand it dealt with teak wood and fish and now it is everything that Burma produces. To me it is a very unfortunate way of doing business. I would just like to be recorded as no and let it go at that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment.

If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1521) was agreed to.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENTSEN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

HOME HEATING OIL AND PROCESSED OIL FROM THE CARIBBEAN BASIN

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk dealing with a 50-percent reduction in the tariff on home heating oil and processed oil from the Caribbean Basin. Our oil imports in the last 5 years have increased by almost 60 percent, from 5 million, that is worldwide, from 5 million per day to 8 million, but our imports from the CBI countries have decreased almost 60 percent.

So this very narrowly drafted amendment applying only to residual fuel oil, which is principally used for home heating oil in the northeast, would have reduced the tariff from 10 cents a barrel to 5.25 cents a barrel.

However, Mr. President, in taking some soundings, I found that there was not unanimous approval for this amendment. I might go so far as to say there was very stiff opposition to it.

So it is not my intention to press the amendment, but I would like to sound out the manager of the bill to see how enthusiastically he would have supported the measure.

Mr. BENTSEN. I would say, Mr. President, I would enthusiastically oppose the amendment. It would give me a great deal of concern, at this time, to take this kind of step to further encourage the importation of oil. It would not help CBI.

What it would mean is we would have a lot of Persian Gulf countries transshipping through the CBI.

I have a number of Senators who have asked me to call them to register their strong opposition. I see one of them here. They would register their strong opposition if the amendment is pursued.

I strongly urge the Senator to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, not anxious to embark on a kamikaze mission, I will not pursue the amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. I thank the distinguished Senator for his judgment, his patriotism, and his good will.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I, too, want to thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island. We would have been here a while, and I think everyone wants to go home.

The Senator from Rhode Island would be doing more than just giving a break to the users of residual and distillate oil in his State. He would be creating a whole new incentive system for imported oil. This comes at a time when oil imports have surged to a level that exceeds anything we have ever seen. In 1973 as we entered into an embargo by OPEC countries that lead to incredible disruptions in our economy we imported 36 percent of needs. Today we are averaging 40 percent. That is even higher than during the second disruption of 1979.

At first blush I thought this reduction in the duty on certain petroleum products was for home heating oil, only. Upon closer inspection I see that we are making it easier to import residual oil to burn in electric powerplant boilers and even for transportation fuels (distillates are used in trains and diesels).

Under this amendment we would not simply create an incentive for the use of more imported oil in this country. We would create an incentive for the use of offshore refineries at a time when we have finally gotten them running at a high capacity. This is not just a point of interest for Senators who have have refineries in their States but for anyone who knows that our refineries are the cleanest in the world. To run oil through others is to add to the world's pollution.

If I were not concerned about encouraging more imported oil I would certainly be concerned about the discouraging effect an amendment like this would have on our conservation ethic. It is poorly timed coming on the heals of Earth Day.

The truth is that it would not even make up for the occasional rise in prices due to weather-induced shortages for home heating oil. If we did away with the entire duty it would lower the price of a gallon of heating oil by one-fourth of a penny. Now that is not going to make the average homeowner too much happier. It will make the average oil importer happy because with the volumes of oil they import it represents millions of dollars.

Suffice it to say, this is not the time to entice more imports of oil-related products. We are almost 50 percent dependent. And equally important, it is not the time to encourage the importation of petroleum-refined products when American refineries are in the process of becoming the cleanest, speaking of the environment, in the world.

We ought to encourage our own.

I thank the distinguished Senator for not offering the amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise in support of this trade legislation, and congratulate the chairman of the Finance Committee for his hard work in putting this package together. He has done an excellent job in expediting this legislation and putting together a noncontroversial package for the Senate to consider.

It is especially gratifying that title I of the bill, the miscellaneous tariffs section of the bill, contains six duty suspensions that I introduced—four for U.S. chemical companies, one for glassware, and one for steel. I appreciate the support of the Finance Committee, and the help given to include these suspensions in the bill as reported.

Among other provisions, this bill also contains changes to the 1974 Trade Act, reasserting the role of the Congress in trade relations with nonmarket economy countries and the emerging democracies in Eastern Europe.

I want to mention briefly an amendment that a number of Senators, including myself, have been seriously considering. The amendment would have removed all glassware products from eligibility for duty-free treatment under the Generalized System of Preferences [GSP]. Each year, contries file petitions for GSP treatment for glassware, and, each year, the U.S. glassware industry opposes those petitions. To my knowledge, only one glassware product has been deemed eligible by the U.S. Trade Representative [USTR] since the inception of the program. Nevertheless, this annual defense by the industry is necessary because tariffs ranging from 6 to 38 percent are the only protection the industry has.

There is no doubt that the glassware industry is import-sensitive. Since the 27 percent tariff cuts made in the Tokyo round, imports have surged and now hold 45 percent of our market. As you can imagine, with import penetration that high, we have seen a wave of plant closings—39 closings since 1980—and layoffs that have cost approximately 16,000 American workers their jobs.

And unfortunately, 11 of the 24 glassware plants that have closed in the last 5 years have been in my State, West Virginia. These are not just statistics, Mr. President, they represent real people, real families, and real communities devastated by imports. Often, the glassware plant that closed was the largest plant in the community, resulting in economic harm and adversity throughout that community.

In West Virginia, we have all the right ingredients for success in the glassware industry: Sand, skills, and the traditions of a glass-producing State. Our problem, which is shared by other States, is that we do not receive Government assistance to sustain our glassware plants nor would we pay 25 cents an hour wages. Those are advantages possessed by some of our foreign competitors, and in my view, they fully justify the tariffs that are so important to the survival of the remaining glassware industry in West Virginia and other parts of the country.

Recently, USTR accepted a petition from Colombia requesting duty-free treatment for 17 glassware products under the auspices of the President's Andean Trade Initiative. Colombia is a small producer of a few glassware items. Colombia is not the problem; indeed, the problem is under the GSP statutes and producers, because a decision by USTR that glassware is not import-sensitive opens the floodgates to imports from all GSP suppliers. Big suppliers, like Mexico, Turkey, Yugoslavia, and others would get GSP treatment, too. This would spell the beginning of the end for West Virginia glass.

Of course, I could not stand idly by and let that happen, so an amendment was drafted and we began discussions with USTRA on the amendment. Those negotiations have resulted in some understandings with the administration on glassware and GSP. As a result of those understandings, we will not be offering the amendment. I want to thank my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] and his staff member, Rebecca Cooper, for their hard work on this issue. I want to thank Mrs. Hills, Linn Williams, and Mary Tinsley for their efforts to reach an acceptable compromise.

Mr. President, we have waited for a considerable period of time for this legislation. Its swift passage is important for key industries and workers in West Virginia and the rest of the country.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, there are many components to the legislation that we are about to vote on. For many of our constituents, including several companies in Minnesota, the miscellaneous tariff provisions will provide relief from customs tariffs that serve no competitive purpose. But in this Senator's view, the most important element of this bill is the portion dealing with the Caribbean Basin Initiative [CBI].

Mr. President, the CBI portion of this bill is modest, at best. While it is important to make the CBI program permanent, I would have preferred that the Senate would have expanded the list of products eligible for CBI preference beyond those products currently granted favorable tariff treatment. Unfortunately, domestic economic interests have prevailed and the result is legislation that in all candor will make little, if any, improvement in the economies of the Caribbean countries.

Over the past several decades, we have spent billions to promote and secure democracy around the world and especially in this hemisphere. But if democracy is to thrive and survive in our hemisphere, economic conditions in the region must improve. Plantation crop economies must wean themselves from dependency on a single crop such as sugar, and develop a more stable and diversified economic base. To facilitate such growth, our market is vital, and an expanded CBI initiative would ultimately serve our policy objectives in promoting stability in the hemisphere.

Mr. President, tomorrow I will be in Managua, Nicaragua, to attend the inauguration of Mrs. Violeta Chomarro—the first democratically elected President in the history of Nicaragua. Mrs. Chamorro faces a daunting task in trying to rebuild the devastated economy of Nicaragua. I know that the U.S. Congress is sure to grant economic aid to Mrs. Chamorro. And I strongly support such aid.

But, Mr. President, if democracy is to survive in Nicaragua, in Panama, in Jamaica, and throughout the Caribbean region these countries cannot rely solely on the economic largess of American foreign aid. They must evolve functioning competitive economies that can provide goods and services for the world market.

I would also note that we are spending billions today to prevent the flow of illegal narcotics into this country. And nearly all of these drugs come through the Caribbean region. If we are going to be more successful in shifting economic incentives in the region away from narcotics, we must be more forthcoming in our willingness to open our market to a greater flow of products from the region.

Mr. President, I believe it will be quite a while before Congress gets another chance to expand the CBI initiative. And that is why I want to express my disappointment with the paucity of measures that we are willing to take to expand economic growth in the region. But I recognize that this is the best we can do at this time, and I will therefore cast my vote in support of this legislation.

MISCELLANEOUS AND TECHNICAL CHANGES TO VARIOUS TRADE LAWS

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the passage of this legislation is a major accomplishment. This act includes important changes to our trade laws that will allow them to be implemented more effectively and more fairly. Further, it enables Congress to continue to monitor our trade policies and programs closely.

This act addresses a wide variety of trade matters, including trade with non-market economies, the Caribbean Basin Initiative, budget authorizations for trade agencies, Customs user fees, and duty suspensions on numerous products. Passage of the act has required hard work and compromise. I believe our efforts will be rewarded by trade laws that work better and that promote U.S. economic interests.

I would like to highlight several of the most important aspects of the act. First of all, it contains amendments to correct constitutional defects in the 1974 Trade Act, which sets out special rules for the Soviet Union and other non-market economies that do not now receive most-favored-nation treatment under the law. These amendments provide for the use of joint resolutions when Congress approves or disapproves MFN status for nonmarket economies, and provide for congressional approval of agreements with these countries.

In addition, the act replaces 1-year budget authorizations with 2-year authorizations for the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative, the U.S. Customs Service, and the U.S International Trade Commission. This provision will allow the agencies greater predictability in shaping their budgets, and will encourage the long-range planning necessary for effective trade programs. At the same time, Congress will retain its ability to monitor the activities of these agencies closely through oversight hearings when specific questions or problems arise.

The act also repeals the 1995 termination date of the Caribbean Basin Initiative, thus making the program permanent. CBI, a package of economic assistance, trade benefits and incentives, is crucial for the economic development and political stability of Caribbean countries. Among other things, it allows for duty-free status to eligible imports from Caribbean and certain Central American countries and territories. The act passed by the Senate today promotes the goals of CBI by extending duty-free status to numerous articles and components not produced in the United States. Thus, it allows for freer trade, lower prices for U.S. manufacturers and consumers, and continued economic development in our neighboring Caribbean countries.

Finally, the act amends the current Customs merchandise processing fee in order to address the violations raised by a GATT panel in November 1987. By reducing the ad valoreum fee on entries of imported merchandise, and by framing it within maximum and minimum levels, the Customs user fee will continue to serve its purpose and will comply with GATT principles.

Again, I commend my colleagues for their efforts to create a trade bill that addresses important policy questions, and promotes the effective implementation of our trade laws and programs.

OFFERING DUTY-FREE ACCESS TO NON-CARIBBEAN BASIN COUNTRIES ON CERTAIN PRODUCTS

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, a significant portion of the bill pending before us, S. 1594, deals with improving the Caribbean Basin Initiative [CBI]. The economic and political stability of the Caribbean Basin is of vital interest to the United States. The Caribbean Basin Initiative was created to further the economic development of the region and foster its political stability. One of the chief incentives for economic development offered these countries through CBI is duty-free access to the United States on many agriculture and nonagriculture products.

The export of horticultural and tropical products to the United States is an important part of the Caribbean Basin countries' economies. While the exports of these products has increased since the enactment of the Caribbean Basin Initiative, future export activity is threatened by trade concessions that may be granted to competing beneficiary countries.

The administration is currently reviewing the feasibility of making available duty-free access on certain products to Bolivia, Peru, Colombia, and Ecuador in order to offer these drug-producing countries a legal export alternative—a goal I whole-heartedly support. Unfortunately, it is not possible to offer the benefits of duty-free access through the generalized system of preference to specific countries and not make the same tariff reductions available to all countries with which the United States has a most favored nation tariff agreement. As an example, if the United States reduces or removes the tariff on orange juice for the Andean Pact countries, there are approximately 50 other orange juice-producing nations that would be eligible for the same treatment.

The administration, therefore, is contemplating—with the best intentions—negating the incentives already provided by the CBI trade agreement and the economic incentive they intend to offer the Andean countries through GSP. Trade concessions made without fully realizing their potential impact can undo the economic progress that the CBI has set in motion.

Last week, the Senate accepted, and I supported, an amendment by Senator BIDEN which requires the President to report to Congress on the merits of extending the benefits available under the Caribbean Basin Initiative to the Andean region. It is my hope that the administration's report will include a careful review of the impact duty reductions or duty-free access will have on our current trade agreements, particularly with the Caribbean Basin, before making a decision.

H.R. 1594: U.S. CUSTOMS SERVICE PROVISIONS

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the legislation before us today, H.R. 1594, authorizes an almost $68 million increase for the U.S. Customs Service over the President's request for the next fiscal year. Included in this authorization is $143 million for the U.S. Customs Air Interdiction Program, its drug interdiction air force. The increased authorization, as the Finance Committee report states, represents a decision that the Customs Service should not bear funding cuts. In addition, by making a 2-year authorization, the committee has made clear Congress' intent to support Customs, despite past efforts by OMB to reduce Customs' funding.

S. 1594 also makes changes to the current law authorizing COBRA fees. The proposed change will allow Customs Commissioner Hallett to access the surplus in the COBRA fee account in order to hire full- and part-time personnel. This simple measure will be of great value to States with fast-growing populations and a large volume of visitors, like Florida. The sea and air ports of Florida are constantly in need of more Customs inspectors to handle the increases in passengers and cargo. In the past, Customs has had to reassign inspectors from one location to another in order to meet the demand. This did not solve the problems of understaffing, but merely temporarily forestalled it. It is our hope that the Commissioner will use her new legislative power to make quick personnel decisions and allocate new Customs inspectors to places that develop new personnel needs.

The Customs Service deserves Congress' support. They perform invaluable services, some glamorous—money laundering investigations and drug interdiction programs—and some routine—cargo and passenger inspections—but all are important. I recently had the opportunity to see all sides of a Customs' operation when I spent a day working with the Customs Service in Miami. My workday with Customs brought home to me the importance of supporting their efforts. It is with pleasure that I ask my colleagues to endorse the recommendation made in S. 1594 relative to the U.S. Customs Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment, in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1522

(Purpose: To strike provision amending the Mail Order Drug Paraphernalia Act)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an amendment be in order that will not require a vote. It has the effect of removing from the committee bill the provision inserted by the distinguished senior Senator from New York.

This is done with his very gracious acquiescence and the understanding that he will be offering this at another time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator could repeat his request?

Mr. WILSON. The request is for unanimous consent that an amendment be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator's request? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I have explained it. I will take no more of the Senate's time. This is an amendment that does a very simple thing.

I send the amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] proposes an amendment numbered 1522.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In section 4003 of the committee amendment, strike out subsection (b) and redesignate subsection (c) as subsection (b).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment (No. 1522) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee substitute will be so modified as to reflect that amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was orderd to be engrossed for a third reading, as was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX], would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced, yeas 92, nays 0, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 63 Leg.]

THE FUTURE OF TAIWAN

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks a thoughtful article by Dr. Trong R. Chai, entitled "Junk the One-China Policy," which appeared in the March 15, 1990, issue of the Christian Science Monitor, be printed in the RECORD.

I have long been concerned about the future of Taiwan but am gratified to see that time is at last producing its solution in terms of political and economic development. The recent election of a native Taiwanese as president followed by his call for a national conference on the future of Taiwan bodes well for continued progress.

For the past year the world's attention has been so focused on events in the People's Republic of China that the dramatic changes occurring in Taiwan have gone largely unnoticed. Dr. Chai's article reminds us of the changes in Taiwan: that Taiwan's per capita income is 15 times higher than mainland China's with a GNP greater than that of any U.N. member in the Middle East or Africa. In China political development has been frustrated by guns in Tiananmen Square but in Taiwan elections have resulted in major gains for the opposition. Let us hope that in the next few weeks as Taiwanese leaders meet to discuss their future we will see continued progress.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Mar. 15, 1990]

JUNK THE ONE-CHINA POLICY

(By Trong R. Chai)

On Feb. 28, 1972, President Nixon and Premier Zhou Enlai issued the Shanghai Communiqué, stating that "the United States acknowledges that all Chinese on either side of the Taiwan Strait maintain there is but one China and that Taiwan is a part of China."

This communiqué, the foundation for normalizing Sino-American relations, formulated the one-China policy for the solution of the Taiwan problem. Consistent with this policy, the US in 1979 established diplomatic relations with China and cut official ties with Taiwan.

The one-China policy is based on a number of assumptions which are no longer valid, for these reasons:

Peaceful solutions. The Taiwan Relations Act of 1979 states that "the US decision to establish diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China rests upon the expectation that the future of Taiwan will be determined by peaceful means."

The Tiananmen Square massacre of last June sharply diminishes this expectation. If the Chinese government responds to its people's demands for more democracy with machine guns and tanks, how can it be expected to settle the Taiwan problem peacefully?

Socioeconomic similarities. Two decades ago, Taiwan and China did not differ as they do now. Today, Taiwan's per capita income ($7,600) is 15 times higher than China's, and with 2 percent of China's population, it has a larger foreign trade. Educationally, Taiwan is second only to Japan in Asia, with the percentage of college graduates 10 times higher than in China.

Taiwan is fully capable of becoming a new nation independent of China. It has a population of 20 million—more than that of 130 United Nations members. Its gross national product exceeds $150 billion, larger than that of any UN member in the Middle East or Africa.

One-nation, two-systems. Recognizing the difference between itself and Taiwan, China pledged to use the formula of "One-nation, two-systems" if it annexed Taiwan. As with the 1984 Hong Kong agreement between Britain and China, this pledge would allow Taiwan to maintain its capitalist system. Will the Chinese keep this promise? The Basic Law of Hong Kong ratified by a committee in Beijing on Feb. 16 might provide an answer. This law would limit to 20 the number of elected seats in Hong Kong's 60-member legislature, leaving the majority to be manipulated by Beijing. The elected total would rise only to 30 by the year 2003.

The Taiwanese voice. Rapid economic development in Taiwan has created a huge middle class demanding greater political participation. The people on Taiwan long to shape their own destiny and will resist any attempt by a foreign power to usurp this right. Last year, 32 candidates from the Democratic Progressive Party formed the Coalition of New Nationhood and pledged to use peaceful means to pursue a policy of "a new nation, a new constitution, and a new congress." The coalition received broad support in last December's election.

American security concerns. Because of Mikhail Gorbachev's peace initiatives and his willingness to loosen Soviet control over East Europe, international tension will probably continue to diminish. As a result, the need for the US to cooperate with China to stop Soviet expansion will be lessened. Meanwhile, American allies in Southeast Asia want to see Taiwan free from China. By taking over Taiwan, China's submarines would pose a threat to peace and security in that region.

The one-China policy is out-dated. All assumptions behind it are either outmoded or unrealistic. The island not only differs from the mainland significantly but is also capable of becoming an independent nation.

The State Department has pledged to the Baltic republics to "firmly support their efforts for peaceful self-determination." Shouldn't the US be equally supportive of the Taiwanese struggle for independence?

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today is a day of solemn commemoration. April 24 is the day each year that commemorates the anniversary of the Armenian genocide of 1915-23. This year is the 75th anniversary of the dark period of history that witnessed the deaths of up to 1½ million Armenians massacred by the governments of the Ottoman Empire.

Mr. President, we should do all we can to ensure that the world never forgets.

In February, there was an attempt to bring Senate Joint Resolution 212 to the Senate floor. I was an original cosponsor of this joint resolution, which would have designated today, April 24, 1990, as a "National Day of Remembrance of the 75th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide of 1915-1923."

I am saddened that the motion to bring this joint resolution to the floor was blocked. It would be appropriate for the Senate to once again officially recognize what happened to the Armenian people during that period, as the Senate has done in the past.

Mr. President, on May 13, 1920, the Senate agreed to Senate Resolution 359, which began:

Whereas the testimony adduced at the hearings conducted by the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations have clearly established the truth of the reported massacres and other atrocities from which the Armenian people have suffered.

Mr. President, that resolution was adopted by the Senate in 1920, as the appalling events of the Armenian genocide were occurring. We must not allow the truth of these events to be denied now, nor must we allow the world to forget.

There is an overwhelming body of historical documentation and eyewitness accounts proving beyond a doubt the historical fact of the horrific events of the Armenian genocide.

Mr. President, this past Saturday and Sunday in Michigan I was honored to be present at commemorations of the Armenian genocide. Saturday evening I attended a moving event organized by the Greater Detroit 75th Commemoration Committee, and Sunday I attended a memorial service at Saint John's Armenian Apostolic Church in Detroit. At these events, I shared the experience of being in the presence of survivors of the Armenian genocide, eyewitnesses to history. As I have done on previous occasions, I met survivors, I saw their faces, I spoke with them, and I heard the terrible truth.

They bear witness to the awful stories confirmed by many, many contemporaneous eyewitness accounts. There is an overwhelming body of documented accounts of the systematic slaughter of Armenians, an intentionally systematic effort to eliminate the Armenians as a people. This was documented at the time by journalists, government officials, missionaries, and travelers from many countries.

Mr. President, Saturday and Sunday were emotional and memorable events. It was a tribute to the victims who suffered and perished, and it was an effort to ensure that the world never forget.

Elie Wiesel, a survivor of another genocide, stated in the rotunda of this Capitol Building in April of 1981, the following:

Before the planning of the final solution, Hitler asked who remembers the Armenians?

Elie Weisel went on to say:

He was right. Nobody remembered them as no one remembered the Jews. Rejected by everyone, they felt expelled from history.

Mr. President, Winston Churchill wrote in 1929 the following:

In 1915 the Turkish Government began and carried out the infamous general massacre and deportation of Armenians in Asia Minor . . . the clearance of the race from Asia Minor was about as complete as such an act, on a scale so great, could be. There is no reasonable doubt that this crime was planned and executed for political reasons.

Mr. President, the United States Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire, Henry Morgenthau, telegraphed the following message on July 16, 1915, to the Secretary of State:

Deportation of and excesses against peaceful Armenians is increasing and from harrowing reports of eyewitnesses it appears that a campaign of race extermination is in progress under a pretext of reprisal against rebellion.

Later, when Ambassador Morgenthau wrote a book about this experiences, he wrote:

When the Turkish authorities gave the orders for these deportations, they were merely giving the death warrant to a whole race; they understood this well and in their conversations with me, they made no particular attempt to conceal the fact.

I am confident that the whole history of the human race contains no such horrible episode as this. The great massacres and persecutions of the past seem almost insignificant when compared to the sufferings of the Armenian race in 1915.

But, Mr. President, mankind did not learn, did not comprehend, did not believe what happened to the Armenians. The world did not learn and remember then, and as a result, genocidal horror revisited our planet.

We must not allow that to happen again. That is why we must never forget.

DEFENSE ADVANCED RESEARCH PROJECTS AGENCY

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, not too many Americans have heard of "DARPA," the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency. And the Federal employee who heads it, Dr. Craig Fields, is not exactly a household word.

But the work of DARPA and Dr. Fields helps keep America competitive in the marketplace of the world. Until now. In a stunning version of the famed "Saturday Night Massacre"—this time it was a Friday afternoon—the Bush administration has booted Dr. Fields out of DARPA and into the Defense Department equivalent of Siberia. His sin? Failure to abide by the Adam Smith gospel, according to John Sununu and Richard Darman. They say Government should not help the private sector when it comes to research and development. Dr. Fields, and many of us who support him, believe Government must help the private sector research and develop high-technology products, lest we lose out to the economies of nations like Japan and Germany, whose governments recognize the value of funding R&D. Dr. Fields is the Johnny Appleseed of the high-technology frontier. His ability to see the potential of new technologies and direct funding to their development helps to insure a strong American presence in the economy of the future.

The Bush administration, in firing Dr. Fields, has written its own topsy-turvy version of the Peter Principle: Competent people will be fired at the precise moment when their talents are most in need.

Let there be no doubt about it—the firing of Dr. Fields is being celebrated in more places than the west wing of the White House. I would guess it is being celebrated in Bonn and Tokyo as well, where the counterparts to Dr. Fields in the governments of our competitors, must be rejoicing at the news.

With the collapse of communism changing the nature of our defense and economic needs, the challenge of our future lies in our ability to compete in the sophisticated global marketplace. For President Bush to fire Dr. Fields at this critical juncture is like President Roosevelt firing General Eisenhower on the eve of the Second World War.

Those responsible for Dr. Field's demise say the Government shouldn't be in the business of "picking winners and losers" in the marketplace. But we must use the power of government to invest in private sector initiatives that could yield huge dividends for our economy. We are in an age when the newest, most important discoveries enter production only after years of tremendously complicated research, involving scores of experts and millions of dollars.

The private sector will make many of these discoveries, but more will be made more quickly if government pitches in. We're on an economic playing field where the other side has government on the team. Without U.S. Government involvement in sophisticated R&D, we are not going to compete effectively.

I am all for the President picking his own men and women to help him run the Government. But this is one personnel decision that has too great an impact on America's economic strength to let slide by. Nothing less than America's competitive posture in the world marketplace is at stake. I urge the President to pick up the phone and make the call that can save Dr. Fields' job. I believe that that one call would be one of the most important things the President can do this year to help make our Nation and our economy more secure in the decade to come.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, a withdrawal, and a treaty which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations, withdrawal, and treaty received today were printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 3:09 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.J. Res. 553. Joint resolution to make technical changes in the Ethics Reform Act of 1989.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-2869. A communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, the 1988 annual report on the food and agricultural sciences; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

EC-2870. A communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to consolidate and expand the statutory authority for the National Agricultural Library in the Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

EC-2871. A communication from the Secretary of Defense, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled "Defense Management Improvement Act"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2872. A communication from the Acting General Counsel of the Department of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled the "Numismatic Public Enterprise Fund Act"; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EC-2873. A communication from the Assistant Secretary, Tax Policy, Department of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Financing Health and Long-Term Care"; to the Committee on Finance.

EC-2874. A communication from the Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs, U.S. Department of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report on terrorism-related assistance furnished to foreign countries by the United States Government; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC-2876. A communication from the Executive Director of the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation, transmitting a draft of a proposed amendment, to the President's FY 1991 Budget, to authorize the appropriated portion of the proposed program level for FY 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for FY 1992, to carry out the purposes of the Act; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-472. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Virginia; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

"SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION No. 91

"Whereas ensuring the protection of children is one of our most important responsibilities; and

"Whereas an estimated two million children ingest toxic household products each year; and

"Whereas in 1987, 100,000 children were rushed to the emergency room for accidental ingestions; and

"Whereas it is difficult to ensure that children will not ingest toxic household products that smell good and are brightly colored; and

"Whereas preventive measures, including heightened parental awareness, child-resistant packaging and manufacturer modifications, have significantly reduced, but not eliminated, the number of deaths due to accidental poisoning among children under five; and

"Whereas the National Safety Council found that the addition of the nontoxic substance denatonium benzoate makes products so unpalatable that children reject them; and

"Whereas the cost of bittering agents is inexpensive relative to the cost of the toxic product and the benefits to children; and

"Whereas the American Association of Poison Control Centers passed a resolution in July 1989 which encouraged manufacturers to "explore adding and appropriate nontoxic aversive product" to formulations, that are significantly toxic: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate, the House of Delegates concurring, That the General Assembly of Virginia memorializes the President and Congress of the United States to encourage American manufacturers to add a bittering agent to toxic household, automotive, and gardening products as a poisoning deterrent; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to members of the Virginia delegation to the Congress of the United States in order that they may be apprised of the sense of the General Assembly of Virginia."

POM-473. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Virginia; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works:

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION No. 116

"Whereas there has been a long history of beneficial cooperation between the federal, state, and local governments in meeting the challenges of creating an integrated surface transportation system which meets the needs of business, industry, and individual citizens; and

"Whereas in recent years the results of this fruitful partnership have been placed in jeopardy through declining federal financial assistance to the states for highway construction; and

"Whereas like most other states, Virginia is unable from its own limited resources to make up the revenue shortfalls resulting from shrinking federal participation; and

"Whereas the costs of the improvements needed to the interstate highway system in the Commonwealth over the next ten years exceed the federal and state investment of approximately $4.8 billion since 1956 in the construction of the system." Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate, the House of Delegates concurring, That the Congress is hereby memorialized to take the steps necessary to ensure that state and local governments continue as partners with the federal transportation community in the effort to provide all citizens with adequate and safe highways by reenacting the federal Surface Transportation Act; and, be it further

"Resolved, That the Congress in the development of the 1991 Reauthorization Bill provide sufficent funding for the states to undertake the modernization of the interstate highway system to meet the future traffic demands and serve the strategic defense purposes intended with its creation; and, be it further

"Resolved, That the Congress is memorialized, because of the severity of the immediate need in the Commonwealth for federal financial transportation assistance, that funds currently contained in the federal Highway Trust Fund and assigned to the Commonwealth be immediately released; and, be it finally

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the Senate of the United States, and the members of the Virginia delegation to the United States Congress that they may be apprised of the sense of the General Assembly in this matter."

POM-474. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"SENATE RESOLUTION No. 305

"Whereas the health and well-being of our communities are critical to the health and well-being of our people. One of the most important efforts to enhance community life and human welfare is the Community Development Block Grant Program, which has operated since 1974 to provide local and state government with the funds necessary to meet the needs of Michigan's communities. We applaud its good works; and

"Whereas Community Development Block grants have allowed communities to attack the problems of deteriorating neighborhoods to upgrade senior citizen housing, and to assist programs directed to helping young people. Numerous essential programs and organizations owe their lifeblood to its funds, as, conversely, do the people they serve; and

"Whereas in recognition of the fact that frequently their needs for assistance cannot be separated from the needs of the community, National Community Development Week has been designated by the Congress of the United States to highlight the need of communities and the people who live in them. If we are to thrive as a society, our communities must be attractive, economically viable, and able to meet the needs of every person for a decent standard of living in a pleasing environment. It is highly appropriate, therefore, for us to call attention to whatever problems blight our communities' welfare and work to enhance the quality of life for all community residents: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate, That April 7-14, 1990, be commemorated as Community Development Week in Michigan; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and the Michigan congressional delegation."

POM-475. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Indiana; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 62

"Whereas America is free because of her Armed Forces' veterans, and the citizenry of this country historically shown their gratitude to those valiant men and women of our armed services who have died while protecting our freedom; and

"Whereas the courage, the endurance of adversities, and physical and mental torturing by enemy captors, and the sacrifices made by America's brave service members must always be honored; and

"Whereas over 27,610 Hoosiers have given their lives for their country in World War I, World War II, the Korean Conflict, and the Viet Nam War, and over 685,000 United States Citizens have given their lives nationally during these hostilities; and

"Whereas there were over 8,500 service members left behind somewhere in North Korea—either as Prisoners of War or Missing in Action; and, the Vietnam War ended in 1973 and today there are still more than 2,300 POW/MIAs unaccounted for from that war; and,

"Whereas there are even civilian POWs who served in the Philippines who are not eligible for POW status; and,

"Whereas, Our service members and former prisoners of war, who have given their lives for this country, are laid to rest in places known and unknown throughout this country and around the world; and

"Whereas, Tribute must continue to be paid to those POWs who served the cause of freedom and lost their freedom—for they know the price of freedom is never free; and

"Whereas, To grant Manuel Noriega Prisoner of War status and the resultant benefits is a travesty and makes a mockery of the sacrifices of our Armed Forces members; and

"Whereas, The membership of the Indiana General Assembly should like to demonstrate its immortal support for the members of our Armed Services, especially the POWs and MIAs; Now, therefore be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, the Senate Concurring:

"SECTION 1. That the General Assembly of the State of Indiana urge the United States Department of Justice to reexamine its preliminary agreement with Manuel Noriega's attorneys and to deny the Prisoner of War status and any and all related entitlement to Manuel Noriega; and

"SEC. 2. That the General Assembly of the State of Indiana urge the United States Department of Justice to treat Mr. Noriega as a suspected criminal, in violation of U.S. Federal drug-trafficking charges; and

"SEC. 3. That the General Assembly of the State of Indiana also urge the U.S. Department of Justice to continue to work with the government of Panama to arrive at a waiver to any and all entitlements, benefits, or any type of remuneration, which might result from the granting of Prisoner of War status under the terms of the Geneva Convention of 1949, should that be determined; and

"SEC. 4. That the Clerks of the House of Representatives transmit copies of this Concurrent Resolution to the U.S. Department of Justice, the National Security Staff, the presiding officers and the majority and minority leaders of both houses of the Congress of the United States to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to the Indiana members of the U.S. Congress, and to M. Leonard E. Rose, National Director, American Ex-Prisoners of War."

POM-476. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Alaska; ordered to lie on the table:

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 41

"Whereas April 22, 1990, is the 20th anniversary of Earth Day; and

"Whereas Earth Day 1970 benefited all citizens of the state, the United States, and the world by celebrating the richness and complexity of life, and by calling attention to those systems of nature that sustain a fruitful and happy existence; and

"Whereas our greater awareness of human need for an abundant and healthy environment has shown the way for long-term economic prosperity and cultural well-being; and

"Whereas recognizing Earth Day in 1990 will confer similar benefits to the people of the state; and

"Whereas Alaska is dependent upon and receives great benefit from our clean air and water, our rich ecosystems, abundant natural resources, and great natural beauty; and

"Whereas this legislature wishes to recognize and encourage private citizen initiatives such as Earth Day; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Alaska State Legislature, That April 22, 1990, is declared Earth Day 1990; and be it further

"Resolved, That private citizens, businesses, government agencies, schools, civic groups, and others are encouraged to observe Earth Day 1990.

"Copies of this resolution shall be sent to the Honorable George Bush, President of the United States; the Honorable Dan Quayle, Vice-President of the United States and President of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Thomas S. Foley, Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives; and to the Honorable Ted Stevens and the Honorable Frank Murkowski, U.S. Senators, and the Honorable Don Young, U.S. Representative, members of the Alaska delegation in Congress."

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. WIRTH:

S. 2496. A bill to amend the Federal securities laws regarding securities registration and administration with respect to banks and savings institutions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

BANK SECURITIES REGISTRATION AND ADMINISTRATION ACT

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Bank Securities Registration and Administration Act of 1990. This legislation corrects an anomaly in our securities laws in order to provide additional protection to investors who purchase securities offered by individual banks and thrifts.

Under current law securities that are issued by a holding company, whether that is a bank or a thrift holding company, like securities offered by most businesses, must comply with Securities and Exchange Commission registration and reporting requirements. However, if a security is issued by an individual bank or thrift, or securities are guaranteed by a bank, they are exempt from SEC oversight, Jurisdiction over such securities is instead granted to the primary regulator—the Office of Thrift Supervision, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, or the Federal Reserve—for the institution issuing the security.

The purpose of this legislation, Mr. President, is to assure that these securities issued by an individual bank come under the same jurisdiction and the same registration and compliance requirements as any other security. A security is a security is a security. We ought to have this kind of consistent registration and consistent disclosure.

This idea was supported as well by the overall commission which was chaired by then Vice President Bush. I think it was a good idea then and I think it is a good idea now. It is one other piece that is necessary for overall compliance. This legislation would repeal the exemption to the registration requirements provided banks and thrifts by the Securities Act of 1933. It would also repeal a similar exemption to the periodic reporting requirements of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. With these changes, banks and thrifts would have to register their publicly offered securities with the SEC and file regular financial reports with the Commission. Importantly, deposit instruments of banks and thrifts, such as savings and checking accounts, or certificates of deposit, would not be subject to SEC supervision.

The Bank Securities Registration and Administration Act is designed to promote investor confidence and improve the effectiveness and efficiency of securities regulation. The proposal would protect investors by promoting full and fair disclosure of important financial information needed to make sound and informed business decisions. The SEC has well-established procedures for collecting, reviewing, and disseminating information provided by companies in their registration and periodic reporting filings. Investors are accustomed to using this resource to obtain basic accurate information about companies in which they might invest.

Because four different agencies establish these standards, investors in bank and thrift securities run the risk that the information they receive regarding their investment is inadequate or not directly comparable. This system results in investor confusion, duplication of regulatory efforts, and higher public and private costs than would be imposed by a simple system of functional regulation. I believe investors will be better served if the SEC reviews the offerings.

There is no need for bank and thrift regulators to maintain their own expertise in the area. This is an unnecessary duplication of Government resources. As the agency with the most expertise and experience in reviewing public securities offerings, the SEC already devotes significant resources to this task. Yet, under current law, bank and thrift regulators each must perform the duties the SEC performs for all other companies including bank and thrift holding companies. Securities oversight is, at best, a secondary concern of bank regulators but it is a key focus of SEC activity and expertise. For these reasons, the SEC is better equipped than bank and thrift regulators to perform these duties. We should give this task to the agency best able to do the job.

The legislation would also remove a possible conflict of interest in allowing bank regulators to oversee securities issues. It is conceivable that regulators would have an incentive to be less than vigilant in this area in order to help an institution raise capital. This type of relationship between regulators and insured institutions helped contribute to the S&L crisis. We should act to eliminate the possibility of a conflict.

Mr. President, this is an important change that we ought to make. The proposal has the strong support of the SEC and a similar plan was supported in 1984 by the Task Group on Regulation of Financial Services, chaired by then Vice President George Bush. The task group's recommendations were endorsed by a number of bank and thrift regulatory agencies, including the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and the Federal Reserve Board, as well as the National Credit Union Administration.

I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Banking Committee as we consider this issue and related matters concerning financial modernization.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2496

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Bank Securities Registration and Administration Act of 1990".

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO THE SECURITIES ACT OF 1933

SEC. 101. BANK-ISSUED SECURITIES.

Section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77c(a)(2) is amended—

(1) by striking "or any security issued or guaranteed by any bank;" and

(2) by striking "For purposes of this paragraph, a security issued or guaranteed by a bank shall not include any interest or participation in any collective trust fund maintained by a bank; and" and inserting "For purposes of this title,".

SEC. 102. SAVINGS ASSOCIATION-ISSUED SECURITIES.

Section 3(a)(5) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77c(a)(5)) is amended by striking paragraph (5) and inserting the following:

"(5) Any security issued by—

"(A) a farmer's cooperative organization exempt from tax under section 521 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986,

"(B) a corporation described in section 501(c)(16) of such Code and exempt from tax under section 501(a) of such Code, or

"(C) a corporation described in section 501(c)(2) of such Code which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) of such Code and is organized for the exclusive purpose of holding title to property, collecting income therefrom, and turning over the entire amount thereof, less expenses, to an organization or corporation described in subparagraph (A) or (B).".

SEC. 103. EXEMPTION FOR SECURITIES IN CERTAIN CORPORATE TRANSACTIONS.

Section 3(a)(9) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77c(a)(9)) is amended by striking paragraph (9) and inserting the following:

"(9) Except with respect to a security exchanged in a case under title 11, United States Code—

"(A) any security exchanged by the issuer with its existing security holders exclusively where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given directly or indirectly for soliciting such exchange; or

"(B) any security issued or exchanged in connection with a transaction solely involving exchanges or substitutions of securities as part of a reorganization of a corporation into a holding company, if (i) as part of the reorganization, the security holders exchange their securities of the corporation for securities of a newly formed holding company with no significant assets other than securities of the corporation and its existing subsidiaries, and receive securities of the same class evidencing the same proportional share or debt interests in the holding company as they held in the corporation prior to the transaction, except for changes resulting from lawful elimination of fractional interests and the exercise of dissenting shareholder rights under applicable law; (ii) the rights and interests of security holders in the holding company are substantially the same as those in the corporation prior to the transaction other than as may be required by law; and (iii) the holding company has substantially the same assets and liabilities as the corporation had prior to the transaction.".

SEC. 104. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN BANK AND SAVINGS ASSOCIATION INSTRUMENTS.

Section 3 of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77c) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d)(1) If any of the interest described in this paragraph is otherwise deemed to be a 'security' with the meaning of section 2, the provisions of this title shall apply only as hereinafter expressly provided to an interest in—

"(A) a deposit account, savings account, certificate of deposit, or other deposit instrument issued by a bank or savings association;

"(B) a share account issued by a savings association if such account is insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation;

"(C) a banker's acceptance,

"(D) a letter of credit issued by a bank or savings association; or

"(E) a debit account at a bank or savings association arising form a credit card or other similar arrangement.

This paragraph shall not apply to any participation in such an interest, account, certificate, instrument, acceptance, or letter other than a participation that is a direct obligation of a bank or savings association

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'deposit' means the unpaid balance of money or its equivalent received or held by a bank or savings association in the usual course of business, and

"(A) for which it has given or is obligated to give credit, either conditionally or unconditionally, to a commercial, checking, savings, time, or thrift account,

"(B) which is evidenced by its certificate of deposit, a check or draft drawn against a deposit account and certified by a bank or savings association, a letter of credit or a traveler's check, or by any other similar instrument on which a bank or savings association is liable,

"(C) which consists of nonpooled assets of individual trust funds received or held by a bank or savings association whether held in the trust department or deposited in any other department of such bank or savings association,

"(D) which is received or held by a bank or savings association for a special or specific noninvestment purpose, including, without being limited to, escrow funds, funds held as security for any obligation due to the bank or savings association or others (including funds held as dealers' reserves) or for securities loaned by the bank or savings association, funds deposited by a debtor to meet maturing subscriptions to United States Government securities, funds held for distribution or purchase of securities, funds held to meet its acceptances or letters of credit, and withheld taxes; or

"(E) any other account or instrument on which a bank or savings association is primarily liable as may be defined as a deposit by the Commission by rule or regulation after consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'savings association' shall have the meaning given in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.".

SEC. 105. ADDITIONAL COMMISSION EXEMPTIVE AUTHORITY.

Section 3 of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77c) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(e) The Commission, by rules or regulations upon its own motion, or by order upon application of an interested person, may conditionally or unconditionally exempt any person, security, or transaction, or any class or classes of persons, securities, or transactions, from section 5 of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, if and to the extent that such exemption is necessary or appropriate in the public interest and consistent with the protection of investors and the purposes fairly intended by the policy and provisions of this title. The Commission shall by rules and regulations determine the procedures under which an exemption under this subsection shall be granted, and may, in its sole discretion, decline to entertain any application for an order of exemption under this subsection. The Commission shall include in its annual report under section 23(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 a description of exemptions granted under this subsection.".

SEC. 106. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.

Section 12(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77*l*(2)) is amended by inserting "or subsection (d)" after "subsection (a)" within the parenthetical.

TITLE II—AMENDMENT TO THE SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934

SEC. 201. SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT ADMINISTRATION TRANSFER.

Section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78*l*) is amended by striking subsection (i).

TITLE III—AMENDMENT TO THE TRUST INDENTURE ACT OF 1939

SEC. 301. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.

Section 304(a)(4)(A) of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939 (15 U.S.C. 77ddd(a)(4)(A)) is amended by inserting "or by subsection 3(d)" after "subsection 3(a)".

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE BANK SECURITIES REGISTRATION AND ADMINISTRATION ACT OF 1990

Section 1. Short Title

This section contains the Act's short title, the "Bank Securities Registration and Administration Act of 1990."

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO THE SECURITIES ACT OF 1933

Section 101. Bank-Issued Securities

Sections 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 currently exempts from the registration, but not the antifraud, provision of the Act any security issued by any bank. Section 101 amends Section 3(a)(2) to delete the exemption for bank-issued securities.

Section 101 also amends Section 3(a)(2) to delete the exemption for bank-guaranteed securities. Section 3(a)(2) currently exempts securities guaranteed by a bank to the same extent as the bank's own securities. Although banks normally do not issue guarantees of securities issued by third parties, they often issue standby letters of credit backing these securities. The Securities and Exchange Commission has taken the position that, because bank standby letters of credit are "tantamount to guarantees by [a] bank," securities backed by bank letters of credit need not be registered. Section 101 removes the exemption for securities guaranteed by banks. This change is consistent with the Commission's recommendations set forth in the "Report by the United States Securities and Exchange Commission on the Financial Guarantee Market: The Use of the Exemption in Section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 for Securities Guaranteed by Banks and the Use of Insurance Policies to Guarantee Debt Securities" (Aug. 28, 1987).

Under Section 2(1) of the Securities Act, a bank's letter of credit guaranteeing a security is a separate security. Thus, the letter of credit itself must also be registered unless an exemption is available. Although Section 101 removes the exemption for securities issued by the bank, the letter of credit will continue to be exempt from registration under new Section 3(d) of the Securities Act, added by Section 104 of this Act.

Certain types of instruments that are subject to a comprehensive scheme of federal banking regulation designed to ensure financial soundness and protect depositors against the risk of insolvency, such as federally-insured deposit instruments, generally are not treated as securities under the Securities Act of 1933 and, therefore, are not currently subject to the registration, antifraud, and other provisions of the Act. See Marine Bank versus Weaver, 455 U.S. 551 (1982). These types of instruments will continue to be exempted from the registration and other provisions of the Act. Moreover, Section 104 adds a new subsection (d) to Section 3 of the Act, which replaces the Section 3(a)(2) exemption with a list of exempt deposit instruments and defines the term "deposit" for purposes of that subsection.

Section 101 also effects a technical amendment to Section 3(a)(2) by striking the clause "For the purposes of this paragraph, a security issued or guaranteed by a bank shall not include any interests or participation in any collective trust fund maintained by a bank; and". This clause is no longer necessary because section 101 removes the exemption for any "security issued or guaranteed by a bank." Section 101 does not, however, affect the exemption in Section 3(a)(2) for interests or participations in a bank collective trust fund issued in connection with certain employee benefit plans.

Section 102. Savings Association-Issued Securities

Section 3(a)(5) of the Securities Act of 1933 currently exempts securities issued by savings associations from the registration, but not the antifraud, provisions of the Act. Section 102 amends Section 3(a)(5) to eliminate the exemption from registration for securities issued by savings associations. However, Section 3(d) of the Securities Act, added by Section 104 of this Act, contains a list of exempt deposit instruments issued by saving associations.

Section 102 continues the current exemption from registration for securities issued by farmers' cooperatives exempt from tax under Section 521 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, corporations described in Section 5401(c)(16) and exempt from tax under section 501(a) of the Code, and corporations described in Section 501(c)(2) of the Code, exempt from tax under Section 501(a) of the Code, and organized solely to hold title to property, collect income from property, and turn over income from the property to one of the foregoing types of entities.

Section 103. Exemption for Securities in Certain Corporate Transactions

Section 3(a)(9) currently exempts from the registration (but not the antifraud) provisions of the Securities Act securities exchanged by an issuer with its existing security holders exclusively where no commission or other remuneration is paid or given for soliciting the exchange. Section 103 amends Section 3(a)(9) to add an exemption from the registration requirements of the Act for certain securities issued or exchanged in the context of a reorganization of a corporation, including a bank, into a holding company. The exemption generally requires that, as part of the reorganization, the security holders exchange their securities of the corporation for securities of a newly-founded holding company with no significant assets other than the securities of the corporation and its subsidies, and that the security holders generally receive securities representing the same proportional interest in the holding company as they held in the corporation before the transaction. The rights and interests of the security holders in the holding company also must be substantially the same as those in the corporation before the transaction, and the holding company must have substantially the same assets and liabilities as the corporation had before the transaction. Those conditions are intended to ensure that the exemption is not used to transfer corporate control or substantially alter the proportional interests of shareholders without complying with the disclosure provisions of the Securities Act.

Section 104. Treatment of Certain Bank and Saving Association Instruments

Section 104 adds a new subsection (d) to Section 3 of the Securities Act of 1933. Subsection (d) provides that if any interest in the instruments listed in paragraph (d)(1) is otherwise deemed to be a security under Section 2 of the Act, the Securities Act will apply to that interest only as expressly provided in the Act. This means that the instruments listed in subsection (d)(1) will be exempt from the registration provisions of the Act, but will continue to be subject to the antifraud provisions in Section 17 of the Act. The listed instruments are (1) a deposit account, savings account, certificate of deposit or other deposit instruments issued by a bank or savings association; (2) a share account issued by a savings association if the account is insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; and (5) a debit account at a bank or savings association arising from a credit care or similar arrangements. However, participations in those instruments (other than those that are direct obligations of a bank or savings association) are not exempted under subsection (d).

New paragraph (d)(2) defines the term "deposit" for purposes of subsection (d) to mean the unpaid balance of money or its equivalent received or held by a bank or savings association in the usual course of business (1) for which it has given, or is obligated to give credit to a commercial, checking, savings, time, or thrift account; (2) which is evidenced by its certificate of deposit, a check or draft drawn against a deposit account and certified by a bank or savings association, a letter of credit or travelers check, or by any other similar instruments on which the bank or savings association is liable; (3) which consists of non-pooled assets of individual trust funds received or held by a bank or savings association, whether held in the trust department or deposited in any other department of the bank or savings association; (4) which is received or held by a bank or savings association for a special or specific non investment purpose, including escrow funds, funds held as security for any obligation or for securities loaned by the bank or savings association, funds deposited by a debtor to meet maturing subscriptions to United States Government securities, funds held for distribution or purchase of securities, funds held to meet its acceptance or letters of credit, and withheld taxes.

For purposes of subsection (d) the term "deposit" also includes any other account or instrument on which a bank or savings association is primarily liable as may be defined by the Securities and Exchange Commission after consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision. This last provision will allow the Commission to accommodate the creation of new bank and thrift instruments with characteristics similar to that of the enumerated instruments. In addition, as discussed below, Section 105 adds a new Section 3(e) to the Securities Act, to provide the Commission with general authority to exempt any security or class of securities, including other instruments of banks or savings associations, from the Act's registration requirements.

For the purpose of subsection (d) the term "savings association" is defined to have the same meanings as in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Section 105. Additional Commission Exemptive Authority

Subsections 3(b) and 3(c) of the Securities Act of 1933 currently provide the Securities and Exchange Commission limited authority to exempt securities from the registration provisions of the Act. Subsection 3(b) permits an exemption when the Commission finds that enforcement of the Act with respect to the securities is not necessary in the public interest and for the protection of investors by reason of the small amount involved or the limited character of the public offering. Subsection 3(b) does not authorize an exemption when the aggregate amount of the securities issued exceeds $5 million.

Subsection 3(c) authorizes the Commission to exempt securities issued by small businesses investment companies under the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, if it finds that registration is not necessary in the public interest and for the protection of investors. However, unlike the Investment Company Act of 1940 and the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, the Securities Act does not contain a provision granting the Commission general exemptive authority from the provision of that Act. Section 105 adds new subsection 3(e) to the Act, which authorizes the Commission to exempt any person, security or transaction, or any class thereof, from registration (but not from antifraud) provisions of the Act, and the rules, and regulation promulgated thereunder, if and to the extent the exemption is necessary or appropriate in the public interest and consistent with the protection of investors and the purposes fairly intended by the policy and provisions of the Act. The Commission may exercise its authority under new Subsection 3(e) by promulgating rules and regulations or by issuing orders in response to application for exemption.

Section 105 also provides that the Commission shall by rules and regulation determine the procedures under which an exemption will be granted under new Subsection 3(e). This provision is intended to provide the Commission flexibility in establishing procedures that will expedite the application process without unnecessarily burdening the Commission or its staff. In addition Section 105 provides the Commission discretionary authority to decline to consider any application for an exemption under subsection 3(e). The Commission's determination not to consider any such application will not be subject to judicial review.

This expanded authority granted to the Commission is in addition to the current exemptions provided in Section 3 of the Act with respect to certain securities, and in Section 4 of the Act with respect to certain transactions, and the rules, regulations, and orders under those sections.

Section 106. Technical Amendment

Section 12 of the Securities Act of 1933 imposes certain civil liabilities on any person who offers or sells a security by means of prospectus or oral communication which contains an untrue statement of a material fact, or omits to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements not misleading, if the person knew or should have known of such untruth or omission. Section 12 currently exempts from the provision securities exempted by Section 3(a)(2) of the Act. Section 106 amends Section 12 by including within the exemption securities exempted under new section 3(d) of the Act.

TITLE II—AMENDMENT TO THE SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934

Section 201. Securities Exchange Act Administration Transfer

Section 12(i) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 imposes the responsibilities on each of the Federal banking agencies that regulate banks and savings associations to administer and enforce sections 12, 13, 14(a), 14(c), 14(d), 14(f), and 16 of the Act with respect to those institutions subject to its jurisdiction. Section 12 requires registration of securities traded on national securities exchanges or issued by certain issuers. Section 13 requires filing of periodic and other reports concerning these securities and their issuers and filing of disclosure statements by certain beneficial owners of those securities and by issuers that repurchase their securities. Section 14(a), (c), and (f) impose certain disclosure and other requirements concerning solicitation of proxies with respect to these securities. Section 14(d) imposes certain disclosure and other requirements with respect to tender offers. Finally, Section 16 requires filings with respect to certain acquisitions and sales of equity securities by officers, directors, and principal shareholders.

Section 108 repeals Section 12(i). The effect of this repeal is to transfer enforcement and administration of those provisions with respect to banks and saving associations from the Federal banking agencies to the Securities and Exchange Commission. The current division of responsibility for enforcement of the Act is inefficient. By centralizing regulatory responsibility in the agency with greatest expertise in the area, section 201 will help to ensure that investors in the securities of banks and savings associations receive the benefit of full and fair disclosure under the Act.

TITLE III—AMENDMENT TO THE TRUST INDENTURE ACT

Section 301. Technical Amendment

Section 301 is a technical amendment to section 304(a)(4)(A) of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939. Section 304(a)(4)(A) exempts from the Act's provisions certain securities exempted from the Securities Act of 1933 by Section 3(a) of the Securities Act. Section 104 conforms Section 304(a)(4)(A) to new section 3(d) of the Securities Act by including securities exempted by Section 3(d) within the Section 304(a)(4)(A) exemption.

By Mr. DECONCINI (for himself, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. KOHL, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. JOHNSTON, and Mr. DODD):

S. 2497. A bill to establish a demonstration program to allow drug-addicted mothers to reside in drug abuse treatment facilities with their children, and to offer such mothers new behavior and education skills which can help prevent substances abuse in subsequent generations; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS PROVIDING RESIDENTIAL TREATMENT FOR DRUG ADDICTED MOTHERS

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I do not have to remind anyone in this body of the devastating effect drugs are having on families in America today. One study estimates that drug abuse during pregnancy may affect as many as 375,000 infants born each year in the United States—375,000. This number doesn't even take into account the 40,000 babies born every year who suffer from fetal alcohol effects. One out of 10 of these babies suffers birth defects that are irreversible.

Today we are seeing a new population in hospitals across this country. I'm talking about "boarder babies"—infants who are medically ready to be discharged from the hospital but have no place to go. Many of these babies are born to drug-addicted mothers and abandoned at birth.

Ten years ago the boarder baby phenomenon did not exist in this country. Five years ago it did not exist. Today it exists with a vengeance. In a 1-day survey taken last year in five U.S. cities, nearly 70 percent of the 300 babies abandoned in hospitals were impaired by drugs—70 percent.

Mr. President, because of drugs, we are turning hospital pediatric units into orphanages. And the orphanages of old—where children were warehoused for years—these orphanages are now coming back. Mr. President, for the first time since the turn of the century, these orphanages are filling up—and all because of illegal drugs!

The stories of these children will break your heart. In one special shelter in California, some of the children have been in 15 foster homes by the age of 4. One small boy saw a double drug-related homicide in his home. Another 2-year-old was abandoned at a construction site and had to be taught how to hug.

This is a national tragedy. It's a tragedy compounded by a tragedy. I agree with David Liederman, executive director for the Child Welfare League of America. "The last thing we want to do in this country," he says, "is to start warehousing kids. That's why we began closing orphanages at the turn of the century. Infants and small children need families."

I will admit that the uncertainty of successfully treating drug-addicted parents has made reuniting some families difficult, even impossible. But hope does exist for rebuilding families affected by drugs. I want to focus on that hope. I want to maximize it. As Mr. Liederman says, infants and small children need families.

All the statistics tell us that drug use is on the rise—and it's on the increase for women of childbearing age. Despite recommendations of researchers over the past two decades, women and children have been the lowest priority in terms of delivered drug treatment services. Women are significantly underrepresented in alcoholism programs, for example, and they account for only 20 percent of those in treatment, according to the National Council on Alcoholism.

For low-income mothers, particularly single mothers, there is a major barrier to treatment. Since most residential programs do not allow clients to bring their children into treatment with them, a woman who needs help is often forced to choose between treatment and her kids.

It's a choice with the cards stacked against families. All too often, these mothers are reluctant to seek the treatment they need. Or they are forced to put their children into State foster homes at a time when the growing problems of drugs and AIDS have stretched family services to the breaking point.

The numbers are overwhelming. Right now it is estimated that 330,000 children live in foster homes. In the next 5 years, the number of troubled children coming into foster care is expected to increase by an incredible 150 percent—to 840,000 children. And this comes at a time when there is a severe shortage of people willing and able to provide foster care in the United States. The General Accounting Office is reporting that an average of 60 percent of the people who serve as foster parents quit providing care within 1 year.

Mr. President, today I am introducing, along with Senators D'AMATO, KOHL, MOYNIHAN, CHAFEE, GRAHAM, JOHNSTON, and DODD, legislation which would fund five demonstration projects in which addicted mothers in residential treatment would be allowed to have their children with them. These drug- and alcohol-treatment programs would target economically disadvantaged addicted women and their children and would offer child care, parenting and jobs skills, nutrition, and other health and education services as considered necessary. The idea is to maximize successful treatment, keep families together, and break the intergenerational cycle of addiction.

We are asking for $7 million to fund these projects for the first year. There are those who will say we're strapped for money. We can't afford it. It's just not possible. To these people, I would cite the old adage, "Penny-wise and pound-foolish."

I understand from D.C. General Hospital that the cost to maintain a boarder baby is anywhere from $800 to $1,000 a day. The care for one cocaine exposed baby is twice that amount—$2,000 a day. Sixty days of medical care for just one cocaine exposed baby adds up to $120,000. Now the Inspector General of Health and Human Services estimates that it will cost $5 billion to provide hospital and foster care until age 5 for all the crack-exposed babies born each year. And these figures don't include the cost for child abuse and neglect, welfare and incarceration—all problems associated with drug and alcohol addition.

Currently, there are only a handful of residential centers in the country that permit women to take their children with them into treatment. Pomeroy House, a residential treatment center for women alcoholics in San Francisco, is one. Part of Pomeroy's treatment focuses on teaching mothers basic facts about child development. Counselors often find they must also re-parent the mothers, some of whom became pregnant when they were only 13.

Many of the mothers at Pomeroy were physically abused as children by alcoholic parents. They continued the cycle of behavior and in turn became abusive parents themselves—with little or no skills for raising kids. One mother, age 36, was the abused child of alcoholic parents. She had abused her own children "exactly as her mother had abused her." In an act of self-defense, she had stabbed her child's father to death when he started to beat her. Her one chance of keeping her daughter depended on how well she did at Pomeroy House.

Pomeroy gave her new skills as a way out of a destructive pattern of behavior. She was forbidden to hit her child and encouraged to use verbal methods instead. It never occurred to her until she entered Pomeroy, she said, that there might be a more effective way of dealing with her own children.

Pomeroy empowers people to achieve a better quality of life. It's a treatment plan that has a high rate of success. Sixty percent of women who graduate are sober and drug-free 12 months after they leave, according to officials at the center.

We have hard data which indicate that mothers whose children reside with them during treatment for substance abuse consistently stay in treatment longer than women separated from their children, thereby increasing their chances of recovery. Amity, Inc. is a long-term residential treatment facility in my home town of Tucson, AZ. According to officials there, it is common for women enrolled in the Amity therapeutic community to have left their children in drug houses as collateral for drug trades, or even to have sold them for drugs.

Prior to August 1981 the Amity program had been traditionally male dominated. Changes were instigated that August, and a specialized women's program was put in place. As space allowed, women were allowed to bring their children into treatment with them. Mr. President, the results are impressive. Women whose children resided with them during drug treatment at Amity stayed in treatment longer than women separated from their children—506 days versus 182 days, on average.

We see similar results at Odyssey House in New York City. Seventy percent of the adult population there are parents. Sixty-eight percent are second or third generation substance-abusers. Mothers who are allowed to bring their children into treatment with them stay at Odyssey House twice as long as those without children. Twice as long.

Operation PAR is a comprehensive substance abuse treatment organization in the Tampa Bay area of Florida. It networks its program with available community services—the local health department, state protective services, local drug treatment systems. Operation PAR is innovative—and it takes a family approach to treating addiction.

Operation PAR has data which support the notion of a high early drop out rate among women in residential treatment facilities which do not address women's issues. In these facilities, 23 percent of the men left treatment within the first 60 days. In contrast, 63 percent of the women left within this same time frame. And the reason most women gave for leaving treatment? They needed to go home to take care of their children.

So Operation PAR constructed Par Village, a therapeutic community where mothers in treatment can reside with their children. The 14 homes—originally two- and three-bedroom houses located on a thoroughfare—were donated and moved by the county, which had originally planned to raze them at a cost of $375,000. It has been said, "There's always one moment in childhood, when the door opens and lets the future in." In the case of Operation PAR, the door is the door to drug-free communities and drug-free lives.

Fifty years ago Mother Hale, as she is known in Harlem, opened her doors to the first of more than 40 foster children she would come to care for over the next 28 years. In 1968, she was on the verge of retirement when she opened the door to a drug-addicted mother holding a two-month-old girl. "I had never seen a drug-addicted baby that I knew of," Mother Hale said in a 1989 interview. "I thought she would be different, but she was a beautiful baby. I didn't know her name or anything, and it was over 3 years before the mother ever came back."

Years later, the Hale House, as it came to be named, has provided a home for over 600 children of drug addicts. The mission remains the same: Caring for children while mothers go through rehabilitation programs.

A condition of Hale House's taking a baby is that the mother undergo drug treatment. The success of the Hale House program relies on returning the children to their families. The mission of the legislation we are introducing today is similar: break the cycle of addiction and destructive behavior, rebuild families and shattered lives. Mr. President, let us seize the opportunity. After all, "there is always one moment in childhood when the door opens and lets the future in."

That precisely is the purpose of our bill—to let the future in for those whose lives have been shattered by drugs. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of our legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2497

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress asembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) research studies strongly suggest that the incidence of drug abuse among women in general and women of childbearing age in this country is increasing;

(2) drug-abusing women who have children traditionally experience significant barriers to drug abuse treatment because most residential drug abuse treatment programs do not accommodate the children of such women;

(3) many women with children are either reluctant to seek the drug abuse treatment they need or are forced to put their children in State foster homes at a time when there is a severe shortage of people willing and able to provide foster care in the United States;

(4) for the first time since the turn of the twentieth century, orphanages are filling up primarily because of the growing drug problem; and

(5) there is mounting evidence that women whose children reside with them during treatment for drug abuse consistently stay in treatment longer than women separated from their children, thereby increasing the chances of recovery for women whose children reside with them during drug abuse treatment.

SEC. 2. STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this Act to attempt to rebuild economically disadvantaged drug-affected families by—

(1) reducing the barriers to successful drug abuse treatment for economically disadvantaged high-risk mothers by allowing such mothers to bring their children into residential drug abuse treatment programs with them, and

(2) teaching such mothers new behavior and employment skills which can help to break the cycle of drug addiction in the next generation.

SEC. 3. PROJECT ESTABLISHED.

Part A of the title V is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 445G. MODEL RESIDENTIAL PROJECTS FOR ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSING WOMEN AND THEIR CHILDREN.

"(a) PROJECT AUTHORIZED.—(1) The Secretary, through the Director of the Office, shall make grants to establish not less than 5 projects in which addicted mothers in residential drug abuse treatment facilities are allowed to have their children reside with them during the course of such treatment. Such residential drug abuse treatment and prevention projects shall target economically disadvantaged addicted women and their children (age 10 years and younger) and shall offer child care, parenting and jobs skills, nutrition, and other health, social, education, and employment services as necessary.

"(2) The Secretary, through the Director of the Office, shall only award grants under this section for projects which will be operated for a period of at least 3 years.

"(b) APPLICATION.—Each entity desiring a grant under this section shall submit an application to the Director of the Office at such time, in such manner and accompanied by such information as the Director of the Office may reasonably require. Each such applicant shall include assurances that the mothers selected for participation in such project have been evaluated to ensure that such mothers are committed to remaining in drug abuse treatment and prevention projects assisted under this section.

"(c) EVALUATION.—The Director of the Office shall conduct evaluations to determine the effectiveness of the projects assisted under this section.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated $7,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for each fiscal year thereafter to carry out the provisions of this section.".

S. 2498. A bill to authorize a certificate of documentation for the vessel Sea Devil; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

DOCUMENTATION OF VESSEL "SEA DEVIL"

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation which would provide for the necessary documentation for the vessel Sea Devil. This vessel is owned by William A. Gardner, president of Gardner Boat Repair, Inc., of Seattle, WA. Mr. Gardner purchased an ex-Navy Y.T.B. tug from Crowley Maritime, official number 569316. The vessel was built in Brooklyn, NY, in 1943.

The vessel was sold by the Defense Property disposal office in 1974 to Crowley Maritime Corp. In 1988, the vessel was transferred to Crowley Maritime International, S.A., a Panamanian corporation. This transaction was done so that if the vessel ever wanted to return into U.S. documentation, it would not be able to compete with Crowley in the towing industry in U.S. waters.

The vessel has been stripped of equipment used in towing operations. Mr. Gardner would like to use the vessel as a salmon tender. The vessel will require substantial conversion work before it is ready to operate in the fisheries.●

S. 2499. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to limit the amount of funds held by fiduciaries of incompetent veterans subject to inheritance by nondependent heirs; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS NONDEPENDENT HEIRS INHERITANCE LIMITATION ACT

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I have today introduced, by request, S. 2499, the proposed Veterans' Nondependent Heirs Inheritance Limitation Act of 1990. The Secretary of Veterans Affairs submitted this legislation by letter dated April 20, 1990, to the President of the Senate.

My introduction of this measure is in keeping with the policy which I have adopted of generally introducing—so that there will be specific bills to which my colleagues and others may direct their attention and comments—all administration-proposed draft legislation referred to the Veterans' Affairs Committee. Thus, I reserve the right to support or oppose the provisions of, as well as any amendment to, this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point, together with the April 20, 1990, transmittal letter.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2499

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Nondependent Heirs Inheritance Limitation Act of 1990."

SEC. 2. Chapter 55 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 3205. Estates of incompetent veterans

"(a) For purposes of this section, the term 'veteran's estate' shall mean the market value, less mortgage and other encumbrances, of all real and personal property owned by the veteran, with the exception of the veteran's principal residence and personal effects suitable to and consistent with the veteran's reasonable mode of life.

"(b)(1) In any case in which a veteran having neither spouse, child, nor dependent parent:

"(A) is receiving payments of compensation under chapter 11 of this title;

"(B) is rated by the Department of Veterans Affairs in accordance with applicable regulations as being incompetent; and

"(C) the veteran's estate from any source equals or exceeds $25,000; further payments of compensation shall not be made until the estate is reduced to $10,000.

"(2) Any amount which would be payable but for this section shall be paid to the veteran in a lump sum after the expiration of six months following a rating of competence, but no amount shall be payable in the event of the veteran's death or resumed rating of incompetency prior to the date such lump sum shall be payable.".

SEC. 3. The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 55 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"3205. Estates of incompetent veterans".

THE SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, April 20, 1990.

HON. DAN QUAYLE,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is transmitted herewith a draft bill "To amend title 38, United States Code, to limit the amount of funds held by fiduciaries of incompetent veterans subject to inheritance by nondependent heirs," with the request that it be referred to the appropriate committee for prompt consideration and enactment.

This draft bill would limit the amount of accumulated veterans' disability compensation payments which could be inherited by nondependent heirs of incompetent veterans by providing that whenever the estate of such a veteran without dependents exceeds $25,000, no further payments of compensation would be made until the estate is reduced to $10,000. Section 2 of the proposal would create a new section 3205 in title 38, United States Code, and defines "veteran's estate" for purposes of this new section. Section 2 would apply the $25,000/$10,000 limitation in any case where the incompetent veteran has neither spouse, child, nor dependent parent. It also would provide for payment to the veteran of any benefits withheld, should he/she be rated competent for six consecutive months. Section 3 amends the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 55 of title 38, United States Code, to add the new section.

Under current law, the amount of funds derived from VA benefits which may accumulate in the estate of an incompetent veteran without dependents is virtually unrestricted, except during periods when the veteran is institutionalized at government expense. During such periods of institutionalization, benefit payments are stopped under 38 U.S.C. § 3203(b)(1)(A) if the veteran's estate exceeds $1,500. (We are separately proposing that the $1,500 limit under that section be increased to $4,500 in acknowledgment that even these veterans may legitimately require assets in that amount.) There is also no restriction on who may inherit such funds upon the veteran's death. Inheritance of funds accumulated in veterans' estates is subject to the laws of the various states and territories of the United States. While these laws vary as to the specific classes of relatives to inherit when a person dies intestate, all permit inheritance by nondependent heirs. Only in the absence of any heir recognized by state law do funds held by an incompetent veteran's fiduciary derived from VA benefits (which would otherwise escheat to the state) revert to the Federal Government, in accordance with 38 U.S.C. § 3202(e). In practice, very little is actually recovered under this section.

In contrast to funds administered by fiduciaries, gratuitous VA benefits of incompetent veterans held in VA-administered personal funds of patients trust accounts are not subject to state inheritance laws. Personal funds of patients accounts contain funds held in trust for patients in VA medical facilities and certain other institutions. Upon the death of an incompetent veteran, VA benefits deposited in the personal funds of patients trust account are paid only to the surviving spouse, children (regardless of age or marital status), or dependent parents of the veteran, in accordance with 38 U.S.C. § 3202(d). This proposal would limit the amount of funds held by fiduciaries which could be inherited by individuals other than those who may receive payments under section 3202(d) and by nondependent children.

In a September 1980 letter, the then Chairman of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs requested an audit by the Comptroller General of the United States to determine the extent that incompetent veterans' estates held by fiduciaries would pass to nondependent heirs. This letter stated that:

"[C]ongress intended that distant relatives should not be enriched through benefits intended for veterans or their immediate families. However, large estates consisting of VA benefits are evidently still enriching distant relatives who may have had very little to do with the veteran and were not affected by his service to the United States."

The General Accounting Office (GAO), in responding to this request, found that an estimated $541 million in VA-derived funds in incompetent veterans' estates would be inherited by heirs other than spouses, children, or dependent parents (GAO Report HRD–82–1, February 10, 1982). GAO recommended that Congress enact legislation to further limit inheritance of VA-derived funds from the estates of incompetent veterans. The Chairman of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs introduced such legislation in March 1982, but it was not enacted into law.

In 1987, VA's Office of Inspector General (OIG) completed an audit of estates maintained for incompetent veterans. The audit focused on the 14,800 incompetent veterans without dependents then receiving VA compensation for total disability. OIG analyzed a statistical sample of 968 such veterans and estimated that some $648 million in assets derived from VA compensation benefits had accumulated in the hands of fiduciaries. At the time of the veterans' deaths, these funds would be distributed under the laws of the various states and territories which permit inheritance by nondependent heirs. The audit found many examples of veterans' estates inherited by distant relatives, some of whom had little or no contact with the veteran. Some resided in foreign countries and had never even met the veteran.

For example, a veteran of World War II, rated incompetent since 1950, expired in April 1986 and left an estate totalling $185,600, of which $177,600 was derived from VA benefits. This estate was disbursed among cousins of the veteran, and nieces and nephews of another cousin who predeceased the veteran. Another incompetent World War II veteran died in November 1983, leaving an estate of $81,400 derived solely from VA benefits. In April 1986, a final judgment from a probate court awarded $31,310 in administrative and legal fees to the attorneys and guardian of the estate. The remaining funds were divided between the daughter of a deceased cousin of the veteran and the estate of another deceased cousin.

In another case, an incompetent veteran of World War I, who immigrated to the United States from Lithuania in 1907, died in 1978 leaving an estate of $87,900, including $77,800 in VA benefits. Because VA personnel were unaware that the veteran had any living relatives, a claim was filed to have the estate revert to the Federal Government. However, the claim was withdrawn in 1983 when it was found that the veteran had six nephews and nieces living in the Soviet Union. The estate was distributed among these relatives. Another incompetent veteran, who immigrated to the United States from Italy, expired in 1977 and left an estate of $47,300. Since the veteran had no known relatives, VA filed a claim to have the estate revert to the Federal Government. The probate court having jurisdiction ordered the estate turned over to VA. However, in 1981, assets from the estate were disbursed by VA to 17 relatives who were found to be living in Italy and Germany.

We estimate that, if this proposal is enacted in its present form, the following savings will be realized by the Government over the next five years in the form of reduced disability-compensation payments:

[In thousands]

Fiscal year:	Savings
1991	$170,664
1992	175,554
1993	180,031
1994	184,025
1995	187,685

These figures were arrived at by calculating, from a sampling of all incompetent veterans without dependents who were receiving total disability compensation payments, the percentage whose estates exceeded $25,000 and the average amount of payments being received by each. From this sample, the annual savings over each of the next five fiscal years was projected for the entire statistical universe of such veterans. As the proposal would also apply to the estates of incompetent veterans who receive compensation payments for less than total disability, there may be some additional savings from these cases.

The costs associated with implementing and administering the proposal would be as follows:

[In thousands]

Fiscal year:	Costs
1991	$4,159
1992	1,754
1993	1,777
1994	1,789
1995	1,810

These figures include the costs of salaries for additional personnel and travel, and, for the first year, the additional costs for data processing development and the training of new and current personnel.

This proposal would not diminish the amount of money used for the care and maintenance of incompetent veterans, and would result in a significant savings to the taxpayer. Payments to fiduciaries terminated under the provision of this draft bill would be resumed when the size of the estate fell below $10,000. Loss of home or possessions would be avoided by the exception of residence and personal effects from the estate limit. There would be no adverse impact on the day-to-day life of the veteran, only on the size of the estate under the fiduciary's control. We strongly urge enactment of this legislation, which reduces the likelihood of inheritance of large estates (comprised of benefit payments to incompetent veterans) by nondependent heirs.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this legislative proposal to the Congress and that its enactment would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD J. DERWINSKI.

S. 2500. A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to control billboard advertising adjacent to interstate Federal-aid primary highways, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

VISUAL POLLUTION CONTROL ACT

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Visual Pollution Control Act of 1990. Joining me in introducing this legislation are Senators BENTSEN, HATFIELD, JEFFORDS, PELL, WILSON, MOYNIHAN and WIRTH.

Senator MATSUNAGA was the first Senator who agreed to cosponsor this legislation, and I regret that this legislation, was not introduced before his death. Hawaii banned billboards many years ago and it was Senator MATSUNAGA, then in private law practice, who drafted the bill that became law and is still the law today in Hawaii. Along with Senator MATSUNAGA's many other accomplishments, he deserves much credit for the preservation of Hawaii's spectacular landscape.

Mr. President, during the last few years, there has been an explosion of activity at the local level regarding billboards. Communities know they have to clean up their landscape in order to attract jobs and a work force to stimulate their local economy. And they have found that one of the worst blights on their landscape is billboards.

Over 500 communities have now passed billboard moratoriums or tough billboard control laws. But after they passed their moratoriums and moved to take down nonconforming billboards through amortization, cities came up against an unexpected barrier: the Federal Highway Beautification Act of 1965. They discovered that they could remove the billboards through their local police powers providing for an amortization period, but that if this was done on an interstate or primary highway, it would result in the State losing percent of its highway funds.

In further examining the status of billboards, States and localities have found that sign companies benefit from State property tax formulas that undervalue billboards. And they found that many billboards are not even listed on local property tax rolls. An investigation in the State of North Carolina found illegal billboards, 500 of which still stood years after their permits had been revoked; zoning violations; and an inconsistent property tax valulation system. At the same time, localities are amazed at how the value of billboards change for cash compensation purposes versus tax purposes.

For example, Houston has been unable to undertake work on I-610 because Texas has refused to buy a billboard which is in the way. The sign is valued at $19,042 by the State, at $288,000 by the company which owns it, and is on the property tax rolls at $10,580.

So communities have discovered that billboards pay no highway user fees even though their value is derived solely from the public highway; that billboards pay little to no property taxes; and that billboards are suddenly worth a fortune if they are removed with cash compensation.

Many cities are doing something about this. They are taking actions to clean up their environment to help their economies. They are putting into place moratoriums on new billboards and regulating those off the interstate and primary highways. They are addressing the issue of property tax formulas that undervalue billboards and making sure that all billboards are on the tax rolls. Now it is time for the Federal Government to make changes which will further these communities' goals, not impede them.

The Highway Beautification Act of 1965, despite its good intentions, has not lived up to its expectations. It is badly in need of reform if it is to carry out its original purpose. The final, fatal blow to the act came in 1978 when Federal legislation supported by the billboard industry made it impossible for State and local governments to use their constitutional police power to regulate nonconforming billboards.

The Visual Pollution Control Act 1990, which I am introducing today, addresses the biggest problem with the current act by returning control over existing billboards to States and localities where it belongs. States and localities have always regulated and removed billboards, and other nonconforming uses, through land use laws derived from their constitutional police power. This authority has been repeatedly upheld by Federal and State courts.

In 1978 the federally imposed requirement for cash compensation as a Federal-aid highway grant condition stymied billboard removal efforts by hundreds of localities. Congress has required cash payments, and has promised to pay 75 percent of the cost, but for many years has provided no money to pay cash. This special treatment of the billboard industry would cost taxpayers over $1 billion.

This bill will permit States and localities to make the decision. They can provide cash compensation, remove nonconforming billboards through the use of amortization, or choose to leaving existing nonconforming billboards standing with no threat of a Federal penalty.

Second, the legislation provides for a moratorium on new billboards along interstate and primary highways. The original intent of a Highway Beautification Act was to reduce the number of billboards along the interstate and primary system, and particularly to maintain the scenic beauty along the Interstate System which was just beginning to be built at that time. Unfortunately, subsequent amendments and changes in interpretation created loopholes which permitted a growing number of billboards along these highways. Along with the moratorium, States and localities are asked to update an accurate inventory of a billboards. It is important to know what is there in order to provide effective regulation.

This bill also addresses another problem highlighted by a 1985 GAO report, "The Outdoor Advertising Control Program Needs To Be Reassessed." It prohibits the cutting of trees and vegetation along interstate and primary highway rights-of-way solely to make billboards visible. Many States do extensive landscaping along interstate and primary highways. Valuable trees and vegetation—paid for with taxpayer dollars—have been cut solely for the purpose of making billboards more visible.

Billboards have a tremendous impact on neighborhoods. Therefore, neighborhoods should have a say about regulating those billboards. Billboards have an impact on the property values of a neighborhood. It is no accident that affluent neighborhoods have stringent controls.

Billboards have an impact on the business economy of a community. Many cities rely heavily on natural beauty and visual quality to attract businesses and tourists. Four of the most tourist dependent States in the country, Alaska, Hawaii, Maine, and Vermont have all banned billboards. Most of America's premier vacation resorts ban billboards or strictly control signs. Businesses have made it very clear that they and their employees do not want to locate in an area where the landscape is littered with billboards.

Billboards are a public health issue. The two leading users of billboards are tobacco and alcohol products. At a time when we are doing everything we can to combat drunk driving, it is ironic that billboards are allowed to advertise drinking to drivers on the highway. We do not permit tobacco advertisements on TV where young children might be exposed to these ads. Yet we permit them on billboards which can not be turned off to avoid young, impressionable eyes.

Billboards are being put up next to schools, churches, national, State, and local parks, historic sites, homes, hospitals, cemeteries, and playgrounds. It is unlikely that billboards will be entirely eliminated from the landscape, but there are many places where they are just inappropriate. Those communities who want to do something about it should be able to.

Billboards claim to provide information to motorists. In fact, they provide very little information to the motoring public. Most billboard advertising is product related. And in many areas billboards have gotten so dense that motorists have difficulty picking out any information. In a recent poll done in my State of Rhode Island, the overwhelming response of voters was that they received very little or no information from billboards. Respondents indicated they received most of their information from newspapers or television.

There are many options available for providing information to the public, including logo signs, the uniform business signs located in the highway right-of-way which Maine uses, tour guides, on-premise signs, and information in tourists centers or at highway rest areas. With the emergence of intelligent vehicle systems or smart cars a whole new array of information technologies will be available.

Mr. President, it is either time to provide the States and localities with sufficient Federal funds to meet our obligation under the Highway Beautification Act in order to provide for cash compensation to remove billboards, or it is time to return to the States and localities their constitutional right to regulate nonconforming billboards through amortization. I urge my colleagues to join with us in supporting the Visual Pollution Control Act of 1990.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following items be printed in the RECORD following my statement:

S. 2500

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Visual Pollution Control Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 131 of Title 23, United States Code, is amended as follows—

(1) in subsection (b)

(A) by striking "shall be reduced" and isnerting in lieu thereof "may be reduced"; and

(B) by striking the words "equal to 10" in the second to last sentence, by inserting in lieu thereof "up to 5", and by striking the last sentence;

(2) in subsection (c)

(A) by striking "(c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(c)(1)" and redesignating clauses 1 through 5 as clauses A through E;

(B) by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraphs—

"(2) As part of effective control, each State shall maintain an annual inventory of all outdoor advertising signs, displays, and devices required to be controlled pursuant to this section. Such inventory shall identify all such signs as either illegal, nonconforming, or conforming under State law.

"(3) As part of effective control each State shall assure that signs, displays, and devices required to be removed by this section shall be removed within ninety days of (A) the date upon which they become unlawful or if not unlawful the date upon which they must be removed pursuant to State or local law, or (B), if eligible to receive cash compensation pursuant to this section or to be amortized, the date upon which cash compensation is paid, or the State or local amortization period ends.

"(4) As part of effective control, no State may allow or undertake any vegetation removal or other alteration of the highway right-of-way with the purpose of improving the visibility of any outdoor advertising sign, display or device located outside of the right-of-way.

"(5) As part of effective control, no State may permit any person to modify any outdoor advertising sign, display, or device which does not conform to subsection (c) or (d) of this section to improve its visibility or to prolong its useful life.

(3) in subsection (d), by inserting in lieu thereof "(d)(1)", and by adding at the end of the subsection the following:

"(2) after October 1, 1990, no new signs, displays or devices may be erected under the authority of this subsection. Any sign, display or device lawfully erected under State law after October 1, 1990, and prior to the effective date of this section shall be treated as nonconforming.";

(4) in subsection (e) by amending subsection (e) as follows:

"(e) The Secretary shall not require a State to remove any lawfully erected sign, display, or device which does not conform to this section and is lawfully in existance on the date which this section becomes effective. Nothing in this subsection shall prevent a State from removing any sign, display or device.";

(5) in subsection (g) by amending subsection (g) to read as follows:

"(g)(1) The Secretary may participate in the costs incurred by the State for the following:

"(a) physically removing signs, displays, or devices that are located in areas required to be effectively controlled by this section and are illegal under State law or that are required by this section to be removed and that were lawfuly erected and have been lawfully maintained under State law.

"(b) acquiring signs, displays, or devices that are required by this section to be removed and that were lawfully erected and have been lawfully maintained under State law.

"(2) Payments made to a State by the Secretary may be made for the removal or acquisition of signs, displays, or devices located in areas adjacent to the Federal-aid primary system and the Interstate System from funds apportioned to such State under section 104(b)(1) and 104(b)(5) of this title. For the removal or acquisition of signs, displays, or devices, the Federal share of any costs participated in under this subsection shall not exceed that set forth in section 120(a) for those adjacent to the Federal-aid primary system and that set forth in section 120(c) for those adjacent to the Interstate System.

"(3) After September 30, 1990, a State may use to carry out this section in any fiscal year not to exceed three percent of funds apportioned in such fiscal year to such State for the Federal-aid Interstate and Primary System.

"(4) A signs, displays, or device acquired with funds made available pursuant to this section may be disposed of by sale or other means to a private party only if the State receives satisfactory written assurances that the material will not be used to construct or reconstruct an outdoor advertising sign, display, or device";

(6) in subsection (h) by striking "(h)", by inserting in lieu thereof "(h)(1)", and by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) No outdoor advertising sign, display, or device shall be permitted by any Federal agency on all public lands or reservations, excluding Indian lands and reservations, owned or controlled by the United States, unless such sign, display or device conforms to regulations issued by the Federal agency with jurisdiction over, or responsibility for, such land. Such regulations shall be at least as stringent as the requirements of this section and the requirements of the State in which the land is located. The regulations required by this subsection shall be developed in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation and shall be promulgated within 12 months of the effective date of this Act.";

(7) in subsection (k) by striking the words "Subject to compliance with subsection (g) of this section for the payments of just compensation nothing" and inserting in place thereof the word "Nothing".; and

(8) by repealing subsections (n) and (p).

(b) On a date no later than one year form the date of enactment of this Act, the Department of Transportation shall promulgate national regulations to implement all sections of this Act.

(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective upon the date of enactment of this Act Provided, That any amendment which a State cannot implement without legislation shall be effective upon the date of enactment of this Act or the end of the first regular legislative session in such State which is commenced after the date of enactment of this section, whichever is later.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE VISUAL POLLUTION CONTROL ACT OF 1990

Section 1 is the short title of the bill.

Section 2 amends section 131 of title 23 as follows:

(a)(1) amends section 131(b) by making the penalty sanction discretionary rather than mandatory and reduces it from 10 percent to a maximum of 5 percent.

(a)(2) creates four new subsections as follows: New subsection 131(c)(2) requires that each State has an accurate inventory of billboards along Interstate and Primary highways. The inventory must promptly identify unlawful signs for removal, and identify each sign as either illegal, nonconforming, or conforming under State law.

New section 131(c)(3) requires States to remove signs (A) within ninety days after the State law allows their removal, or (B) if eligible for compensation or allowed to remain for a period of amortization, the date on which cash compensation is paid, or the amortization period ends.

New subsection 131(c)(4) requires as part of effective control that the States do not undertake or allow any vegetation clearance or alteration of the highway right-of-way for the purpose of improving visibility of outdoor advertising signs outside the right-of-way.

New subsection 131(c)(5) requires the States to prohibit any modification of nonconforming signs that would end the useful life of such a sign or improve its visibility.

(a)(3) creates new subsection 131(d)(2) which requires that after October 1, 1990, no new signs, displays and devices may be erected in the zoned and unzoned industrial and commercial areas subject to control by agreement under section 131(d)(1). Any signs lawfully erected under State law after that date shall be treated as nonconforming.

(a)(4) amends section 131(e) and permits States to remove nonconforming signs but does not require them to do so.

(a)(5) creates new subsection 131(g)(1) which provides that federal funds may be used to reimburse costs incurred by the State (a) for physically removing illegal signs, displays or devices, and for signs required by this section to be removed although they were lawfully erected and maintained under State law, and (B) for acquiring signs, displays and devices required by this section to be removed and that were lawfully erected and have been lawfully maintained under State law. This subsection authorizes participation of Federal funds in the costs of removing illegal and other prohibited signs and permits participation in costs of sign acquisition.

New subsection 131(g)(2) provides that the source of funding for the payments authorized by 131(g)(1) is section 104(b)(1) and (b)(5) of this chapter. This would allow States to use their Federal-aid Interstate and Primary highway funds, subject to the limitations imposed by sections 120(a) and 120(c), in addition to funds appropriated under section 131.

New subsection 131(g)(3) permits States to use up to three percent each year of their Federal-aid Interstate and Primary apportionments to carry out this section.

New subsection 131(g)(4) limits the use of salvage material from signs removed with cash compensation to prevent re-erection.

(a)(6) amends section 131(h) by clarifying the responsibility for control of outdoor advertising in accordance with this section on all public lands or reservations owned or controlled by the United States, excluding Indian lands and reservations. The control responsibility shall be with the Federal agency having jurisdiction over such lands or reservations. It requires the respective Federal agencies to promulgate regulations implementing this section which are as restrictive as this section and of the State in which the land is located. The regulations are to be developed in consultation with the Secretary and shall be promulgated within 12 months of the effective date of this Act.

(a)(7) amends section 131(g) to restore the choice to the State of providing just compensation either through cash compensation or amortization.

(a)(8) repeals subsections (n) and (p) which are no longer needed.

Subsection (b) requires the Department of Transportation to promulgate uniform regulations to implement this Act no later than one year from the date of enactment.

Subsection (c) provides that the effective date of these amendments shall be the date of enactment of this Act, except where a State cannot implement an amendment without legislation, the effective date will be the date of this Act or the end of the first regular legislative session in the State which begins after the date of this Act, whichever is later.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS: VISUAL POLLUTION CONTROL ACT OF 1990

1. Restores to the States and localities the ability to use either cash or amortization in compensating the billboards which are removed. Permits States to decide whether to remove nonconforming billboards by paying cash or using amortization, or to not remove the billboards.

2. Places a moratorium on the construction of new billboards along the Interstate and Primary Highway Systems.

3. Permits States and localities to use up to three percent of their regular Federal-aid highway Interstate and Primary Systems apportionments for providing the Federal share of cash payments for the removal of nonconforming billboards.

4. Prohibits the cutting of trees and vegetation on Interstate and Primary highway rights-of-way solely to improve the visibility of billboards.

5. Changes the mandatory 10 percent penalty to a discretionary 0-5 percent penalty for noncompliance with the Highway Beautification Act.

6. Asks that each State have an accurate inventory of billboards along the Interstate and Primary Systems.

7. Requires the removal of illegal signs and compensated nonconforming signs within 90 days of identification or compensation.

8. Prevents the reuse of billboards for which a State or locality has paid taxpayer dollars to remove, or which were illegal.

9. Prevents the owners of illegal or nonconforming billboards to make improvements which extend the billboards' useful life or increase their value.

10. Clarifies the requirement of Federal land owning or land controlling agenies to issue proper control regulation for billboards.

FACT SHEET: SIGN CONTROL AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

SIGN CONTROL IS GOOD FOR BUSINESS

To a great degree, business, industry and new residents are all attracted to or repelled by a community's appearance; in other words, what it looks like. An attractive community generates business and attracts homeowners. An attractive community is also a healthy community. It has a sense of pride, a sense of caring, and a sense of place.

Sign control is even more important when it comes to communities that depend on tourism. As tourists, Americans collectively spend millions of dollars seeking unspoiled countryside and unobliterated architecture. Yet nothing destroys the unique character of a place faster than uncontrolled billboards and signs.

The more a community does to enhance its unique set of natural, historic, and architectural assets, the more tourists it will attract. On the other hand, the more one place comes to look like everyplace else, the less reason there is to visit.

Without exception, communities that have enacted sign control ordinances have benefited economically. For example, Montgomery County, Maryland; Fairfax County Virginia; Boulder, Colorado; Chapel Hill, North Carolina; Boca Raton, Florida; Marin County, California; and Honolulu, Hawaii all have three things in common: strict sign controls, healthy economies, and national images as good places to live, work and do business.

The Joint Economic Committee of the United States Congress reports that a city's quality of life is more important than purely business-related factors when it comes to attracting new businesses, particularly in the rapidly growing high-tech and service industries.

The three American cities voted most conducive to business—San Diego, Seattle, and Portland, Oregon—have all banned new billboards and enacted tough on-premise sign controls.

Almost all of America's premier vacation resorts ban billboards and control signs. For example, Palm Springs, Lake Tahoe, Carmel and Big Sur, California; Sante Fe, New Mexico; Scottsdale, Arizona; Hilton Head, South Carolina; Williamsburg, Virginia; Boca Raton, Florida; and Martha's Vineyard, Massachusetts have all recognized that sign control helps attract tourists' dollars and aids the local economy.

Chaotic overabundance of billboards almost invariably accompanies an area's deterioration and lowers property values.

Indeed, the copy-cat competition to see who can build the biggest, tallest, and most distracting sign always backfires. Like screaming children in a crowded classroom, the more everyone shouts the less you can hear. Sign clutter works the same way. It means the viewer sees less, not more.

When a community passes regulations that effectively limit the size and number of signs, the viewer actually sees more. As a result businesses do a more effective selling job at lower cost. Elimination of clutter also increases motorist safety, and reduces the visual assault on our senses.

You need only look about you to see that every step taken to improve a community's livability includes without question good billboard and sign control. You always find it in modern shopping malls, revitalized business districts, and top grade industrial parks.

The National Academy of Sciences Urban Policy Committee report that "improving the appearance and attractiveness of buildings and open spaces in a community increases its desirability as a place to live, work, visit, and invest."

The Texas Industrial Commission recommends "visual enhancement" as one of the five major steps for a city that is seeking industrial development."

The Mississippi Research and Devlopment Center, after a five-year study of 35 cities, reports that "the way a community looks affects how both residents and visitors feel about it. An attractive community has a better chance at industry, including tourism."

The President's Commission on Americans Outdoors reports that "natural beauty" is the single most important factor for adults when they choose a site for outdoor recreation.

The Vermont Travel Division reports that "one of our greatest natural resources is our scenic beauty. Although there was some question that removing billboards might hurt tourism, it has had the opposite effect. Tourism is up for all businesses large and small."

The Maine Department of Tourism reports that "we have no commercial signs on Interstates. People say they can see the state now. Our mail shows that there is a great deal of appreciation for the fact that we have removed billboards. The initial concerns that businesses would be hurt have been completely unfounded."

By Mr. DOMENICI:

S. 2501. A bill to amend section 1738A of title 28, United States Code, relating to child custody determinations, to modify the requirements for court jurisdiction; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHILD CUSTODY JURISDICTION REFORM ACT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill that makes a small but very important change to our laws governing the way child custody orders are modified in this country.

Entitled the "Child Custody Jurisdiction Reform Act of 1990," this bill would modify provisions of the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act [PKPA] of 1980 to eliminate costly, drawn-out jurisdiction battles that unnecessarily inflict pain upon the children and families involved.

My bill would clarify how States retain and lose jurisdiction in child custody modification cases. It would correct a flaw in the current law, and help fulfill the original intent of the PKPA.

The idea for this legislation was developed by a small task force I have been working with from the New Mexico Bar Association's family law section. This is one of several issues I have been working on with them. I share their goal and commitment to improve conditions for children and families. They have identified this issue as one of their key problems facing family law right now.

Provisions of the PKPA that my bill would amend were intended to prevent jurisdictional conflict between State courts with respect to child custody cases by specifying conditions under which a State may establish and retain jurisdiction to make a custody ruling. Once a State issues a custody decree consistent with the provisions of the PKPA, no other State may exercise concurrent jurisdiction over the custody dispute.

However, Mr. President, a slight defect in the PKPA still allows jurisdictional competition to continue. States may modify custody rulings made by other States under the act if a child has resided in the new State for at least 6 months, and the original court no longer has jurisdiction under its own laws.

Because the language of the PKPA is unclear in certain critical parts, a new State may modify a decree made by another by just determining on its own that the original State no longer has jurisdiction under the original States' laws—even if the modification made is inconsistent with the original State's decree and law.

If you think this sounds confusing you ought to try and live your life in compliance with the inevitable conflicts the defective law can cause.

This loophole, or defect, depends upon your point of view and contributes to the kind of forum shopping the PKPA intended to prevent. Forum shopping encourages a parent, unhappy with one court's decision, to move the children to another State, hoping to get a more favorable decree. This is particularly problematic since the Supreme Court, in a 1988 child custody case, Thompson versus Thompson, ruled that there is no Federal court jurisdiction to determine which of two conflicting States has proper jurisdiction.

Mr. President, this defect is causing numerous problems across the Nation right now. Let me briefly describe the kind of case that is typical of several ongoing cases right now. A first State issues a custody decree giving the mother custody of the children and the father certain visitation rights. The mother then moves herself and her children to a neighboring State, hoping to get decree with more restrictive visitation rights.

After 6 months in the new State, the mother finds a judge who rules that the original State no longer has jurisdiction, and modifies the visitation rights. The father, who still retains certain visitation rights in his own State, is denied those rights when he tries to visit his children. The parents and lawyers continue to fight, and the children are caught in the middle of tug of war that often drags them across the country.

Mr. President, the pain that custody battles cause for both children and parents is tragic and we should do what we can to curb legal loopholes that create legal battles.

We should promote an atmosphere for our children that permits them the lighthearted joy of playing ball in a playground not forcing upon them the misery of being footballs in a courtroom.

My bill would eliminate this competition by clarifying that a State making an original custody decree retains jurisdiction as long as that State remains the residence of the child or of either parent in the decree. The original State could determine on its own that it no longer has jurisdiction under its own laws—thereby transferring jurisdiction—but another State could not act until the original State declines jurisdiction.

This bill would assure that one State, and one State only, would have jurisdiction under Federal law to resolve a child custody dispute, and would relieve Federal courts from any need to resolve such disputes.

In closing, Mr. President, I would like to thank members of the New Mexico Bar's family law section who helped me with this, including Barbara Shapiro, James Lyons, and Tom Montoya. In particular, I would like to give special thanks to Tom, who is with the Albuquerque law firm of Atkinson & Kelsey, for his work on this issue. Tom has researched this issue extensively, and has been a tremendous help to me on this.

I think this is a reasonable solution to the problem that exists, and I hope my colleagues will support it. I look forward to working with the relevant committees to see that this bill can be considered quickly.●

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ:

S. 2502. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to make certain provisions of the Equal Access to Justice Act applicable to tax proceedings; to the Committee on Finance.

TAX JUSTICE ACT

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Tax Justice Act. This bill, if enacted, will establish a more equitable method for small business owners and individuals to recover administrative and litigation costs if they prevail in lawsuits and formal agency hearings involving the IRS.

The Tax Justice Act is an extension on the Equal Access to Justice Act which was permanently reauthorized in 1985. You will recall that the equal access to justice law allows small businesses and individuals to recover legal fees and expenses if a Federal agency is the losing party in litigation, and is unable to establsh substantial justification for its position against the small business or individual. Since the reauthorization for EAJA failed to include the IRS among the list of agencies to which the law applies, the Tax Justice Act corrects that.

The Act contains a number of provisions. First, it covers individuals with a net worth of $2 million or less, as well as sole proprietors, corporations, partnerships, local governmental units, and public or private organizations with a net worth of $7 million or less and not more than 500 employees.

Second, it shifts the burden of proof away from the taxpayer and toward the IRS when determining whether the agency should pay a taxpayer's legal fees and expenses. In other words, if a taxpayer prevails with respect to the amount in controversy or the most significant issues in the case, the IRS must then establish that its position was substantially justified in order to avoid reimbursing the taxpayer for costs incurred.

Finally, the act encourages the court to consider not only the position of the United States in the agency hearing or in the litigation, but the Government's original action or failure to act which prompted the formal proceeding. For example, if the IRS issues a notice to a taxpayer claiming failure to report interest, the court will consider the position taken by the United States after the taxpayer has had the opportunity to provide sufficient information to establish whether the interest should have been reported on the tax return. Under this provision, a taxpayer may attempt to recover costs incurred before the trial date in the event that a case is settled out of court.

Mr. President, I believe that this bill is timely, especially in light of recent reports published in the Washington Post concerning the plight of Kay and Alex Council. In that case, Alex Council resorted to suicide so that his wife could gain access to insurance proceeds in order to continue a battle with the IRS that had been waged for several years. At issue was a $300,000 tax bill consisting of penalties and interest levied on the Councils after they failed to respond to a notice that the agency sent to the wrong address. Although Kay Council finally won the case, as well as the right to be reimbursed for thousands of dolalrs in attonrey fees, not every case is this dramatic. Nonetheless, it does illustrate the need to protect small businesses and individuals from the IRS tyranny in the form of specious claims and protracted litigation.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation. If enacted, it will provide some measure of protection for citizens subjected to wrongful attacks by the IRS that lead to costly and wholly unnecessary litigation.●

By Mr. BUMPERS (for himself and Mr. PRYOR):

S. 2503. A bill to amend the Food Security Act of 1985 to modify the exemptions from wetland conservation requirements, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

MODIFICATION OF EXEMPTIONS FROM WETLAND CONSERVATION REQUIREMENTS

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce, with my friend and colleague, Senator PRYOR, a bill on a subject that has become the No. 1 issue of concern to farmers all over America, namely, wetlands determination. That this issue can supersede every other agricultural issue during a farm bill year indicates how concerned our farmers are about a Federal regulation that is grossly overreaching and beyond the intent of Congress.

In 1985, I was one of the strongest supporters in the Senate for the inclusion of a section in the 1985 Food Security Act that is commonly known as the Swampbuster Act. The premise behind the Swampbuster Act was that the Federal Government had a legitimate interest in preserving wetlands, which then numbered around 100 million acres, In exchange for farmers qualifying to receive a range of Federal assistance, including price support loans, deficiency payments, crop insurance, production loans and guarantees, and storage loans, the Federal Government would prevent farmers from converting wetlands not already converted or in the process of being converted by December 23, 1985.

Mr. President, this bill essentially goes back to the 1985 Swampbuster Act and includes wetlands as defined in that act.

The core of fairness in this measure was that a farmer could exercise his property rights as he saw fit, but if in so doing he converted wetlands after December 23, 1985, then the Government exercised its right not to offer Federal assistance. Also, a farmer could farm wetlands without penalty as long as he did not alter the wetland characteristics.

Arkansas was affected as much as any State by the Swampbuster limitations, and many of our farmers were opposed to the provisions. But they complied, and after a while Swampbuster limitations became an accepted part of doing business.

Unbeknownst to farmers in my State, the EPA, the Corps of Engineers, the Fish and Wildlife Service, and the Soil Conservation Service issued an interagency publication in January 1989, entitled the "Federal Manual for Delineating Jurisdictional Wetlands," without going through the normal rulemaking process. This manual supposedly made uniform the definition of wetlands, and it had the effect of extending the jurisdiction of the Corps of Engineers to 80 percent of all arable land in eastern Arkansas. Claiming that the Corps of Engineers had incorrectly applied legislation adopted in the Clean Water Act of 1972, not to mention the corps' own regulations adopted in 1977, the EPA began a campaign to greatly expand its enforcement control of wetlands throughout the United States, but most particularly in the delta region of the Mississippi River, through the adoption of the new manual.

The Memphis District of the Corps of Engineers saw an increase of 200 percent in the number of acres in Arkansas classified as wetlands. In the region under the jurisdiction of the lower Mississippi Valley division, lands classified as wetlands jumped to 19 million acres.

Almost all of these new acres are lands exempt under Swampbuster as prior converted. Land that had been upland cotton ground for 50 years is now being classified as a wetland. What concerns me greatly is that the EPA and the corps have engaged in a program of not only protecting established wetlands, but also one of reclaiming and reestablishing wetlands in a manner that smacks of an illegal taking. In fact, I have learned from good authority that the Atlanta office of the EPA noted to officials within the Corps of Engineers that EPA would accomplish on a case-by-case basis what would be clearly prevented as an illegal taking if done by regulatory fiat. These comments, showing a complete disregard for private property rights, will work to set back not only our attempts to preserve wetlands, but also attempts to adopt reasonable approaches for reestablishing wetlands, such as a wetlands reserve program for some other landowner incentives program.

As noted, under section 404 permitting authority, the EPA and the corps included millions of acres of land that are exempt under Swampbuster as prior converted. Section 404 does provide some exemptions, known as 404(f) exemptions, but neither the corps nor the EPA can tell us how such exemptions will be defined. Rice farmers in Mississippi are at the mercy of the Atlanta office of the EPA. New rice farmers in Arkansas are fortunate in that jurisdiction in the determination of what is a normal, ongoing farming practice is in the hands of the Dallas EPA office which seems to have a clearer grasp on agricultural determinations.

However, neither office of the EPA nor the Corps of Engineers has been able to provide timely relief for those interested in going into aquaculture production. To date, the general permitting authority of the corps which would allow for the board awarding of permits based on classes of acceptable production, thereby freeing farmers from having to seek individual permits, is hopelessly bogged down. All concept of the need to match farmers' production seasons has been lost. Rumors abound that the corps and the EPA will issue a press release soon establishing broad categories of exempt production, but the only concrete information I have is the statement by corps officials that general permits may be issued within the next 6 months. This is far too late.

Another area in which the corps and the EPA have been unable to make a timely decision is that of mitigation. It is widely believed that the EPA and the corps will require mitigation for changes in production practices on lands now classified as wetlands. For example, a farm that has been in cotton for 50 years and enjoys a Swampbuster prior conversion and a 404(f) exemption would still have a mitigation requirement under section 404 if some of the land was devoted to building a fish pond. This is unfair on its face because farmers will lose normal production land, but the problem has been made worse because the mitigation requirements are still unknown.

While the corps and the EPA are conferring on general permitting possibilities or mitigation requirements, farmers now have a nearly insurmountable problem in just trying to get a permit. DOD has instituted a nationwide hiring freeze. Therefore, three-person offices normally handling 80 requests per quarter now have 10 times that number, and there is no relief. Our farmers have been forced into an untenable situation.

I am sure that few question my environmentalist credentials or my strong desires to protect our remaining wetlands and to help recreate new ones. But I cannot understand why our farmers must be punished in this process. Section 404 regulation is clearly unjust on the vast amount of the new land recently brought under the jurisdiction of the corps, and my bill will remedy this problem by grandfathering all wetlands regulation under the Swampbuster provision of the 1985 Food Security Act for land classified as prior converted. In other words, if land is classified as prior converted under Swampbuster, then it is exempt from all other wetland regulations.

The second part of my bill is designed to offer farmers who were allowed to farm wetlands under Swampbuster some options to convert these lands in exchange for providing quality mitigation land. If farmers have farmed wetlands for 6 out of 10 years prior to December 23, 1985, they may convert these lands as long as they mitigate on a one-for-one basis. Such mitigation must maintain the same value and function of the lost wetlands. Lands currently classified as converted wetlands, or in a new category of severely degraded wetlands as defined by the Secretary, shall be used for mitigation. The restoration of converted wetlands or severely degraded wetlands through mitigation shall be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture with the concurrence of the Fish and Wildlife Service. This section of my bill offers flexibility to farmers while providing the greatest protection for animal and plant life dependent on traditional farmed wetlands.

Mr. President, the wetlands problem has become a critical issue to many in this body, and I am convinced that technical changes like those I offer today are necessary if we are to advance the goal of preserving our remaining wetlands. I encourage my colleagues to study this bill closely and to support its adoption.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill as introduced be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2503

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXEMPTIONS FROM WETLAND CONSERVATION REQUIREMENTS.

Section 1222 of the Food Security Act of 1985 (16 U.S.C. 3822) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, converted wetland that is described in subsection (a)(1) or (e) shall be exempt from any other provision of law governing wetland use, if the converted wetland is used for agricultural purposes (including row crops, acquaculture, silviculture, the production of livestock or poultry, or horticulture).

"(e) No person shall become ineligible under section 1221 for program loans, payments, and benefits as the result of the conversion of wetlands on land that was cultivated to produce at least 6 of the 1975 through 1985 crops of an agricultural commodity on a farm if (as determined by the Secretary)—

"(1) the reduction in the value, acreage, and function of the converted wetland is mitigated by the person through the restoration of—

"(A) converted wetland; or

"(B) severely degraded wetland (as defined by the Secretary), with the acreage of severely graded wetland to be determined by the Secretary, in consultation with the Fish and Wildlife Service, on an acre for acre basis;

"(2) the restoration occurs in advance of, or concurrently with, the production of the agricultural commodity on the converted wetland and in accordance with a restoration plan developed and approved by the Secretary, with the concurrence of the Fish and Wildlife Service;

"(3) the restored wetland is on lands owned or otherwise under the control of the person; and

"(4) the person enters into an agreement with the Secretary under which the person agrees to maintain the restored converted wetland.".

By Mr. D'AMATO (for himself and Mr. DODD):

S. 2504. A bill to establish a housing grant action program; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

HOUSING GRANT ACTION PROGRAM ACT

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Housing Grant Action Program Act of 1990 with my friend and colleague from Connecticut, Senator CHRISTOPHER DODD. I thank Senator DODD for his invaluable insights and support in developing this legislation. With his commitment and that of Senators DOLE and PRESSLER, I am convinced that the introduction of this package will result in a groundswell of support for this commonsense approach to housing our Nation's poor.

As you know, I have been working with Senator CRANSTON for the past 3 years to develop comprehensive housing legislation. Our 3-year legislative process involved some of the best and the brightest in the field of housing from around the Nation—the Rouse-Maxwell Task Force, MIT, and an array of committed, topnotch interest groups. Our effort culminated on March 15, 1989, with the introduction of S. 566, the National Affordable Housing Act. S. 566 is a sweeping package of reforms and new programs designed to address housing problems affecting the homeless, the elderly, the disabled, welfare families, the first-time homebuyer, and others who are truly in need. It is a commendable product.

The legislation that CHRIS DODD and I introduce today aims to supplement S. 566. We intend to offer this bill as an amendment to May 2 at the Senate Banking Committee markup of the National Affordable Housing Act. This legislation takes into account a phenomenon that neither the housing task forces nor the experts anticipated. I am talking, of course, about problems at the Department of Housing and Urban Development which went to the very heart of HUD's ability to perform its housing mission.

Three years ago, when the National Affordable Housing Act was being developed, no one knew that the agency's effectiveness had been so seriously eroded. No one was aware of the rampant abuses occurring with housing programs. No one knew that HUD had fallen under the undue influence of lobbyists and interest groups. And clearly, no one—inside or outside of the Department—knew that the FHA fund was headed for disaster. Coupled with the serious backlog of over 204,000 housing units in the section 202 and Public Housing CIAP programs, we cannot create more programs with more funding and more bureaucracy without first getting HUD's housing in order.

Secretary Kemp took up the challenge of whipping HUD back into shape and he has made an excellent start. He has assembled an outstanding team of individuals who are committed to making HUD a well-functioning and responsive housing organization.

But let's be realistic. It's not easy to turn around a 14,000-person bureaucracy. The agency is still replacing many of the key personnel who have left or are on the brink of leaving. And HUD's infrastructure, like its computer system, is not up to speed. Under these circumstances, the housing backlog continues to increase. Ultimately, housing never gets to the people.

Changes in the law governing our Nation's housing programs are necessary. Secretary Kemp took the lead last year and helped the Congress pass HUD reform bill that began to deal with the structural problems at HUD. What is needed now is an ultimate reform—a change in the housing mandate that eliminates the old mechanism of centralized control and Washington-based interest groups and places the housing mandate and the housing resources in the hands of those who can best respond to the Nation's housing needs. Secretary Kemp's reform in HUD procedures was appropriate and beneficial but the fundamental problem of bureaucracy, centralization, and confusing regulations remains. The legislation we introduce today seeks to adapt our new housing initiatives to the need for decentralization and responsiveness that the lessons of HUD's problems have helped to define.

GET THE HOUSING TO THE PEOPLE: IT'S TIME FOR A BLOCK GRANT

We are all aware that HUD administers many complex programs which are sometimes both redundant and conflicting. Community groups seeking housing assistance find these programs impossible to understand and access. Often a well-intentioned nonprofit organization is forced to hire a consultant who knows HUD or HUD programs in order to decipher the labyrinth of regulations and redtape surrounding each program. Ultimately those in need of housing suffer and the American taxpayer pays for this unnecessary overlap and confusion.

To make matters worse, the turmoil at HUD makes it clear that it has limited capacity to administer housing programs. The most visible example of this is the pipeline of unused funds. The section 202 program currently has over 34,000 units stuck in the pipeline. This is more than 4 years of the amount of units currently appropriated for this program. Furthermore, the Public Housing CIAP program—which renovates public housing—has a backlog of over $3.4 billion—enough funding to rehabilitate 170,000 units of public housing. It's time we get the money to the people.

THE HOUSING GRANT ACTION PROGRAM ACT OF 1990 [GAP]

It is for this reason that I am introducing legislation to supplement the National Affordable Housing Act. The Housing Grant Action Program Act of 1990 is fiscally responsible. It involves no new Federal funding. This legislation maintains the current level of funding for nine categorical housing assistance programs, adjusting for full PFS and inflation—totaling $7.1 billion—and simply alters the method by which the funding is allocated.

The simple idea is consolidation. Currently there are nine separate categorical programs at HUD which are devoted exclusively to housing acquisition, rehabilitation, and production. Each of these programs works differently. Each is distributed to a different class of recipient—either a nonprofit organization, a State or local government, a for-profit developer, or a public housing authority. Each program has its own requirements and guidelines. Yet all of these programs are designed for the same activity—rehabilitating, acquiring, or constructing housing for low- and moderate-income families. This is redundant and inefficient.

My legislation would consolidate the total funding for these nine categorical HUD programs, provide a full PFS of operating subsidies, adjust for inflation, and distribute the total $7.1 billion to State and local governments in the form of one block grant. The nine programs to be consolidated are: the Rental Rehab Program, the 312 Rehab Loan Program, the 202 Elderly and Handicapped Housing Program, the Nehemiah Program, the Moderate Rehabilitation Program, the Public Housing Modernization [CIAP] Program, the Public Housing Operating Subsidies Program, the Public Housing and Indian Housing Development Program, and the HoDAG Program.

This program would then distribute funds by formula to States and localities in a manner similar to the Community Development Grant Program; 70 percent of the funds would be allocated to localities and 30 percent would be allocated to States. Four percent would be taken off of the top for Indian housing.

The CDBG Program has an established track record of success. States and localities are familiar with its distribution process. They are comfortable with its method of allocation. Local officials and community groups have acquired a capacity to address effectively the housing needs of their area within such a system. It makes sense to recognize and build upon this successful method of distributing housing assistance—instead of creating a brand new system and structure and program. Particularly now, we need to use what we know works.

Although allocation of these funds is intended to be flexible—to account for the differences of local housing markets and needs—we must also ensure that the funds are used for individuals who are in the greatest need of housing assistance. Consequently, the legislation proposes to copy/replicate the targeting requirements used in the Low-Income Tax Credit Program—providing assistance to individuals and families with incomes of 60 percent or below the area median. Families will pay no more than 30 percent of their income on rent with allowance for utilities.

Using this targeting requirement will establish some consistency between our tax subsidies and direct subsidies for housing and it builds upon the targeting requirements of a program that has experienced national success in assisting the poor. The Low-Income Tax Credit Program has produced units for over 236,000 families in the past 3 years.

The Federal Government has a rocky history in the area of coordination of these two housing funding streams. The result has been a nightmare for those localities which are trying to address the needs of the poor. This legislation will ensure that, for the first time in well over a decade, direct housing and tax subsidies work in conjunction with one another—they will be allocated in a similar fashion and they have identical requirements for income levels of families who are eligible to benefit from the subsidy.

CONCLUSION

With ongoing difficulties at HUD, we must focus on simplification and consolidation of our housing programs. The HOP block grant in S. 566 takes a first step in this direction. Yet with all of the lessons that we have learned over the past year about HUD, HOP is not enough. We must consolidate and synthesize in a major way. We must tap the expertise and commitment of State and local officials by unleashing them from complex Federal regulations. The Housing Grant Action Program does just this. I look forward to working with my friend Senator CRANSTON to continue his efforts to advance housing in a direction that is long overdue.●

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am delighted to be joined by my good friend and New York neighbor, AL D'AMATO, in introducing the House Grant Action Program [GAP] of 1990. While we scan the horizon from vantage points on opposite sides of the aisle, Senator D'AMATO and I have long shared the view that a Federal commitment to the creation of a viable and responsive national housing policy is a priority that this Nation must always sit at the highest levels of the national agenda. We stand here today in further bipartisan affirmation of that commitment.

It is a spirit of commitment that began 3 years ago and for which we owe an extraordinary debt of gratitude to Senator ALAN CRANSTON—my democratic colleague, long-time friend and tireless champion of housing. ALAN spearheaded an unprecedented effort chaired by Jim Rouse and David Maxwell to bring together the best housing minds from across the country to forge legislation in response to our Nation's housing crisis. S. 566, the National Affordable Housing Act, which is the byproduct of that effort, is a comprehensive package of innovative reforms created to meet the housing needs of many Americans—from the homeless to the first-time home buyer, from the disabled to the elderly. The National Affordable Housing Act is a wide-ranging blueprint for action that emphasizes the fundamental partnership of the Federal Government and State and local governments in the establishment of effective national housing policy.

The legislation that Senator D'AMATO and I introduce today is a necessary complement to S. 566. It is not a replacement. It is not a gutting. It does not replace the Housing Opportunity Program [HOP], the centerpiece of S. 566. It does not affect Secretary Kemp's Housing Opportunity for People Everywhere [HOPE] proposal. It does not alter any part of S. 566—a bill that I continue to wholeheartedly support. It is our hope that the legislation we introduce today becomes a beneficial part of S. 566.

The Housing Grant Action Program of 1990 is a measure that recognizes—and seeks to address—some changes that have occurred in the housing universe over the last 3 years. They are changes—the worsening state of HUD, the condition of FHA, the looming specter of FSLIC—that the best housing minds could never have contemplated and that threaten the hard fought gains of the last 3 years. As it relates to HUD alone, there are presently 34,622 units in the section 202 pipeline; that's $1.7 billion worth or 4.5 years worth of appropriated, unused section 202 funds. As for the public housing modernization [CIAP] pipeline, it is currently jammed with $3.4 billion in unused funds, enough to renovate 170,000 public housing units.

As policymakers, we must be accountable to the changed realities in any theater of debate. Accountability has been the watchword in the creation of the National Affordable Housing Act. The housing gap legislation is an attempt, in complete consistency with the philosophy of S. 566 and its HOP centerpiece, to remain accountable to the urgent housing needs of Americans.

We propose the creation of a block grant that consolidates $6.6 billion in 1990 funding for nine categorical programs presently at HUD. They include: the Rental Rehab Program, the 312 rehab Loan Program, the 202 Elderly and Handicapped Housing Program, the Nehemiah Program, the Moderate Rehabilitation Program, the Public Housing Modernization [CIAP] Program, the Public Housing Operating Subsidies Program, the Public Housing Development Program, the Indian Housing Development Program, and the HODAG Program.

GAP funds would be distributed by formula to States and localities in a manner similar to CDBG—with 70 percent of the funds allocated to localities and 30 percent to States. Senator D'AMATO and I believe that it makes sense to recognize and build upon this method instead of creating a brand new system for our States, localities, and community groups to understand. The legislation also duplicates the targeting requirements used in the Low-Income Housing Tax Credit Program. This reflects not only the themes of consolidation and simplicity, but also points in the direction of better coordination between tax and spending programs, something I have long advocated as critical to the development of responsive and responsible housing policies.

Consolidation, streamlining, and the elimination of unnecessary red tape have been themes that have echoed with accord and consistency throughout the development of national housing legislation over the last 3 years. Our legislation would apply those universally accepted themes in the form of a block grant to the nine existing programs outlined above.

I have no doubt that much of the focus of comment on our legislation will center on public housing. There are no two stronger friends of public housing in the U.S. Senate than the authors of today's legislation. It is our shared belief that the best interests of the low-income Americans who need—and will continue to need—public housing will be better served with the passage of this legislation. We believe that bringing the dollars that fund public housing closer to the politics that understand public housing is the best way of ensuring that we continue to meet the housing needs of low-income Americans.

Let's be candid. The enemies of public housing are many and well known. They wait for the first opportunity to rid us of their great nemesis. Our legislation beats them to the punch. It articulates a new Federal commitment to sustaining and preserving an increasingly needed public housing stock. It makes sure that it is the friends—not the enemies—of public housing that form the parameters of an inevitable debate about its future. Our legislation simply says that public housing—like all housing—is best managed by those that know it best. It is the local officials that best understand the needs of their particular low-income housing community. This GAP legislation would give them the tools that they require to respond to those diverse needs. Meanwhile, we the friends of public housing in Washington must work to guarantee that support for public housing remains high on the agenda of national housing priorities.

Our legislation makes it explicitly clear that no State or locality will be allowed to ignore the needs of families living in public housing. In order to receive funds under the proposed legislation, a State or locality must certify that it is addressing the needs of those in public housing. The legislation also provides for explicit hold harmless provisions for fiscal years 1991, 1992 and 1993. This hold harmless amount is the minimum amount that a State or locality will receive for public housing in 3 years. A number of States and localities will receive more than the hold harmless amount. The hold harmless provisions include:

First, a full amount of operating subsidy—based on performance funding system formula—for the public housing within the jurisdiction. Currently, PHA's have to fight each year to get the full PFS amount. The GAP bill insures that the full PFS amount will be provided to the appropriate State or locality over 3 years.

Second, an annual formula allocation of CIAP [Comprehensive Improvement Assistance Program] funding based on an average of the amounts received by public housing authorities within the jurisdiction over the last 5 years. Currently, CIAP funding is competitive. This provision responds to the need for a regular, formula allocation of CIAP funding by distributing rehabilitation funds on an annual, formula basis.

Third, an annual formula allocation of public housing development funding based on an average of funding received by public housing authorities within the jurisdiction over the last 5 years.

Let me add one, final, strategic thought. The legislative landscape of the last decade is littered with the remains of excellent housing proposals that have died in the chilly, contrarian winds of official Washington. It is also true that the only lasting monuments in the housing landscape of the last generation are those that were built with the hands of bipartisan cooperation.

The people of this Nation need housing legislation. They need strong, bipartisan legislation that can withstand the rigors of a long and rancorous legislative process. They need legislation that can sustain the support of a majority of the Members in this institution. As an amendment to S. 566, the National Affordable Housing Act, the Housing Grant Action Program of 1990 is the glue that will secure the passage of comprehensive legislation that can sustain broad and unequivocal, bipartisan support. Without that kind of support, we build nothing more than another monument to the failures of partisan indifference.

This is the time to see to it that the monument we do build can stand the test of time and be worthy of the trust that the American people place in us to help them meet their urgent housing needs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis of the Housing Grant Action Program of 1990 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE HOUSING GRANT ACTION PROGRAM ACT OF 1990 SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

SECTION 1—SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "Housing Grant Action Program Act of 1990."

SECTION 2—PURPOSES

(a) The purposes of this Act are to:

(1) Promote the cooperation of all levels of government and the private sector, including nonprofit organizations, in addressing local housing needs and issues;

(2) Recognize the diversity of housing issues and concerns across the Nation;

(3) Maximize the use of existing Federal resources to assist State and local governments in addressing current housing problems;

(4) Add to the supply of affordable housing;

(5) Provide the maximum possible flexibility in the use of these assistance funds;

(6) Provide assistance funds to States and localities on a formula basis for use according to a comprehensive housing assistance strategy and for prescribed eligible housing activities;

(7) Promote consistency between existing and proposed tax policy and housing policy;

(8) Preserve wherever feasible as housing affordable to low income families those dwelling units produced for such purpose with Federal assistance; and

(9) Recognize, better utilize, and enhance the capacity of States and localities to meet the housing needs of low and moderate income persons.

(b) It is the intent of Congress that the Federal assistance made available under this Act not be utilized to reduce substantially the amount of local financial support for housing activities below the level of such support prior to the availability of such assistance.

(c) It is also the purpose of this Act to further the development of a national housing policy by consolidating a number of complex and overlapping programs into a consistent system of Federal aid which: provides annual assistance dependably so communities can rely on such assistance in housing planning; encourages housing activities which are consistent with local planning; furthers achievement of the national housing goal of a decent home and suitable living environment for every American family; and fosters the undertaking of housing activities in a coordinated and mutually supportive manner by Federal agencies and programs, as well as by communities.

SECTION 3—DEFINITIONS

(a) Section 3 stipulates that population data and rules for designating cities and urban counties shall be applied as under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (the CDBG program) and defines terms used in this Act: State; unit of general local government; metropolitan area; city nonentitlement area; population, extent of poverty; extent of housing overcrowding; age of housing; extent of growth lag; housing stock; adjustment factor; predicted age of housing; adjusted age of housing; Indian tribe; Federal grant-in-aid program; Secretary; and persons of low and moderate income.

(b) The definitions of terms in this Act shall be based on the most recent data compiled by the United States Bureau of the Census and the latest published reports of the Office of Management and Budget.

(c) One or more public agencies may be designated by the chief executive officer of a State or a unit of general local government to undertake activities assisted under this title.

(d) Consortia of geographically proximate units of general local governments may apply for assistance on behalf of their members.

SECTION 4—GRANTS AUTHORIZED

Authorizes to be appropriated $—— for fiscal year 1991, $—— for fiscal year 1992, and $—— for fiscal year 1993.

SECTION 5—ELIGIBLE ACTIVITIES

Grants made under the Act may be used only:

(1) To improve rental and homeownership affordability through the acquisition, construction, reconstruction, or moderate or substantial rehabilitation of affordable housing, including real property acquisition, site improvement, conversion, demolition, and other expenses, including relocation expenses of any displaced persons, families, businesses, or organizations;

(2) To provide assistance in the form of interest-bearing loans, noninterest-bearing loans or advances, interest subsidies, or other forms of assistance;

(3) To make rental rehabilitation grants to support the rehabilitation of privately owned real property to be used for primarily residential rental purposes;

(4) To provide assistance to nonprofit organizations to provide second mortgage loans for up to $15,000 to families purchasing newly constructed or substantially rehabilitated homes;

(5) To assist private nonprofit corporations, limited profit sponsors, consumer cooperatives, or public bodies or agencies to provide housing and related facilities for elderly and handicapped families;

(6) To make loans to the owners and tenants of property to finance the rehabilitation of such property as part of community development activities under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 or an approved urban homestead program under section 809 of such Act;

(7) To make assistance payments under this section directly or through public housing agencies pursuant to contracts with owners or prospective owners who agree to upgrade housing so as to make and keep such housing decent, safe, and sanitary through upgrading which involves less than substantial rehabilitation;

(8) To make loans or commitments to make loans to public housing agencies or Indian housing agencies to help finance or refinance the development, acquisition, or operation of lower income housing projects by such agencies;

(9) To make available financial assistance to public housing agencies for the purpose of improving the physical condition of existing low-rent public housing projects and for upgrading the management and operation of such projects to the extent necessary to maintain such physical improvements;

(10) To make annual contributions to public housing agencies for the operation of lower income housing projects;

(11) For the disposition (through sale, lease, donation, or otherwise) of any real property acquired pursuant to this Act or its retention for public purposes;

(12) For activities necessary to develop a comprehensive housing plan and to develop a policy-planning-management capacity;

(13) For the payment of reasonable administrative costs;

(14) For activities which are carried out by public or private entities, including acquisition of real property or acquisition, construction, reconstruction, rehabilitation, or installation of housing for income eligible individuals and families;

(15) For assistance to eligible low-income households under the Emergency Low-Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987; and

(16) For assistance to resident management corporations or resident councils to facilitate management or homeownership under sections 122 and 123 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1987.

(This subsection includes as specific eligible activities descriptions of each program that is being folded into the housing grant action program under this Act.)

(b) A recipient that uses grant proceeds for a loan program under subsection (a) many retain amounts repaid for use for activities described in subsection (a);

SECTION 6—STATEMENT OF ACTIVITIES AND REVIEW

(a) Each grantee shall prepare a statement of housing objectives and projected use of funds, and must provide for citizen participation in the development of such a statement and certify that it is following a detailed citizen participation plan.

(b) Each grantee must certify that it is in full compliance with citizen participation and fair housing requirements, that it has developed a 5 year housing plan, that tenant rents will be established in accordance with section 3(a) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, and that the funds will be targeted toward families whose income is 60 percent or less of the area median income. Grantees must also certify that these funds will be used for projects in which (A) 20 percent or more of the residential units in each project are affordable to individuals whose income is 50 percent of less of area median income, or (B) 40 percent or more of the residential units in each project are affordable to individuals whose income is 60 percent or less of area median income.

(c) Each grantee will be required to develop and follow a housing assistance strategy which:

(A) Surveys the community's housing stock and assesses the housing needs of low and moderate income persons residing in the community;

(B) Specifies a realistic annual goal for the number or units to be assisted;

(C) Describes a plan for improving housing quality to ensure that it is decent, safe, and sanitary and meets minimum property standards;

(D) Indicates the general locations of proposed housing for persons of low and moderate income;

(E) Specifies activities to be undertaken to minimize displacement and preserve or expand the availability of housing for persons of low and moderate income;

(F) Describes the nature and extent of homelessness within the jurisdiction, a brief inventory of facilities and services to assist such persons, and a strategy for addressing the housing needs of such persons:

(G) Identifies local policies which may pose a barrier to producing affordable housing and describes the jurisdiction's strategy to remove or ameliorate any negative effects of such policies;

(H) Indicates what other resources may be used to carry out the purposes of this Act;

(I) Describes the standards and procedures according to which the jurisdiction will monitor activities authorized under this Act and ensure long-term compliance with the provisions of this Act;

(J) Certifies that the jurisdiction will affirmatively further fair housing;

(K) Describes the physical condition of existing public housing projects and a strategy for improving public housing;

(L) Identifies opportunities for public housing residents to become more involved in management and participate in homeownership;

(M) Evaluates the extent to which funds are used to benefit persons with incomes at or below 60% of the area median income;

(N) Provides that any assistance provided to any housing project under this Act shall not be more than is necessary to provide affordable housing after taking account of other assistance provided to the project; and

(O) includes any other factors identified by the Secretary.

(d) Each grantee will be required to develop and follow a residential antidisplacement and relocation assistance plan which provides for adequate and affordable replacement dwellings for displaced residents. (The statutory language used follows the language that currenly applies to the Community Development Block Grants (CDBG) program.)

(e) Each grantee shall submit to the Secretary a performance and evaluation report with an assessment of the degree to which the grantee's use of funds has met the requirements of the Act. These reports will include detailed information regarding the activities of the grantee and the demographics of the persons assisted by such activities. The reports will also include a financial statement for each project assisted by this program. The Secretary shall make annual reviews and audits to determine if the grantees are complying with the requirements of this Act. The Secretary may make adjustments in the amount of the annual grants in accordance with the Secretary's findings under this subsection.

(f) The financial transactions of recipients may be audited by the General Accounting Office to perform necessary and appropriate audits.

(g) The Secretary may provide funds to recipients who assume responsibilities for environmental review pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (NEPA) and provide funds for projects after requirements have been met.

(h) The Secretary may approve the inclusion of a metropolitan city as part of an urban county for purposes of submitting a statement under subsection (a) and carrying out activities under this Act.

(i) Any unit of general local government may retain any program income that is realized from any grant provided that the unit of general local government agrees to use such program income for eligible activities in accordance with this Act.

(j) Each grantee shall provide for reasonable benefits to any person involuntarily and permanently displaced as a result of the use of assistance received under this chapter.

SECTION 7—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

(a)(1) Of the funds appropriated for the housing grant action program in any year (excluding the amount provided for use in accordance with the Indian Housing Program), 70 per centum shall be allocated by the Secretary to metropolitan cities and urban counties and 30 per centum shall be allocated by the Secretary to States for use as provided in subsection (b), on the basis of a formula which shall be contained in a regulation proposed by the Secretary not later than sixty days after the effective date of this section. Such regulation shall be accompanied by an estimate of the specific basic grant amount for fiscal year 1991 for individual cities, urban counties, and States which would result from the proposed formula. The formula contained in the regulation shall take into account objectively measurable conditions, including such factors as the extent of physically inadequate housing stock, tightness of the housing market, costs of production, poverty, operating and modernization needs of public housing, and such other objectively measurable conditions as the Secretary deems appropriate to reflect the need for assistance under this section. Except as provided in subsection (d)(4), each metropolitan city and urban county shall, subject to the provisions of section 6 and except as otherwise specifically authorized, be entitled to annual grants from such allocation in an aggregate amount not exceeding the greater of its basic amount computed pursuant to the formula under this paragraph or its hold-harmless amount computed pursuant to subsection (d).

(2) ADJUSTMENTS.—Before an allocation determined under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year is made available for use, the Secretary may adjust the allocations as follows: Beginning with fiscal years after 1991, the Secretary is authorized to adjust the allocation for a city, urban county, or State administering a housing grant action program as provided in subsection (b), by up to 15 per centum above or below the amount of such allocation, based on an annual review of performance in carrying out activities under this section in a timely manner and in achieving the result that at least 80 per centum of the units assisted under this section in all program years are and remain affordable by families whose income is 60 per centum or less of the area median income. The Secretary shall establish by regulation performance criteria for purposes of this subparagraph.

(3) REALLOCATION.—After the allocation of housing grant action program amounts, the Secretary is authorized to reallocate such amounts among grantees within the State on the basis of the Secretary's assessment of the progress of grantees in carrying out activities under this section in accordance with their specified schedules. Reallocations under this paragraph shall be designed to encourage use of these resources expeditiously, consistent with the sound development and administration of the grantee's housing grant action program.

(4) RECAPTURE.—Any housing grant action program amounts which are not obligated at the end of any fiscal year shall be added to the amount available for allocation for such grants for the succeeding fiscal year.

(b) State program.—States will have the option of electing to administer the housing grant action program for nonentitlement areas within the State. If a State does not elect to administer the program, then HUD will administer the program for nonentitlement areas within the State. In any case in which the State is a grantee under any provision of this section, the Secretary shall require that the State take such actions as may be appropriate to assure compliance with the program requirements, and other provisions of this section.

(c) Indian housing grant action program.—4 percent of the amounts appropriated for this program shall be set aside for grants to Indian tribes. HUD will administer this program through a competitive process similar to that used for current Indian Housing programs. The full hold harmless amount of each Indian tribe shall be the sum of (i) the five year average of commitments for public modernization and development grants during 1986–1990; and (ii) the full operating subsidy required for payments to public housing agencies or Indian housing authorities for operating subsidies for low-income housing projects within the jurisdiction of the Indian tribe as calculated by HUD according to the Performance Funding System (PFS) formula. During the fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993, each Indian tribe will receive the full hold-harmless amount as computed by the preceding formula. In the fiscal years 1994, 1995, and 1996, the Secretary may reduce the hold harmless amount of any Indian tribe, provided that such reduction does not exceed one-third of the hold-harmless amount in fiscal year 1994 and two-thirds of the hold-harmless amount in fiscal year 1995. There shall be no requirement that the Secretary provide any portion of the hold-harmless amount in fiscal year 1996.

(d) Hold harmless.—This subsection defines each grantee's "hold-harmless" amount, or that amount of assistance that each grantee will receive to allow for an orderly transition from the current funding system to the new grant system. Providing hold-harmless assistance ensures that communities currently receiving assistance will continue to receive assistance as the new system phases in.

(1) The full hold harmless amount of each metropolitan city and urban county shall be the sum of (i) the sum of the average during the five fiscal years ending prior to October 1, 1990, of (1) commitments for public housing modernization grants within the jurisdiction of the metropolitan city or urban county; (2) commitments for public housing development within the jurisdiction of the metropolitan city or urban county; (3) Section 312 rehabilitation loans within the jurisdiction of the metropolitan city or urban county; (ii) the amounts received in fiscal year 1990 for Rental Rehabilitation Grants provided directly to a metropolitan city or urban county; and (iii) the full public housing operating subsidy required for payments to public housing agencies within the jurisdiction of the metropolitan city or urban county as calculated by HUD according to the Performance Funding System (PFS) formula for each year funds are distributed.

(2) The full hold harmless amount of each State shall be the sum of (i) the sum of the average during the five fiscal years ending prior to October 1, 1990, of (1) commitments for public housing modernization grants to any public housing agency within the State which is not within the jurisdiction of a metropolitan city or urban county; (2) commitments for public housing development to any public housing agency within the State which is not within the jurisdiction of a metropolitan city or urban county; (3) section 312 rehabilitation loans within nonentitlement areas of the State; (ii) the amounts received in fiscal year 1990 for (1) rental rehabilitation grants provided directly to the State; and (2) commitments for Section 202 housing for the elderly and handicapped within the State; and (iii) the full operating subsidy required for payments to public housing agencies within the State which are not within the jurisdiction of the metropolitan city or urban county as calculated by HUD according to the Performance Funding System (PFS) formula for the fiscal year in which funds are to be distributed.

(3) During the fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993, each entitlement grantee shall receive the full hold harmless amount computed in accordance with paragraph (1) and each State shall receive the full hold harmless amount computed in accordance with paragraph (2). In the fiscal years 1994, 1995, and 1996, the hold harmless allocations will be phased out for grantees whose basic grant amount is less than their hold harmless amount. In fiscal year 1994, such grantees will receive their basic grant amount plus two-thirds of the difference between their hold harmless amount and their basic grant amount. In fiscal year 1995, such grantees will receive their basic grant amount plus one-third of the difference between their hold harmless amount and their basic grant amount. In fiscal year 1996, each grantee shall receive the basic grant amount computed under paragraph (1) or (2).

(4) During the first three years in which funds are distributed under this Act, a grantee's basic grant amount will be phased in for grantees whose basic grant amount exceeds its hold harmless amount. In fiscal year 1991, such grantees shall receive the greater of one-third of the full basic grant amount or the hold-harmless amount. In fiscal year 1992, such grantees shall receive the greatest of two-thirds of the full basic grant amount, the hold-harmless amount, or the fiscal year 1991 grant. In fiscal year 1993, such grantees shall receive the full basic grant amount computed under the program formula.●

By Mr. WILSON:

S. 2505. A bill to provide grants for identification and treatment of substance abuse by pregnant and post partum women, for identification, treatment, and foster care placement of substance-abused infants, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

SUBSTANCE ABUSE DURING PREGNANCY ACT

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, there is a plague sweeping the Nation—A crisis of epidemic proportions.

Its effects are felt in America's inner cities. It has arrived in suburbia. From California to New York, rural communities are in its grasp.

It has taken our Nation's hospitals hostage, strained the child welfare system beyond capacity, and left our schools struggling to cope.

Its impact is so heinous as to render hundreds of thousands of innocent children impaired for life.

Perhaps most disconcerting is that its long-term ramifications are not yet known.

Mr. President, this plague—this scourge is maternal substance abuse during pregnancy.

For those who persist in the delusion that abuse of drugs and alcohol is a victimless act, let them walk through a neo-natal intensive care ward full of babies innocently addicted to crack of PCP or alcohol.

Each year, over 375,000 pregnant addicts give birth to drug abuse infants. Thousands more are born each year suffering from alcohol exposure. Present projections holding firm, 4 million substanced exposed births will occur by the turn of the century.

We simply cannot sweep this problem under the rug and hope it will go away.

Each day that we fail to act means 1,000 more of our children will live literally the life of the damned.

If not reason, then compassion surely compels us to take action.

Each child has the right to enter this world with every break going for him or her. This must be our primary goal, not a secondary objective.

The legislation I am introducing today, the substance abuse during Pregnancy Act, properly focuses national attention on the most vulnerable or our children.

First, my bill will increase inpatient, outpatient, and residential treatment funding for substance abusing pregnant addicts from $30 million to $200 million in fiscal year 1991.

Early treatment can limit irreversible damage. At a minimum, it can save lives.

Yet Federal treatment resources have been sorely lacking. So much so that the Federal Government has only been able to fund outpatient treatment programs.

Mr. President, please don't misunderstand me.

I do not wish to leave the impression that outpatient services cannot assist addicts in kicking their habits. Some are very successful. Indeed, outpatient programs which I have visited in California have great success stories to tell.

But research shows that the fiercely addictive and destructive nature of crack cocaine demands a much more rigorous treatment approach—the kind which involves round-the-clock, comprehensive care in a residential setting.

According to Dr. Herbert Kleber, Deputy Director for Demand Reduction of the National Drug Control Policy, "Pregnant addicts are often among the most reluctant to seek treatment. Female addicts especially those who are pregnant must be pushed * * * to stop their behavior."

Residential treatment programs offer us the best opportunity to provide these addicts that push.

Residential treatment does not come without cost.

Infinitely greater, however, are the human and economic costs to society if we fail to provide that treatment.

Mr. President, equally important to providing treatment services is ensuring pregnant addicts get into treatment.

The first step to treatment is the identification of a drug or alcohol dependency. Early detection greatly improves our chances for healthy deliveries.

Our Nation's health care professionals have failed to recognize the signs of addiction. One of the most commonly missed diagnoses in obstetric and pediatric medicine is drug and alcohol use during pregnancy.

Essentially, our frontline in the battle against substance abuse is not prepared to fight. Nurses, doctors, and other health care professionals have not received appropriate training.

To educate health care professionals in identifying high-risk pregnant women for referral to drug and alcohol treatment services, my legislation establishes a $25 million training program.

Funds could be utilized to provide training to existing health care personnel, and more importantly, to educate future professionals as they receive their medical training.

Mr. President, as substance abuse during pregnancy escalates, the demand for child welfare services also spirals upward.

Sadly, crack use so destroys maternal instinct that mothers abandon their newborns in hospitals.

As a result, hospitals have been turned into temporary resting stops on the way to foster care. Major metropolitan areas report as many as 50 percent of crack babies are sent into the foster care system.

Mr. President, I submit they are the lucky ones.

The lack of available and capable foster families trap far too many of these fragile souls in the abusive home environment which lead to their impairment at birth.

Increased resources and training for foster parents who accept the placement of substance abused infants are critical to providing the kind of caring, supportive home which can lead to greater success.

Accordingly, the legislation authorizes $40 million for a new grant program to increase foster care placements of substance abused infants.

From specialized training and recruitment of foster parents to financial incentives to meet the added costs of caring for substance abused infants, all activities authorized would expand our pool of qualified foster care families.

But even with expanded treatment opportunities, improved early detection of addiction by health care providers, and enhanced recruitment of foster care families, far too many substance abused infants still fall through the cracks.

To help fill remaining gaps, we must assist the child welfare system to better identify substance abused infants and children.

That means additional training for child welfare workers. But it also means greater cooperation among social service agencies.

In one community over eight agencies may touch the life of a substance abused infant, yet, often times, not one will assume the responsibility for the welfare of the child as a whole.

Greater communication and collaboration can remove obstacles to getting each child the support he or she requires and deserves.

My legislation authorizes $40 million both to encourage better coordination between child welfare services and other social service providers and to train child welfare personnel in meeting the special needs of substance abused infants.

Mr. President, we are in great need of additional information about the actual impact maternal substance abuse during pregnancy will have upon our health, educational, and support service systems.

My legislation requires studies to assess the total number of infants born substance abused in the United States and the medical, economic, and social costs associated with maternal substance abuse, as well as to evaluate the developmental disabilities of children exposed to drug and alcohol abuse during pregnancy.

Our Nation's schools face a crisis in the classroom.

Relatively little is known about the developmental needs of substance abused children. Many exhibit violent and disruptive behavior which requires a great amount of time, energy, and attention by special education teachers.

Finally, Mr. President, to more accurately detect maternal substance abuse during pregnancy, my legislation requires a study to develop alternative substance abuse testing and screening techniques.

Current urine toxicology screening methods have proven woefully inadequate in detecting drug and alcohol abuse during pregnancy. Clever addicts often alter test results by remaining clean 48 hours before a prenatal visit.

If we are to limit the damage inflicted by maternal substance abuse during pregnancy, we must develop more effective alternatives testing to urine toxicology screening.

Mr. President, the legislation I have outlined is purposefully broad in scope, and I do not deny it represents a significant investment in our Nation's future.

However, after taking into consideration the costs of not acting, both in terms of human suffering and the tax dollars which will be required to care for the 4 million substance-abused infants presently expected in the next decade, I am confident that my colleagues will take this important step to help end the tragedy of maternal substance abuse during pregnancy.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

S. 2506. A bill to provide for liability for transfers of oil between a vessel and a facility; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

OIL TRANSFER LIABILITY ACT

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to ensure that everyone involved in transferring oil to and from barges and ships will take all possible care in preventing oil spills and the environmental damage these accidents cause.

On the morning of Wednesday, February 28, a barge owned by Eklof Marine Corp. was loaded with No. 6 fuel oil at Exxon's Bayonne terminal facility. The barge had what was called an undetected leak, caused by a hole the size of a basketball. When the tanker was filled, the oil poured right out into the water. As I saw myself when I visited the site, the hole was clearly visible on the side of the vessel.

Although Exxon pumped oil into a barge with an easily visible hole in its side, and pumped long enough to dump 27,000 gallons of oil into the waters of the Kill van Kull, Exxon is unlikely to be held liable for the spill. The barge owners alone will bear responsibility under existing law. By examining the barge before loading, or by shutting down pumping more quickly, Exxon could have prevented or minimized the spill. I believe they should share responsibility for the accident. Indeed, it is outrageous that under existing law they may escape liability. Neither the House or Senate versions of the Comprehensive Oil Spill Liability and Compensation Act, currently in conference, would solve the problem.

Mr. President, if we do not hold both vessels and shore facilities liable for spills that occur during the transfer of oil, we will never get these companies to take all possible care when handling oil. Oil is a hazardous material. We have witnessed the devastating effects is has on beaches, bays, rivers, and wetlands. Everyone involved in the handling of oil must be held accountable to prevent accidents.

The legislation I am introducing will do just that. This bill will hold both shore facilities and vessels liable for spills occurring during oil transfers—whether the leak occurs from the vessel or from the shore facility. If either party can demonstrate that they could have done nothing to prevent or reduce the size of the spill, then they can avoid liability. By moving closer to a strict liability standard during the risky oil transfer operations, this legislation will help ensure that all parties do everything in their power to prevent spills. In the end, the issue is how we make everyone more careful.

The change from current law will increase incentives for shore facilities to ensure that the vessels they fill are seaworthy, and for vessel operators to ensure that the shore facilities at which they call are safely run. The broader liability standard will encourage everyone to take precautions to avoid accidents. Although no legislation we could pass would prevent all future accidents, this legislation represents a significant step toward avoiding them, and will mean greater care and more protection for our fragile environment.●

By Mr. COATS:

S. 2507. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for the establishment of a family drug treatment grant program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

FAMILY DRUG TREATMENT GRANT PROGRAM

● Mr. COATS. Mr. President, today I introduce the Family Drug Treatment Grant Program to provide demonstration grants encouraging the development of comprehensive family drug treatment programs and social work follow up for individuals in such programs. The intent of these grants is to include family members in the treatment of individual substance abuse, recognizing that this treatment may entail the systemic treatment of the entire family.

The genesis for this legislation stems from a hearing on adolescent drug abuse held in May 1989, before the Senate Subcommittee on Children, Families, Drug and Alcoholism. As the ranking Republican on this subcommittee, I had the privilege to invite Dr. Robert Lewis, a professor in the Department of Child Development and Family Studies at Purdue University. Dr. Lewis testified before the subcommittee about some of the exciting results which he and his colleagues at Purdue have received from a treatment model they have developed which includes family members. A 5 year, $1 million grant from the National Institute on Drug Abuse was the funding source for the development of this model.

To paraphrase testimony given by Dr. Lewis, the treatment model helps the therapist understand an abuser's family and the environment where his abuse took place. Many treatment specialists have found such background knowledge essential when treating an addict. Too often individual substance abusers have been isolated from a major cause of their addiction. Such treatment in isolation often proves unsuccessful because when the recovering addict is placed back into his or her family environment, the sources of tension often resurface. In short, the addict is once again exposed to the emotional stress that contributed to his initial drug use. The result is often a new cycle of addiction and treatment.

Family treatment models treat both the family as a unit and the individual. They recognize that addiction and abuse by one member of the family is often related to a breakdown in family communications and cohesion. The therapy, according to Dr. Lewis, generally attempts to:

(a) decrease a family's resistance to drug treatment; (b) redefine drug use as a family problem; (c) re-establish appropriate parental influence; (d) interrupt dysfunctional sequences of behavior; (e) assess the interpersonal function of drug abuse; (f) implement change strategies consistent with the family's interpersonal functions; and (g) provide assertion training skills for both the adolescent and siblings to resist peer pressures to engage in chemical abuse.

The drug treatment family model actually brings parents, spouses, siblings, and other family members directly into the treatment of the patient. Only 10 years ago few treatment models fully involved family members. But today family therapy is the treatment of choice for many therapists in drug treatment. Moreover, a large body of research has been conducted substantiating the success of this approach. This research verifies what, in many ways, is common sense: the addiction of one family member may directly contribute to the addiction of another. A family member may use drugs to gain attention, as is often the case where an adolescent feels neglected by his parents. Moreover, or a family member may turn to drugs to escape family problems like unemployment or domestic violence.

In short, the bonds of family love can be used to work for successful drug treatment, just as family weakness can contribute to abuse. Thus, because there is often an interaction between directions and meaningful relations, effective family therapy may be used to reduce or eliminate individuals addictive behaviors.

Funds under the demonstration projects authorized by this legislation may be used to establish or assist comprehensive family drug treatment programs that include detoxification, medical attention, intensive family therapy, individual therapy, social work follow-up, and the education or training of treatment personnel. The legislation further requires that the data gained from these demonstration projects be disseminated to State and local agencies involved in drug treatment.

Both NIDAL and the Office of Treatment Improvement within the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration [ADAHMA] have stated that, to the best of their knowledge, no other Federal grants or legislation promoting a family therapy approach is currently in place. While different treatment models may be more appropriate in some situations, I am convinced that the substantial research already conducted on family therapy treatment models justifies these demonstration grants.

In fiscal year 1991, there will be more than a $300 million increase in new Federal funds for drug treatment. We must ensure that this money is spent wisely, not only out of fiscal prudence, but more importantly because of the waste of human life which results when ineffective treatment programs continue to be used without challenge. These grants can help make our families allies, not enemies, of effective drug treatment, and I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2507

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FAMILY DRUG TREATMENT.

Subpart 2 of part D of title v of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290cc et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 549. FAMILY DRUG TREATMENT GRANT PROGRAM.

"(2) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish, and the Assistant Secretary of Health shall administer, a program to provide demonstration grants to eligible entities to enable such entities to provide comprehensive family drug treatment programs and social work follow up for individuals in such programs.

"(b) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section an entity—

"(1) shall be a teaching hospital, or a community mental health center that has staff affiliations with a teaching hospital; and

"(2) shall submit an application to the Assistant Secretary of Health in accordance with subsection (c).

"(c) APPLICATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an eligible entity shall submit an application to the Assistant Secretary of Health at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulations require.

"(2) ASSURANCES.—An application submitted under paragraph (1) shall contain—

"(A) a description of the proposed use of the grant;

"(B) an assurance that the trustee and medical board (or other individual or board that is equivalent to a trustee or medical board) of the entity has approved the use of the grant as described in subparagraph (A);

"(C) a description of the plans that the entity has developed to gain State and local public and private support for the programs developed or assisted with the grant;

"(D) an assurance that the entity will conduct follow-up evaluations of the programs developed or assisted with the grant and a publication of the results of such evaluations in professional journals; and

"(E) any other additional information that the Assistant Secretary may require.

"(d) USE OF FUNDS.—An entity that receives a grant under this section shall use amounts received under such grant to establish or assist comprehensive family drug treatment programs that include—

"(1) detoxification activities;

"(2) medical attention and procedures;

"(3) intensive family therapy;

"(4) individual therapy;

"(5) social work follow-up activity; and

"(6) the provision of education or training to individuals to enable such individuals to provide services of the type described in paragraphs (1) through (5).

"(e) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—

"(1) MAXIMUM NUMBER AND AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—The Assistant Secretary of Health shall award 10 grants under this section and each such grant shall not exceed $300,000.

"(2) TERM OF GRANT.—A grant made under this section shall be for a term of not to exceed 3 years.

"(3) GRANTS PER STATE.—The Assistant Secretary of Health shall not make a grant to more than one entity in a State.

"(f) PROVISION OF DATA.—Data concerning evaluations conducted by the entity, as required under subsection (c)(2)(D), shall be provided to media agencies within the State that the entity operates in, as well as to State and local agencies that are involved in drug related activities.

"(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section $3,000,000.".●

S. 2508. A bill to strengthen public involvement in soil and water conservation policy and program implementation throughout the United States; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

NATIONAL SOIL AND WATER CONSERVATION FOUNDATION ESTABLISHMENT ACT

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to establish a National Soil and Water Conservation Foundation. The purpose of this legislation is to strengthen public involvement in soil and water conservation activities throughout the United States by encouraging a partnership between the public and private sector for the promotion and support of soil and water conservation programs.

The conservation of our soil and water resources represents one of the most pressing needs facing our Nation today. According to some estimates, annual soil losses due to erosion now exceed the dust blown days of the 1930's when prolonged drought and poor conservation practices caused much of the Nation's topsoil to blow away. The Department of Agriculture estimated in a recent study that, at current rates of erosion, crop yields in some Midwestern States could fall by about one-third in the next 50 years. Erosion rates in certain parts of the Nation have been estimated at up to 70 times the acceptable levels, causing agricultural production to suffer as well as choking our streams, lakes, and estuarine waters with sediment.

Equally serious is the condition of our water resources. Water is not an unlimited resource, as the massive drought of 1988 dramatically illustrated. Our ground and surface waters are being increasingly threatened by wasteful extraction, drought, excessive demands and a whole host of environmental impacts including saltwater intrusion, leaking underground storage tanks, acid rain, hazardous waste disposal, soil erosion, sewage contamination, nonpoint pollution from agricultural chemicals, and destruction of aquifer-replenishing wetlands. Despite a 15-year effort to upgrade water quality, fully one-fourth of the Nation's waters still do not meet standards for drinking and many other uses. These complex problems threaten to have greater consequences for future generations of Americans if they go unchecked.

Fostering a conservation ethic and increased cooperation between the public and private sector will be essential for devising and implementing strategies to maintain our natural resource base. Unfortunately, the public is not generally aware of existing Federal soil and water conservation policies and programs and the needs under which they arise. Likewise, the public needs to be better informed of soil and water conservation practices that contribute to improvements in soil and water quality, quantity, and management. In addition to the public's need for information, the national soil and water conservation infrastructure itself needs support from the private sector—along with current public funding—in order to assure proper protection of our soil and water resources.

In one effort to respond to the need for Federal coordination of conservation efforts, Congress created the Soil Conservation Service. Through this agency, technical assistance is provided to producers who wish to plan, install, and maintain conservation practices. My legislation would create the National Soil and Water Conservation Foundation to work along with the Soil Conservation Service and organizations such as the National Association of Conservation Districts, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the Soil and Water Conservation Society, and environmental groups, coordinating public and private efforts in the national conservation movement.

The primary responsibility of the Foundation would be to foster a stewardship ethic among the public to protect the soil and water resources on non-Federal lands in the United States. The Foundation would be authorized to receive, accept, and administer private gifts of property for the benefit of the Soil Conservation Service and to further the conservation and management of soil and water resources. With budget restrictions continually reducing the ability of the USDA Soil Conservation Service to address soil and water conservation problems, the need for such support is clear. Among other activities, the Foundation would permit private sector fundraising for programs to educate the public about soil and water conservation issues and practices. In addition, the Foundation would help encourage dialog between the private sector, conservationist individuals and organizations concerning various soil and water conservation issues.

The Foundation established by this legislation is modeled on two very successful programs—the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Foundation and the National Parks Foundation—established in previous Congresses. Similar to these other foundations, the National Soil and Water Conservation Foundation would be a charitable, nonprofit corporation. It would be administered by a Board consisting of 15 members appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, who are educated in the principles and practices of soil and water conservation. The legislation is budget neutral in that private, not appropriated funds, would be used. I ask that the text of the bill be printed in the record immediately following my statement.

Mr. President, our soil and water resources are the lifeblood of our Nation and the conservation of these resources is in the interest of every American. The National Soil and Water Conservation Foundation provides a means for the American people to actively participate in protecting and improving these resources. I urge swift approval of this legislation.●

By Mr. PRYOR (for himself, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. PRESSLER, and Mr. SHELBY):

S. 2509. A bill to improve the nutrition of elderly Americans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

FEDERAL FOOD EFFORT FOR THE ELDERLY AND DISABLED ACT

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, assuring a nutritionally adequate diet for low-income elderly and disabled persons is a matter of concern to all Americans. These vulnerable individuals frequently suffer from medical conditions exacerbated by poor nutrition. In fact, it has been estimated that 65 percent of all elderly persons admitted to a hospital have a serious nutritional problem.

At particular risk are those elderly and disabled persons who live alone and may have insufficient funds to prepare wholesome meals. According to a 1987 study by the Commonwealth Fund Commission, 43 percent of all elderly persons who live alone have income within 150 percent of the poverty line.

Several Federal programs, including food stamps, various commodity distribution systems, and Older Americans Act nutrition services, combat malnutrition, and hunger among the elderly and disabled. From my vantage point as chairman of the Special Committee on Aging and as a longstanding member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, I have had a unique opportunity to view these programs in operation. Today, I am introducing legislation which will improve the ability of these programs to serve the needy elderly and disabled.

Entitled "The Federal Food Effort for the Elderly and Disabled," or FEED for short, this bill is cosponsored by seven of my colleagues, including Senators BRADLEY, BURDICK, PRESSLER, and SHELBY of the Aging Committee and Senators CONRAD, FOWLER, and HEFLIN of the Agriculture Committee. If enacted, FEED will improve Federal food assistance programs in the following ways:

Exclude all Medicare premium payments from the definition of "available income" for purposes of calculating Food Stamp eligibility and benefits. Under current law, the Food Stamp Program counts these premiums, which are deducted from beneficiaries' Social Security checks, as money available for purchasing food. Moreover, only 12 percent of elderly Food Stamp households take advantage of the currently authorized medical expense deduction;

Require States to issue Food Stamp coupons by mail to all persons who reside in rural areas. The long distance between many potential recipients' homes and the nearest Food Stamp office can be a barrier to participation in the Food Stamp Program by rural elderly and disabled persons;

Streamline the mechanism through which senior nutrition programs may receive commodity products by offering States the option of obtaining entitlement commodities through the National Commodity Processing Program [NCP]. Under current law, congregate and home-delivered meals programs may receive only bonus commodities through NCP; and Require the Comptroller General to examine the effectiveness of the Social Security Administration's program to assist Social Security and Supplemental Security Income applicants in filing Food Stamp applications. Many advocates have expressed concern over the operation of this program.

I am pleased that several senior citizens' organizations have expressed their support for FEED, including the National Association of Nutrition and Aging Services Programs [NANASP], Families USA, American Association of Retired Persons, Older Women's League, National Council on Aging, and National Council of Senior Citizens.

I urge my colleagues to support FEED and help battle hunger and malnutrition among elderly and disabled Americans.●

By Mr. THURMOND:

S.J. Res. 298. Joint resolution to provide for the erection of a memorial in the Arlington National Cemetery to honor U.S. combat glider pilots of World War II; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

MEMORIAL TO HONOR COMBAT GLIDER PILOTS OF WORLD WAR II

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a joint resolution authorizing the construction of a World War II Glider Pilots' Memorial in Arlington National Cemetery. This year marks the 50th anniversary of the U.S. Army Airborne and what better way to commemorate this occasion than through honoring the glider pilots with a memorial. In 1981, 1983, and most recently in 1985, I introduced similar measures in the Senate.

Mr. President, today there are approximately 1,500 survivors of the 6,000 combat glider pilots trained for action during World War II. Gliders were used to land men and material behind enemy lines during the airborne invasions of Sicily, Burma, Normandy, southern France, Holland, Luzon, and Wessel, Germany. Gliders were also used to resupply the surrounded 101st Airborne Division during the division's gallant defense of Bastogne. The casualty rate among these glider pilots was approximately 35 percent. The use of gliders in the Bastogne operation was one of the best kept secrets of World War II.

I think it is appropriate, therefore, that a memorial of some type be erected in the Arlington National Cemetery. The memorial need not be an expensive one, but merely one which pays proper tribute to these pilots and to the contributions and sacrifices they made for our Nation.

Under the provisions of the resolution, the memorial is to be erected at a site in Arlington Cemetery designated by the Secretary of the Army, and the design will be subject to the approval of the Commission on Fine Arts. Construction will be paid for by private funds, including funds provided by the National World War II Glider Pilots Association. Maintenance of the memorial will be the responsibility of the Secretary of the Army.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to give this resolution early consideration.

By Mr. JOHNSTON:

S.J. Res. 299. Joint resolution to designate the period October 1, 1990 to October 1, 1991 as the "Year of the Wetlands"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

YEAR OF THE WETLANDS

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation requesting the President to proclaim October 1, 1990 through October 1, 1991 as the "Year of the Wetlands." It is my hope that this designation will serve as the needed focal point for furthering our understanding about this complex, highly diversified national resource, much as the Year of the Ocean helped focus the Nation's attention on and furthered our understanding of the role oceans play in all our lives.

We in Louisiana have long understood the importance of wetlands to our environmental and economic health. Blessed with more wetlands—including forested or inland as well as coastal wetlands—than any other State, Louisiana also has faced greater threats to and losses of these important areas than any other State. In 1900, we had over 14 million acres of wetlands. Today, we have only half as many. Some 37 percent of our forested wetlands have disappeared since 1937 and today we are losing between 40 and 60 square miles of our coastal wetlands each year. We understand the serious impact these losses, if unchecked, will have on the 5 million migratory birds and many other species of wildlife, and we also recognize the importance of these areas to water quality, flood control, erosion control, recreation, our food supply including the production of commercial seafood, energy production and many aspects of our daily lives.

It is important to recognize that conserving our dwindling wetlands base is important to us all. Wetlands are a national resource: they exist in every State and in every State these important areas are in decline. According to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, at the time of the European settlement of the North American continent the lower 48 States had over 200 million acres of wetlands. By 1975, less than half remained. And over the past two decades, this loss has continued at an average rate of 400,000 to 500,000 acres annually. During these same two decades a variety of public and private programs have been devised to preserve these areas. In Louisiana alone, for example, over $120 million in Federal appropriations have been spent to acquire particularly valuable and threatened wetlands wildlife habitat. State and private efforts have also helped us acquire and restore critical habitat areas. But acquisition alone is not the answer. Three out of four acres of wetlands in the continental United States are in private ownership. If we are truly serious about reversing the trend of increasing losses, we must develop incentives for landowners to manage and conserve this valuable resource. The key to this is increasing our awareness and understanding of the importance of wetlands to our future, and developing an understanding of what steps we can take individually as well as nationally to conserve this resource.

The need to increase public awareness was recognized by the National Wetlands Policy Forum in 1988 in the final report that group issued. Indeed, the report found that "Much of the public, including many landowners, continues to lack information and understanding of the functions and value of wetlands, the appropriate techniques for protecting and managing them, the economic and other advantages of protecting them, and even where such information can be found." The report recommended that a major outreach effort be undertaken by public and private groups to expand education programs about the location of our wetlands, the diversity of values these areas hold, and how to protect them. For such an outreach program to be effective, we must have a central focal point. Designating October 1, 1990 through October 1, 1991 as the Year of the Wetlands will provide that focus and will give us the impetus to get started in earnest.

The next decade presents us with opportunities and challenges as we seek a coordinated, thoughtful strategy for the environment. No challenge is greater than finding a way to conserve our national wetlands resources, and we will only be successful if we understand the complexity of this issue and develop a consensus on the need to protect this resource. This resolution and the opportunities it presents can help us take the first step in meeting this challenge.●

By Mr. PACKWOOD:

S.J. Res. 300. Joint resolution to designate September 1990 as "Jewish Community Center Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

JEWISH COMMUNITY CENTER MONTH

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, Jewish community centers throughout the United States provide cultural, social, educational, and recreational services to over 1 million Americans of Jewish heritage. During this century, these centers fostered the preservation of the Jewish identity, provided important assimilation services to immigrants from Eastern Europe, and continue to be a unique cultural center for young Jewish men and women. Because of this important contribution to our Nation's Jewish community, I offer this resolution to designate September 1990 as "Jewish Community Center Month."●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 47

At the request of Mr. CRANSTON, the name of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] was added as a cosponsor of S. 47, a bill to prohibit discrimination on the basis of affectional or sexual orientation, and for other purposes.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 104

At the request of Mr. BIDEN, the name of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 104, a concurrent resolution expressing the concern of the Congress regarding the Birmingham Six, and calling on the British Government to reopen their case.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 114

At the request of Mr. DASCHLE the name of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON], was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 114 a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress regarding action by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation to restore confidence in the Federal Crop Insurance Program pending consideration of legislation on the Crop Insurance Program.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 123—REGARDING CIVIC EDUCATION

Mr. PELL submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

S. CON. RES. 123

Whereas a study conducted on behalf of the Hearst Corporation found that nearly 50 percent of Americans cannot identify the original purpose of the Constitution and nearly 60 percent of Americans do not know what the Bill of Rights is;

Whereas a study conducted on behalf of the Hearst Corporation found that nearly half of all Americans thought that the Marxist credo "From each according to his ability, to each according to his need" is found in the Constitution;

Whereas a recent survey conducted by the Center for Civic Education found that—

(1) 7 out of 10 students did not know that in the American political tradition, governments derive their authority from the consent of the governed;

(2) 2 out of 3 students did not know the essential differences between constitutional and dictatorial governments; and

(3) 6 out of 10 students did not know the meaning of due process of law;

Whereas a recent study conducted by the Educational Testing Service on behalf of the Congress of the United States found that—

(1) only 19 percent of all high school seniors tested could write an extensive description of the President's responsibilities;

(2) only 39 percent of all high school seniors tested knew that presidential candidates were nominated at conventions;

(3) 62 percent of all high school seniors tested did not recognize the opening passage of the Declaration of Independence;

(4) only 25 percent of all eighth grade students tested knew why Columbus sailed for the Americas; and

(5) only 36 percent of all fourth grade students tested knew that Abraham Lincoln's stated goal in the Civil War was to preserve the union;

Whereas young people do not have a clear understanding of the history and principles of the Constitution, the Bill of Rights and the rights and responsibilities of citizenship;

Whereas it is only through education that our youth can acquire the understanding of, and reasoned commitment to, the principles of constitutional democracy that the Founders recognized as the essential prerequisite of a free government; and

Whereas the young people of the Nation are entrusted with the responsibility of safeguarding the future of American constitutional democracy: Now therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Senate encourages State governments, local governments and local education agencies to adopt a comprehensive curricular program for each of the grades kindergarten through 12 which—

(1) provides elementary and secondary students with a thorough knowledge of the history and principles of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights; and

(2) fosters civic competence and civic responsibility.

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, today I am introducing a simple, yet significant concurrent resolution which underscores the importance of promoting effective civic education in our Nation's schools.

We have just witnessed the closing of a decade in which millions of people in nations long-suffering from repressive regimes have toppled those regimes in their quest for freedom and democracy. We who have benefited from the longest lasting constitutional democracy in history should rejoice in the overthrow of those tyrannical governments and in the recognition by their citizens of the importance of the principles and the values of free government we have cherished for so long.

We must wish the people of these nations well in the difficult tasks that lie ahead. And, we must do everything we can to ensure the success of their endeavors to establish governments based upon the principles of constitutional democracy.

At the same time, we must not neglect the perpetual need to pass on to our youth the idea that only a high level of understanding of the fundamental principles and values of our democratic institutions leads to a sound commitment to their preservation and improvement. In fact, it was to promote the principles and values of American citizenship among the people that Founding Fathers such as Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Rush argued for the establishment of public schools in the United States. As Horace Mann said, "Schoolhouses are the republican line of fortifications." And, John Dewey wrote of the particular demands that the democratic form of government places upon the citizenry to be informed in order to vote responsibly and participate effectively in that government.

It is ironic that while those who have experienced repressive regimes throughout the world are clamoring for the right to vote in free elections, in the United States only one out of five eligible voters under the age of 30 is taking advantage of that very right. With so few young people understanding the purposes and importance of our Constitution, it is clear that we must do all we can to turn the tide of political apathy into a wave of active and informed participation. It is only through a sound civic education program that we can achieve this ideal.

Mr. President, this resolution encourages those closest to the practices of the schools and communities—the state and local governments and the local educational agencies—to adopt comprehensive curricula to provide our country's youth, the leaders of tomorrow, with a thorough grounding in education for citizenship. Those curricula should cover the basic ideas and philosophies of the Founding Fathers, how the Constitution was written, how and why our government was organized, how our system of checks and balances and separation of powers operates, and how the Constitution protects an individual's basic rights. Furthermore, those curricula should emphasize the role and responsibilities of the citizen in a democracy. With such a course of study the citizens of this country will understand the principles for which our Nation stands and has so often fought to preserve. It is these principles which illumine and bind together this diverse Nation, and which shine as a beacon to the oppressed around the world.

Additionally, as it was clearly shown in the Educational Testing Service's recently released report, the students of America possess only a superficial knowledge of U.S. history and civics. I am discouraged to learn of such deficiencies with respect to the future leaders of our Nation and their understanding of those who have preceeded them. This is a failing which I find to be both alarming and in need of immediate attention. Moreover, these findings make the introduction of this resolution all the more important, for they amplify a problem which I feel needs to be dealt with head on.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 274—RELATIVE TO THE 50TH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE DEANS OF THE SCHOOLS OF PUBLIC HEALTH

Mr. DURENBERGER (for himself, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. SIMON, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. COATS, and Mr. INOUYE) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

S. RES. 274

Whereas the faculty and staff of the 24 schools of public health in the United States have been responsible for significant beneficial advancements in the delivery of health care and public health services in the United States and around the world;

Whereas the faculty and staff of such schools have played a vital role in such specific health advancements as the development of the iron lung, the prevention of polio, the eradication of smallpox, the discovery of Vitamin D, and the development of strategies to control hookworm, sexually-transmitted diseases, and other infectious diseases;

Whereas the faculty and staff of such schools have provided important insights into the prevention of typhus, trachoma, malaria, and numerous other diseases;

Whereas the faculty and staff of such schools continue at the forefront of public health and medical science by conducting advanced research on techniques to control and prevent the spread of AIDS, on the dangers of hazardous waste, and on the harmful effects of indoor air pollution;

Whereas the contributions to better health made by the faculty and staff of the schools of public health are a direct result of the cooperative, far-sighted efforts of the deans of such schools;

Whereas April, 24, 1990, is the date of the 50th annual meeting of the deans of the schools of public health in the United States; and

Whereas the schools of public health in the United States and their deans deserve recognition for their valuable, ongoing contributions to health care and disease prevention around the world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate congratulates the deans of the 24 schools of public health in the United States on the occasion of the 50th annual meeting of the deans of those schools, April 24, 1990, and hereby expresses its appreciation for the many outstanding beneficial contributions made by such schools in the fields of public health and medical research during the past 50 years.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate is directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to each of the deans of the schools of public health in the United States.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise today to submit a resolution to express the sense of the Senate to reaffirm our support for and our appreciation of the Nation's 24 schools of public health. I am pleased to be joined in this resolution by Senators BOSCHWITZ, SIMON, THURMOND, SARBANES, RIEGLE, LEVIN, HOLLINGS, COATS, and INOUYE.

Mr. President, America's schools of public health are one of our great national resources. The faculty of the research staffs of these schools have made unparalleled contributions to improving the health of American citizens and people all over the world. I want to mention just a few of their contributions.

The development of the iron lung, along with research to lead to the eradication of polio came from our schools of public health. Playing the critical role in the complete eradication, for the first time in the history, of a worldwide public health scourge, smallpox, came from our schools of public health. The discovery of vitamin D, and the development of strategies to eradicate hookworm and other infections, including sexually transmitted diseases. These schools of public health have also provided important insight into the prevention of typhus, trachoma, malaria, and numerous other diseases.

Today these schools are looking to the future needs of the people of the world. Their faculty are working on projects such as AIDS prevention and control techniques, and on identifying and dealing with a host of newly recognized risks such as hazardous waste and indoor air pollution.

Mr. President, later today I will chair a hearing to document the important breakthroughs of the past and the potential future accomplishments of our 24 schools of public health. The hearing coincides with the 50th anniversary of the Annual Meeting of the Deans of the School of Public Health. The witnesses are each nationally recognized and internationally recognized deans of the leading schools of public health.

Mr. President, I invite my colleagues to join me in recognizing these accomplishments by attending today's hearing on the "Contributions of Academic Public Health of Disease Prevention and Health Promotion."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a listing of the witnesses and the subject matters for the hearing.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Witnesses who will testify at the April 24 hearing on "Contributions of Academic Public Health to Disease Prevention and Health Promotion" are nationally recognized Deans of the leading Schools of Public Health. From my own state of Minnesota, Dr. Robert Kane of the University of Minnesota will discuss the problems surrounding long-term care; Dr. Palmer Beasley of the University of Texas will update us on disease prevention and immunization; Dr. Jacob Brody of the University of Illinois at Chicago will discuss clinical aspects of public health; Dr. Harvey Fineberg of Harvard University will review the process of health promotion; Dr. Jerrold Michael of the University of Hawaii will inform us about public health activities in the Pacific Basin; Dr. June Osborn of the University of Michigan, who is also Chair of the National Commission on AIDS, will apprise us of the realities of AIDS prevention and control; Dr. Winona Vernberg of the University of South Carolina will address environmental health issues; and Dr. Donald Henderson of the Johns Hopkins University, who is also President of the Association of Schools of Public Health, will conclude the hearing with a progress report on the Congressionally mandated Medical Prevention Demonstration Projects.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

NONDISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT FOR PRODUCTS OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF HUNGARY

ARMSTRONG AMENDMENT NO. 1510

Mr. ARMSTRONG proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 1594) to extend nondiscriminatory treatment to the products of the People's Republic of Hungary for 3 years, as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert:

That headings 9902.29.01 and 9902.37.07 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States (19 U.S.C. 3007) are each amended by striking out "12/31/90" and inserting in lieu thereof "12/31/92".

PACKWOOD AMENDMENT NO. 1511

Mr. PACKWOOD proposed an amendment to amendment No. 1492 proposed by him to the bill H.R. 1594, supra, as follows:

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

TITLE V—FEDERAL TIMBER EXPORT RESTRICTIONS

SEC. 501. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Federal Timber Export Restrictions Act of 1990".

SEC. 502. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to make permanent the current Federal policy of restricting the export of unprocessed timber from Federal lands;

(2) to review and revise Federal policy with respect to the ability of timber operators to acquire and mill Federal logs in lieu of exported private logs;

(3) to promote the conservation of forest resources consistent with Federal resources management plans;

(4) to help relieve the critical short supply conditions in industries which rely on an adequate timber supply; and

(5) to effect measures aimed at meeting those objectives in conformity with the obligations of the United States under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

SUBTITLE A—FEDERAL LANDS

SEC. 511. RESTRICTIONS ON EXPORTING OF UNPROCESSED TIMBER.

Notwithstanding the Act of April 12, 1976 (16 U.S.C. § 616, 44 Stat. 242), and except as permitted by section 513 or 514 of this Act, no person who acquires, either directly or indirectly, unprocessed timber originating from Federal lands shall—

(1) export such timber from the United States;

(2) sell, trade, exchange, or otherwise convey such timber to any other person for the purpose of exporting such timber from the United States; or

(3) use, or assist or conspire with any other person to use, such timber in substitution for unprocessed timber originating from private lands exported or to be exported from the United States.

SEC. 512. INFORMATION GATHERING.

(a) REQUIREMENTS OF PERSONS ACQUIRING UNPROCESSED TIMBER.—In accordance with regulations issued under section 523, each person who acquires, either directly or indirectly, unprocessed timber originating from Federal lands shall report the disposition of such timber to the Secretary concerned on a quarterly basis.

(b) REQUIREMENTS OF PERSONS CONVEYING UNPROCESSED TIMBER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with regulations issued under section 523, each person who sells, trades, exchanges, or otherwise conveys to another person unprocessed timber originating from Federal lands shall identify in writing the origin of such timber to that other person.

(2) ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.—The person to whom such timber is conveyed under this section shall submit to the Secretary concerned, in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe—

(A) written acknowledgment of receipt of the written identification of the origin of such timber under paragraph (1), and

(B) a written agreement to comply with all of the prohibitions in section 511.

(c) REPORTS BY SECRETARIES TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary concerned shall, on the basis of the information received under subsection (a) and (b), report annually to the Congress on the disposition of unprocessed timber originating from Federal lands administered by that Secretary. The Secretary of Agriculture may meet this requirement by including such information pertaining to the National Forest system as part of the annual report required by section 8(c) of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 (17 U.S.C. 1606(c), 88 Stat. 478).

SEC. 513. EXCLUSIONS.

(a) EXEMPTION FROM PROHIBITION ON SUBSTITUTION.—The prohibitions contained in section 511 shall not apply to a person if, before the unprocessed timber otherwise subject to the prohibitions is obtained—

(1) that person applies to the Secretary concerned, in such form as is presecribed in regulations issued by such Secretary, for an exemption of the prohibitions contained in section 511;

(2) that person demonstrates in such application that the Federal lands from which the unprocessed timber will be obtained are not located in the same geographic area—

(A) from which that person exports any other unprocessed timber from private lands; or

(B) from which that person has exported unprocessed timber from private lands in the preceding 5-year period; and

(3) the Secretary concerned grants the exemption.

(b) DETERMINATION OF GEOGRAPHIC AREAS.—The Secretary concerned shall determine the boundaries of geographic areas for purposes of subsection (a)(2) in accordance with the procedures for rulemaking set forth in section 553 of title 5, United States Code. The Secretary shall consider whether persons other than the applicant for the exemption engage in commerce in unprocessed logs between the two geographic areas involved. Such commerce shall be sufficient to deny the exemption. Any such determination shall be reviewed at least once in each 2-year period. The Secretary concerned shall publish notice of such review in the Federal Register, and shall give the public an opportunity to comment on such review.

SEC. 514. SURPLUSES.

(a) DETERMINATIONS BY SECRETARIES.—The prohibitions contained in section 511 shall not apply to specific quantities of grades and species of unprocessed timber from Federal lands which the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior determines to be surplus to domestic manufacturing needs.

(b) PROCEDURES.—Any determination under subsection (a) shall be made in regulations issued in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code. Any such determination shall be reviewed at least once in every 3-year period. The Secretary concerned shall publish notice of such review in the Federal Register, and shall give the public an opportunity to comment on such review.

SUBTITLE B—SANCTIONS; DEFINITIONS; EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 521. PENALTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any person who violates this title or any implementing regulation, or counsels, procures, solicits, or employs any other person to take an action in violation of this title or such regulation, shall be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary concerned of not more than $10,000 for each violation.

(b) KNOWING VIOLATIONS.—Any person who knowingly violates this Act, or any implementing regulation, shall be assessed a civil penalty by the Secretary concerned of not more than $1,000,000 or three times the gross value of the unprocessed timber involved in the violation, whichever is greater.

SEC. 522. DEBARMENT.

If the Secretary concerned finds, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing on the record, that a person has violated this Act or any regulation issued to carry out this Act, such Secretary shall issue an order prohibiting that person from entering into any contract for the purchase of unprocessed timber from any Federal lands for a period of not more than 5 years. Such a person shall also be precluded from taking delivery of Federal timber purchased by another party for the period of debarment. Such an order shall be subject to review in an appropriate District Court of the United States.

SEC. 523. REGULATIONS.

Within 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior shall, in consultation, each prescribe new coordinated and consistent regulations to implement this Act on lands which they administer.

SEC. 524. DEFINITIONS.

When used in this title, the term—

(1) "acquire" means to come into possession of, either directly or indirectly through a sale, trade, exchange, or other transaction;

(2) "affiliate" of another person described in paragraph (4) of this section is a person that—

(A) controls or has the power to control such other person,

(B) is controlled by or is subject to control by such other person, or

(C) with such other person is controlled by or is subject to control by, a third person, except that in determining whether persons are affiliates, all appropriate factors shall be considered including, but not limited to, common ownership, common management, and contractual relationships:

(3) "Federal lands" means lands administered by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Defense, and located west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States, excluding lands held in trust by the United States for the benefit of any Indian tribe or Indian individual:

(4) "person" means an individual partnership corporation association or other legal entity and shall include subcontractors and any subsidiary, parent company, or other affiliate;

(5) "private lands" means lands held or owned by a person but does not include lands held or owned by the United States, a State or political subdivision thereof, or any other public agency;

(6) "Secretary concerned" means the Secretary administering the Federal lands from which the unprocessed timber is removed;

(7) "substitution" is the practice of purchasing or otherwise obtaining timber from Federal lands west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States while at the same time exporting, or selling for export, timber from private lands west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States; and

(8) "unprocessed timber" means timber as defined by the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 523 of this Act.

SEC. 525. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), this title shall take effect 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, but shall not apply with respect to timber removed pursuant to timber sale contracts entered into before the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) EXEMPTION FROM SUBSTITUTION.—Section 511(3) shall take effect 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act. During such 1-year period, section 511(3) shall not apply with respect to the acquisition of unprocessed timber from Federal lands by a person who, in accordance with regulations of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, demonstrates to the appropriate official that the Federal lands are in a tributary area as defined by the current regulations.

TITLE VI—STATE LANDS

SEC. 601. RESTRICTION OF EXPORTS OF UNPROCESSED TIMBER FROM STATE LANDS.

(a) AUTHORITY TO PROHIBIT EXPORTS OF UNPROCESSED TIMBER.—The Secretary of Commerce shall prohibit or otherwise restrict the exportation from the United States of any unprocessed timber harvested from land owned or administered by a State (or any political subdivision thereof), based on the recommendation of the Governor of that State, but only if the Governor of that State has certified that the State supports such prohibitions or restrictions based on—

(1) a statute enacted by the State legislature;

(2) a statewide voter initiative; or

(3) an existing State statute.

This subsection shall not apply if the Secretary of Commerce finds that there are not in effect restrictions on the exportation from the United States of unprocessed timber from land owned or administered by the Federal Government.

(b) ABILITY OF SECRETARY TO REMOVE OR MODIFY EXPORT RESTRICTIONS.—The Secretary of Commerce may remove or modify such prohibitions or restrictions on the exportation from the United States of any unprocessed timber harvested from land owned or administered a by State (or any political subdivision thereof) if the Governor of such State modifies that State's certification consistent with the requirements of paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (a).

(c) SUBSTITUTION.—Each State may adopt provisions with respect to substitution.

SEC. 602. DEFINITIONS.

When used in this title, the term—

(1) "State" means any of the several States located west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States:

(2) "State lands" means lands of a State or any political subdivision thereof; and

(3) "unprocessed timber" means timber as defined under the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 523 of this Act.

SEC. 603. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This title shall take effect upon the date of enactment of this Act.

"(II) all preclearance services,

for which the recipients of such services are not required to reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury, and

"(ii) to the extent funds remain available to make reimbursements under clause (i), in providing salaries for full-time and part-time inspectional personnel and equipment that enhance customs services for those persons or entities that are required to pay fees under paragraphs (1) through (8) of subsection (a) (distributed on a basis proportionate to the fees collected under subsection (a)(1) through (a)(8)).

Funds described in clause (ii) shall only be available to reimburse costs in excess of the highest amount appropriated for such costs during the period beginning with fiscal year 1990 and ending with the current fiscal year.

"(B) Reimbursement under this paragraph shall be made at least quarterly. To the extent necessary, reimbursement of appropriations under this paragraph may be made on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury and adjustments shall be made in subsequent reimbursements to the extent that the estimates were in excess of, or less than, the amounts required to be reimbursed.

"(C)(i) For fiscal year 1991 and subsequent fiscal years, the amount required to fully reimburse inspectional overtime and preclearance costs shall be projected from actual requirements, and the excess of collections over such projected costs for such fiscal year shall be used as provided in subparagraph (A)(ii).

"(ii) The excess of collections over inspectional overtime and preclearance costs (under subparagraph (A)(i)) reimbursed for fiscal years 1989 and 1990 shall be available in fiscal year 1991 and subsequent fiscal years for the purposes described in subparagraph (A)(ii), except that $30,000,000 of such excess shall remain without fiscal year limitation in a contingency fund and, in any fiscal year in which receipts are insufficient to cover the costs described in subparagraph (A) (i) and (ii), shall be used for—

"(I) the costs of providing the services described in subparagraph (A)(i), and

"(II) after the costs described in subclause (I) are paid, the costs of providing the personnel and equipment described in subparagraph (A)(ii) at the preceding fiscal year level.

"(D) At the close of each fiscal year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit a report to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives summarizing the expenditures for which reimbursement has been provided under subparagraph (A)(ii)."

(c) EXTENSION OF FEES.—Paragraph (3) of section 1303(j) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(j)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) Fees may not be charged—

"(A) under paragraphs (1) through (8) of subsection (a) after September 30, 2005, or

"(B) under paragraphs (9) and (10) of subsection (a) after September 30, 1991.".

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE FOUNDATION OF WESLEY HOMES HONORS DEAN RUSK

● Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I want to commend the Foundation of Wesley Homes, now celebrating its 25th anniversary, for its extraordinary service and commitment to the elderly citizens of Georgia.

Wesley Homes is a not-for-profit organization that runs 10 residential facilities throughout Georgia offering services to seniors. The foundation also operates the only freestanding geriatric hospital in the country, conducting research on Alzheimers and Parkinsons disease and making other important contributions to the quality of long life.

The foundation will soon hold a Heroes, Saints and Legends Dinner at the Atlanta Botanical Gardens to honor older Georgians whose vigorous and productive lives have enhanced our community. Among the honorees are Eleanor Richardson, now retiring from a valuable career in public service in the Georgia House of Representatives; painter Constantine Chatov, who came from the Soviet Republic of Georgia to become one of the leading artists of the southern State of Georgia; and Judge Elbert Tuttle, retired from the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

All of these Georgians deserve our thanks and praise. However, I was asked to speak at the dinner about the remaining honoree, Dean Rusk. As we all know, Dean Rusk has done Georgia proud. He has returned to Georgia and now holds a chair at the University of Georgia Law School. He has also provided many years of faithful service, with the greatest of humility, to our Nation. That is why I wanted to share my thoughts on one of our most valuable citizens with my colleagues.

I would like to include my remarks for the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

TRIBUTE TO DEAN RUSK BY SENATOR WYCHE FOWLER, JR., APRIL 27, 1990

In an age in which selfishness and greed have actually been promoted as positive values, Dean Rusk stands out as a paragon of the classic values of loyalty and dedication to a larger cause.

His service to his country in some of the most dangerous and difficult times, from the Cuban Missile Crisis to the Vietnam War, is well known to all Americans. During his tenure as Secretary of State, guiding this nation's foreign policy under two presidents, he revealed himself a man of rare character—who put public service first, even above himself, and who believed that the nation must be guided by a sound and steady moral compass.

In keeping to these principles at all costs, Dean Rusk demonstrated extraordinary endurance and unmatched personal integrity. All of us who have followed Dean Rusk in the path of public service owe a debt—in fact, all citizens of a self-sustaining republic owe a debt to his example. I know I do.

Dean Rusk is fond of saying that this is a wonderful country that would allow a freckle-faced boy from Cherokee County to be its Secretary of State. All I can say is that we are fortunate to have him back in Georgia, and I want to thank all of you at the Foundation of Wesley Homes for giving me this opportunity to extend my regards to one of my personal heroes.●

CEREMONY COMMISSIONING THE I/N TEK CONTINUOUS COLD MILL, NEW CARLISLE, IN

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Inland Steel Industries on the day of its commissioning of I/N Tek, the world's most advanced facility for the finishing of cold-rolled steel sheet. This new facility, located near New Carlisle, IN, is a joint venture between Inland Steel and Nippon Steel Corp.

This new plant incorporates the latest pollution control systems. It should be able to meet the new, stringent environmental guidelines contained in the 1990 Clean Air Act passed recently by the Senate. The computer-controlled facility integrates five separate operations, cutting the processing time for a coil of steel from 12 days to less than 1 hour. Not only is the process incredibly efficient, but it creates a finished product with superb surface quality, dimensional characteristics, and consistency.

The $525 million New Carlisle facility is state-of-the-art. It was modeled after Nippon's Hirohita plant in Japan, and is the first of its kind in the United States. The fully staffed facility will employ 230 highly skilled Hoosier workers, many of whom will train at the Hirohita facility before returning to Indiana to apply their skills. When I/N Tek is fully operational, it will serve home appliance, steel furniture, automotive, and other specialized industries.

Inland Steel is the fourth largest steelmaker in the Nation and is an important part of the Indiana economy. From humble beginnings, the Indiana Harbor Works facility in East Chicago now encompasses 1,900 acres and has produced more than 300 million tons of steel since its founding in 1902. Inland's commitment to its work force has always been strong. It was on the cutting edge of those companies seeking to provide a safe and healthy work environment in the early 1900's, a concern that continues to this day.

I am pleased to see Inland Steel taking this step toward greater efficiency and quality through advanced technology. The combination of advanced technology and Inland's commitment to human achievement will stand it in good stead to face the competitive challenges of the global economy which lie ahead in the next century.

I regret that I was unable to attend the commissioning ceremony personally because of the Senate's schedule. However, I want to extend my heartiest congratulations to all of those involved in making the I/N Tek facility a reality.

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the latest budget scorekeeping report for fiscal year 1990, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report was prepared consistent with standard scorekeeping conventions. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Budget Act.

This report shows that current level spending is under the budget resolution by $3.5 billion in budget authority, and over the budget resolution by $4 billion in outlays. Current level is under the revenue floor by $5.2 billion.

The current estimate of the deficit for purposes of calculating the maximum deficit amount under section 311(a) of the Budget Act is $114.6 billion, $14.6 billion above the maximum deficit amount for 1990 of $100 billion.

The report follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, April 23, 1990.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached reports shows the effects of Congressional action on the budget for fiscal year 1990 and is currently through April 20, 1990. The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of the 1990 Concurrent Resolution on the Budget (H.Con.Res. 106). This report is submitted under section 308(b) and in aid of Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, and meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of Section 5 of Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, the 1986 first concurrent resolution on the budget.

Since my last report, dated April 2, 1990, there has been no action that affects the current level of spending or revenues.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER.

CBO WEEKLY SCOREKEEPING REPORT FOR THE U.S. SENATE, 101ST CONG., 2D SESS. AS OF APR. 20, 1990

TRIBUTE TO DR. ORVIL A. CHILDS, MAGNOLIA, AR

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I rise to pay tribute to Dr. Orvil A. Childs of Magnolia, AR, who will be 80 years young on May 1.

Mr. Childs is known throughout Arkansas for his contribution to agriculture. One of the first five inductees to the Arkansas Agriculture Hall of Fame, Dr. Childs is the retired chairman of the Southern Arkansas University agriculture department. Upon his retirement in May 1975, Orvil Childs Day was celebrated at SAU with several hundred friends and former students in the audience. Today the agriculture building on the SAU campus bears his name.

Childs was born in Wickes, Polk County, and attended a one-room country school in north Howard County. In 1927 he entered high school at Magnolia A&M [SAU] and also attended junior college there from 1930 to 1932.

After graduating from Oklahoma State University with a degree in agriculture in 1934, Childs taught vocational agriculture at Cale and then at Magnolia High School. He also worked briefly for the Purina Co. before he was asked by C.A. Overstreet, then president of Magnolia A&M to become chairman of the agriculture department.

A recipient of numerous awards and citations for his work in agriculture, in 1973 the Progressive Farmer magazine recognized Childs as "Man of the Year in Service to Arkansas Agriculture."

I want to join the scores of friends, former students and colleagues, and other individuals devoted to excellence in agriculture in wishing him a happy 80th birthday.●

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, today, April 24, 1990, marks the 75th anniversary of the Armenian genocide. On this day, Armenians and their friends around the world gather in remembrance of the tragic events of 1915–23, to honor the memory of the 1.5 million people of Armenian ancestry who lost their lives. I was a strong supporter of Senate Joint Resolution 212, which commemorated this day, and I was disappointed by our failure as a body to bring the resolution to a vote. Mr. President, I believe we owe it to ourselves as a nation to stand up for human rights and to learn from the past.

The facts of the Armenian genocide are well documented and clear. By order of the Ottoman Government, many thousands of Armenian citizens were ruthlessly killed in and around their eastern Anatolian villages. Hundreds of thousands more were forcibly deported to Syria—marched into the desert and abandoned without food, water, or shelter, prey to the elements and to the violence of hostile Turks, Kurds, and Arabs. This tragedy of history has left deep scars, and not just in the hearts and memories of its survivors. This tragedy has scarred all of us who must continue to fight the denials that the massacre ever occurred.

Our century has witnessed too many instances of man's brutality against man. We can, and we must, promise ourselves and our children that such atrocities will not be allowed to continue, wherever they occur. We can, and we must, take heed of the errors of the past.

I am honoring April 24, 1990, then, with a mixture of sadness and hope. I grieve for the memory of the victims and the pain of the survivors. But I hope that by remembering this day, by recognizing and condemning the depths to which humanity can sink, we can help to guarantee a fair and tolerant future. I invite my colleagues and all Americans to join me in meeting the challenge.●

THE EVENING POST OF CHARLESTON, SC, ENDORSES CONGRESSIONAL TERM LIMITATION

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, often Congress becomes wrapped up in the beltway existence to the extent that it is virtually deaf to the cries of its constituency. That is both the case and the cause with the concept of term limitation: Congress has become deaf to its constituency.

Term limitation is not the first concept the public has embraced that Congress has ignored. Rather, it is the culmination of a long period of neglect of the constituency. Constituents now hope that by limiting terms, new blood will flow into Congress and revitalize it. They are right. One cannot stay in Congress long and maintain one's idealism. We need fresh ideas and political courage unfettered by the election survival mentality, to deal with the critical problems of our time. We need term limitation.

Mr. President, I ask that an editorial from the Evening Post of Charleston, SC, appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks. The Evening Post, like many smaller newspapers that reflect their readership, has heard the public voice for term limitation. I urge all Senators to do the same.

The editorial follows:

[From the Charleston (SC) Evening Post, Feb. 23, 1990]

TWELVE'S THE LIMIT

Two former South Carolina congressmen, Thomas F. Hartnett, a Republican, and Ken Holland, a Democrat, are part of a national, bipartisan movement to limit the terms of the body in which they once served. They are doing their fellow-countrymen a good turn.

Mr. Hartnett, it should be remembered, said after his first term that service should be limited and chose not to run again after six years in office. The proposed constitutional amendment being pushed by Americans to Limit Congressional Terms (ALCT) would put a 12-year ceiling on service in the House and Senate.

"Everyone thinks seniority is the game here, but it's not. It's the majority party," Mr. Hartnett told a reporter as he prepared to leave Washington in 1986. Newcomers, he said, quickly learn that "all you can do is vote. And with this outdated system in Congress, you can't even get recognized. You quickly learn that you can't make much difference. Therefore, most of the congressmen who stay up here quit trying and become involved with their own survival—getting re-elected."

Unfortunately, because members of Congress can spend so much time campaigning and have access to so many big bucks, getting re-elected has become a way of life. In recent years, House incumbents have had a 98 percent return rate. Worse still, the power of incumbency has led to an increasing number of free rides. Two years ago one in five House members had no opposition. Since single-member election districts have made incumbents more opposition-proof, that same pattern has begun to emerge in the state Legislature.

Finally it would seem that a movement to force a reform of the system from the outside has caught fire. Pollsters are finding that the people understand, even if the politicians don't, that once they become career legislators they become unrepresentative of those they are supposed to represent.●

REGULATION OF AGRICULTURAL AND FINANCIAL FUTURES

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, for the past several months a debate has taken place over whether to transfer certain jurisdiction over the Nation's futures markets from the Commodity Futures Trading Commission to the Securities and Exchange Commission. The CFTC has exclusive jurisdiction over all futures trading, but some now argue that its jurisdiction should no longer include so-called securities derivative contracts.

The Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry has scheduled a hearing for May 8 to explore this issue. In advance of that hearing, I wish to share with the Senate a letter I received from the agriculture community. This letter represents the united view of 18 leading agricultural groups on the issue of CFTC jurisdiction. It expresses their unanimous support for a strong, independent CFTC with exclusive jurisdiction over all futures markets.

Unfortunately, this jurisdictional debate has stalled critical legislation to strengthen and reauthorize the CFTC. At this point, there is no clear consensus on how to resolve matters of jurisdiction and it appears this debate will continue at length. In the meantime, this important legislation, the toughest reform package in decades, languishes. It is time we separate the issues of jurisdiction and reauthorization, allowing us to move forward on legislation to reauthorize the CFTC.

That is not to say jurisdiction issues should go unresolved. These are serious issues that merit careful thought and consideration. But, I urge we resist the temptation to reach a quick fix solution to the complicated issues involved. Jurisdiction issues should be examined on their merits, without being pressured by the urgent need to move forward with the reforms contained in our reauthorization bill.

The letter follows:

MARCH 27, 1990.

DEAR SENATOR LUGAR: As representatives of all segments of U.S. agriculture, we are writing to express our deep concern with the jurisdictional dispute between the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) and the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). In recent weeks, some have asserted that the SEC, not the CFTC, should have jurisdiction over some financial futures contracts, most notably stock index futures. We believe this could ultimately jeopardize agricultural futures.

Why are we as agricultural groups worried about stock index futures? Because the CFTC regulates exchanges, not just contracts. Agricultural and financial futures are traded on the same trading floors, subject to the same rules, by the same people. Dual agency jurisdiction over futures exchanges, under two different laws, would be a prescription for regulatory chaos.

We support a strong, independent CFTC with exclusive jurisdiction over futures contracts. A strong CFTC would be strengthened even more under the Senate's pending reauthorization legislation.

We vigorously oppose weakening the CFTC by splitting-off some of its jurisdiction. We are equally opposed to the idea of making the CFTC a division of the SEC. Such a combination would be unworkable because the SEC has no experience in agricultural futures or their regulation. The SEC would undoubtedly seek to superimpose its view of stock market regulation on futures markets. Although futures markets have a 140-year tradition of providing efficient price discovery and hedging mechanisms, these are roles and functions that are fundamentally different from the markets the SEC now oversees. For example, a recent NEW YORK TIMES article quotes SEC Commissioner Edward Fleischman as saying, "We really don't understand those markets, it is a different world. You tell me what we would do differently. I would venture to say nothing."

The efficient, fair pricing of agricultural products would inevitably suffer under a change in jurisdictional authority. We should not leave the impression we always agree with the CFTC, but we value the expertise developed under current oversight authority during nearly 70 years of futures market regulation. For these reasons, we strongly urge Congress to maintain an independent CFTC.

Sincerely,

American Cotton Shippers Association, American Farm Bureau Federation, American Oat Association, American Soybean Association, Millers' National Federation, National Association of Wheat Growers, National Cattlemen's Association, National Corn Growers Association, National Cotton Council, National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, National Farmers Organization, National Farmers Union, National Grain and Feed Association, National Grain Sorghum Producers Assoc., National Grain Trade Council, National Grange, National Pork Producers Council, North American Export Grain Association.●

CHILDREN A PRIORITY?

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, as the Senate Budget Committee tackles the job of drafting a Federal budget, it's a good time for all of us to take a long, hard look at priorities. In my weekly column I write for newspapers in my State, I've addressed what I think should be near the top of our list: children. I ask to have the column reprinted in the RECORD.

The column follows:

CHILDREN A PRIORITY? NOT IN BUDGET

It has often been said that if you want to see a nation's future, look at its children.

To much too great an extent we are a society ignoring the needs of millions of our children.

Sen. David Boren of Oklahoma, chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, which looks at threats to our nation around the world, recently said, "The greatest security threat our nation faces is our failure to develop our human resources." He was testifying on a bill to encourage more bright young people to go into teaching.

Almost one-fourth of the nation's children live in poverty.

Those children who live in poverty are the ones who need the opportunity for a quality education the most, but they are the least likely to get it.

When the nation's budget is adopted later this year, the final figures are likely to be close to $300 billion for defense, against a threat that is dramatically reduced, and about $23 billion for education, an overwhelming problem.

About 2 percent of the budget will go for education.

Are we doing anything to lift our citizens in poverty, so their children have a better chance?

Very little.

The latest census figures show that the gap between the rich and the poor in this country is the widest ever recorded.

The wealthiest 5 percent of the nation's population got 17.2 percent of the nation's income last year.

The wealthiest 20 percent got 44 percent of the income; the middle-income families—66 percent of our population—got 51 percent of the income, the lowest share ever reported; and the poorest 20 percent of the population got 4.6 percent of the income.

And which group had the most children per family? The poorest.

Our infant mortality rates are among the highest of any industrial nation, even though we are the world's wealthiest nation.

Half of those who live in homeless shelters in New York City are children. The average age: 6.

As many as one-third of the children in the nation under age 6 have never seen a dentist.

Unlike Japan and Western Europe, we have not made a national priority of education. And it shows.

I once was asked by a friend to speak at the commencement of the Scholl College of Podiatric Medicine in Chicago. Because he was an old friend, I agreed to do it. Suddenly the commencement was a week away, and I had never been to a foot doctor in my life. I knew nothing about that specialty. I started reading about Abraham Lincoln's foot doctor and other history.

But in my research something suddenly hit me. The State of Illinois is much more strict in its standards for those who handle our feet than for teachers, those who handle our children.

My guess is that podiatrists also earn much more.

I don't mean this disrespectful to podiatrists, but the contrast tells us something is wrong.

On top of everything else, we have saddled our children with a huge national debt that they will have to pay.

We have gone through a 10-year period of neglecting the most basic resource a nation has: Its children.

That has to change.

Policy makers must help change it. Parents must help change it.

All responsible citizens should help to arrest this drift.●

ALEX DIDIER, SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION'S MINNESOTA DISTRICT FINANCIAL SERVICES ADVOCATE OF 1990

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to say a few words about a fine business leader who has devoted many years assisting in the development and growth of small businesses. I am speaking of Alex Didier, former president and chief executive officer of First National Bank in St. Cloud, MN.

Mr. Didier has just been chosen as the Small Business Administration's Minnesota District Financial Services Advocate of 1990. Throughout his career in banking, he was a staunch supporter of small businesses and worked diligently with the Small Business Administration to see to it that his bank became a preferred lender. Through these efforts, he was able to establish an aggressive team of loan officers who understood and supported the needs of small business.

Mr. Didier espoused the entrepreneurial spirit that is so necessary to establishing and developing a small business. When you were a customer in Alex's bank, you were his partner. It was through his encouragement and support that many small businesses were able to prosper. His commitment to the community is being recognized today as he is chosen as the SBA Minnesota District Financial Advocate of 1990.

Mr. Didier retired from his position as president and chief executive officer at First American National Bank in July 1989. I want to congratulate him for the honor which he is receiving from the small business community and wish him the best in whatever he chooses to pursue in the future.●

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to note an important occasion being celebrated today: the 100th anniversary of the founding of the General Federation of Women's Clubs [GFWC], the oldest and largest volunteer women's organization in the world.

One hundred years ago today, a small group of women launched a movement that would touch communities across the Nation and around the world. From a handful of clubs providing a forum in which women could discuss issues of the day, the federation has grown to be an organization of 9,000 clubs with 400,000 members—all dedicated to education and volunteer community service.

During the past 3 years, the women's clubs donated more than 20 million hours and $31 million to a host of volunteer service projects ranging from care for the elderly, to youth suicide prevention, to wildlife conservation. This same dedication to volunteer service can be found at the many international women's clubs and their affiliates in more than 40 countries worldwide.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs has made significant and far-reaching contributions to our society over the past century. Some events in which the women's clubs have played an important role include: the enactment of our first child labor laws, passage of the Pure Food and Drug Act, establishment of the National Park Service, and creation of our public library system.

As a Rhode Islander, I am particularly proud to note that now serving as president of the GFWC is Barrington, RI, resident Alice C. Donahue. Mrs. Donahue is a dedicated leader whose volunteer activities include scouting and advocacy of arts, literacy efforts, and disabilities issues. Through her work in the women's clubs and other volunteer groups, she has made countless contributions to our State and to the Nation.

Mr. President, wherever we find women's clubs, we find capable, committed women working to direct local resources toward the most pressing needs of communities. Women's clubs members have helped—and I hope will continue—to meet the challenges and needs of our society.

I urge my colleagues in the Senate to join me in congratulating the General Federation of Women's Clubs on its first centennial. I wish all its members another happy and productive century of community service. Keep up the good work.●

WISCONSIN BADGERS ARE HOCKEY CHAMPIONS

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the achievement of the Badgers of Wisconsin. Earlier this month, the Badgers defeated Colgate 7-3 to win the NCAA championship of ice hockey.

This was the Badgers' fifth championship since 1973—a sure sign of an excellent tradition of talent and sportsmanship. The victory capped an outstanding season for the Badgers, who posted a record of 36-9-1.

In Wisconsin, we care about sports. And the Badgers owe a part of their record of excellence to their fans back home—who can turn even a hostile stadium into home field by their enthusiasm.

Hats off to the Badgers.●

SAE METHANOL CHALLENGE

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to a very unique and far-sighted event that took place in Detroit early this month, from April 5 to 8—the second annual SAE Methanol Challenge. This event deserves recognition for the role it has been playing in attracting attention to alternative fuels.

The internal combustion engine is well into its second century of existence. Despite the fact that it has been made to be increasingly efficient, the present rate of consumption has put tremendous pressure on the environment and is exacerbating our reliance on foreign sources for petroleum.

We do, however, have alternatives if we apply the proper imagination and resources to the task. For example, bountiful coal reserves exist in the United States—particularly in my State of West Virginia—that are not being utilized to their full potential as a source for transportation fuel. High-octane methanol formulas derived from natural gas or coal could alleviate urban smog, and the pressure on the country's oil reserves and on the economies of many States.

The Methanol Challenge is a competition that awards cash prizes to the best prototypes of a car that would run on methanol. Exhaust emissions and fuel economy are the principal factors considered in this 3-day contest. Each participating school received a car from General Motors and a small grant to cover the expenses of conversion. The organizers have made a very positive contribution to the development of the technology necessary for the mass production of cars utilizing methanol.

I congratulate the Society of Automotive Engineers and the Argonne Laboratory for the role they have played as organizers of this special event. Credit also goes to the sponsors: General Motors, the U.S. Department of Energy, and all of the others who have made this event possible.

I am also proud to acknowledge the pioneering role that West Virginia University has played in the challenge and in the development of innovative methanol technology. Dr. Nigel Clark and his team of engineers are a credit to West Virginia. I would especially like to applaud the talented young engineers from West Virginia University: Brian McGrath, Chris Santoro, George Utt, Byron Rapp, Pete Ganster, Phil Koloff, Erik Saab, Brian Kapinos, Dave Browning, Rob Nutter, Eric Van Brunt, Mike Rowe, Jim Webb, Mike Byers, and Charlie Bargeloh.

The State of West Virginia is in a particularly well-suited position to benefit from the development and eventual use of methanol. If, in the future, we move to substantial production of methanol, our natural gas and coal industries could benefit greatly.

The success of the Methanol Challenge in the past 2 years helps make the goal of mass production of methanol-burning cars in the near future viable. Millions of people throughout the world could benefit from this technology, including many in West Virginia. With public awareness and support for alternative fuels growing by the day, my hope is that we will make great strides soon in seeing the adoption of methanol for transportation fuel on a broad scale. As the chief author in the Senate of the Alternative Fuels Act of 1988, I am excited about the prospects for the future. And I again applaud the efforts of the people and organizations involved in the Methanol Challenge. I encourage everyone involved with the Methanol Challenge to continue their efforts to promote methanol. Our future rests on creative, new solutions to problems such as our excessive reliance on foreign energy sources, and the Methanol Challenge is one of many initiatives to bring about these solutions.●

APPOINTMENT BY THE REPUBLICAN LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announces, on behalf the Republican leader, pursuant to Public Law 96-114, as amended by Public Laws 98-33, 99-161, and 100-674, his appointment of Charles F. Smithers, of Connecticut, as a member of the Congressional Award Board.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

NATIONAL TRAUMA AWARENESS MONTH

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 224, designating National Trauma Awareness Month and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the joint resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 224) designating the month of May 1990, as "National Trauma Awareness Month."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the joint resolution we are considering today to designate the month of May 1990 as "National Trauma Awareness Month," will bring to the public's attention the enormity of the traumatic injury problems in the United States.

"Trauma" is the medical term for physical injury, either accidental or intentional, caused by motor vehicle accidents, falls, fires, household accidents, and violent crimes, among others. More people under the age of 45 die from trauma than any other single cause. Each year 60 million persons suffer a traumatic injury—8 million seriously. Of this number, 340,000 people are permanently disabled and 93,000 die.

Anybody who has lost a loved one or a friend through a trauma injury, or knows somebody who has suffered a serious traumatic accident, can testify to the grief, frustration, and sense of needless that such traumas can mean. In too many instances, the words "if only" accompany the news of traumatic injury or death. "If only he had worn his seatbelt," "If only we had the right instruments in the emergency room," or "if only she had not been able to get the top off of the poison."

This growing crisis can be addressed through prevention and implementation of comprehensive emergency medical systems. Much has already been accomplished through seat belt promotion and drunk driving awareness campaigns. Efforts to arouse public awareness must be increased.

Fortunately, we can make—as we have made—a difference in stemming the instances of devastating traumatic accidents, injuries, and deaths.

After Congress designated the months of May 1988 and 1989, as Trauma Awareness Month, organizations such as the American Trauma Society were able to mount campaigns in every State to educate our citizens about trauma, its implications, and what can be done to tackle it.

With the adoption of this resolution, we can again bring the necessary focus on a serious medical problem. I urge its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 224) and its preamble are as follows:

S.J. RES. 224

Whereas more than eight million individuals in the United States suffer traumatic injury each year;

Whereas traumatic injury is the leading cause of death of individuals less than forty-four years of age in the United States;

Whereas every individual is a potential victim of traumatic injury;

Whereas traumatic injury often occurs without warning;

Whereas traumatic injury frequently renders its victims incapable of caring for themselves;

Whereas past inattention to the causes and effects of trauma has led to the inclusion of trauma among the most neglected medical conditions;

Whereas the people of the United States spend more than $110,000,000,000 on the problem of trauma;

Whereas the problem of trauma can be remedied only by prevention and treatment through emergency medical services and trauma systems; and

Whereas the people of the United States must be educated in the prevention and treatment of trauma and in the proper and effective use of emergency medical systems: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May 1990 is designated as "National Trauma Awareness Month", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. GARN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NATIONAL TOURISM WEEK

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on Senate Joint Resolution 153.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the resolution from the Senate (S.J. Res. 153) entitled "Joint resolution designating the third week in May 1990 as 'National Tourism Week' ", do pass with the following amendments:

Page 1, in the first whereas clause, strike out "five million five hundred thousand jobs and indirectly employing another two million two hundred thousand Americans;", and insert "five million nine hundred thousand jobs;".

Page 1, in the second whereas clause, strike out "$313,000,000,000", and insert "$350,000,000,000".

Page 1, in the second whereas clause, strike out "6.4", and insert "6.7".

Page 2, in the first whereas clause, strike out "thirty-three million seven hundred thousand foreign travelers spend approximately $18,000,000,000", and insert "thirty-eight million three hundred thousand foreign travelers spend approximately $43,000,000,000".

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. GARN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

URGENT FAMINE SITUATION IN ETHIOPIA

FAMINE IN SUDAN

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Foreign Relations Committee be discharged en bloc from further consideration of Senate Resolution 270 and Senate Resolution 272 and that the Senate proceed to their immediate consideration en bloc; that the resolutions be agreed to en bloc; that the preambles be agreed to en bloc; and that the motions to reconsider the passage of these resolutions be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with the distinguished chairman of the Africa Subcommittee in offering these two resolutions on the crisis in the Horn of Africa.

Ethiopia and Sudan are now facing one of the largest humanitarian catastrophes of the past 40 years. Unless the administration moves swiftly to secure safe passage for food and medicine in the affected regions, up to 5 million lives could be lost. And tragically, in both countries, the impending famine is entirely avoidable. The food stocks exist and the international community has the capacity to deliver the assistance. But in Ethiopia and Sudan, the governments and the opposing rebels have placed military objectives far above humanitarian concerns.

Less than 6 years have passed since we last viewed the devastating footage of walking skeletons dying in the refugee camps of Ethiopia. The crisis is upon us once again, with even more devastating implications. In the northern Ethiopian provinces of Eritrea, Tigre, and Wello, some 3.5 to 5 million lives are endangered. Neither the Eritrean People's Liberation Front nor the Government of Ethiopia have acted in a responsible manner. In February the EPLF seized the Government-held port of Massawa, the key distribution point for humanitarian supplies in northern Ethiopia. The Government responded with aerial attacks on the port, which according to press reports, destroyed many of the storage facilities and food supplies.

But now, rather than focusing on the errors of the past months, we must direct our efforts to mobilize all available avenues for food distribution. In this regard, there is much that the Government of Ethiopia can and must do. Specifically, the Port of Massawa is vital for the transshipment of humanitarian supplies. The EPLF has offered to permit international relief agencies to operate in Massawa. So far, the Government of Ethiopia has rejected that offer. Three weeks ago, a senior delegation of the Ethiopian Government visited the Senate, and I pressed them on this point. They indicated a willingness to begin discussions on the opening of the port. I urge the administration to seize that offer immediately.

Absent any opening of Massawa, the single largest mechanism for delivering humanitarian supplies in the north is through cross-border channels from Sudan. That corridor has been slowed by Government bombing raids on the food convoys. The Government contends that it cannot distinguish the humanitarian convoys from other traffic that may have military objectives. Again, I urge the administration to pursue an agreement that provides the assurances sought by the Ethiopian Government, so that the level of supplies can be increased dramatically.

Second, there is a desperate need for supplies in the town of Makaele. So far, the Ethiopian Government has refused to permit an air resupply of Makaele, insisting rather that we should resupply the town of Asmara—where some 40,000 Ethiopian troops are stationed.

Finally, the Ethiopian Government has offered to expand the southern relief corridor, which routes supplies from the Port of Assab to the town of Dese. In recent days, this corridor has been improved, and much more food is being delivered than just 2 weeks ago. We must make every effort to ensure this route is expanded to its fullest capacity. However, we cannot permit the Ethiopian Government to substitute full cooperation on the southern route, for no cooperation on the other three corridors.

Mr. President, the Government of Ethiopia desperately seeks improved ties with the United States. That should come as no surprise. The brutal Communist dictatorship of President Mengistu is failing. As dramatic changes sweep across Eastern Europe, Mengistu is finding himself more and more isolated. This, no doubt, provoked his speech on March 5, 1990, when he pledged to pursue a mixed economy. But Mengistu must understand that there will be little to no support in the Congress for efforts to improve ties with Ethiopia as long as his government pursues policies that deliberately ignore the humanitarian crisis in Ethiopia. Any effort by his government to hold cooperation on relief hostage to a commitment on upgrading relations with the United States will merely deepen congressional cynicism toward his motives.

Mr. President, the situation in Sudan is a bit more hopeful. Two years ago, some 250,000 Sudanese starved to death because adequate food supplies were not delivered to the afflicted areas in the south. Last year, the international community mobilized, and under the auspices of Operation Lifeline Sudan a major famine was averted. The Bush administration can assume a great deal of credit for last year's success.

This year, we are confronted with another potential famine that will affect up to three-quarters of a million people. Last October, an informal cease-fire between the Government of Sudan and the opposing Sudanese People's Liberation Army [SPLA] broke down, and intensified fighting resumed. The following month, the Government of Sudan suspended all cooperation with humanitarian efforts to assist the people in the south. Humanitarian flights were suspended, and the privileges of most private voluntary organizations were revoked.

On April 4, I met with the U.S. Ambassador to Khartoum, and a senior official of the Sudanese Government. They informed me of a tentative agreement between the Government of Sudan and the SPLA, permitting the free passage of supplies. That agreement, known as Operation Lifeline Sudan II provides an important glimmer of hope. The proof of the agreement's importance will come through its implementation. It is incumbent on both the SPLA and the Government to comply with the safe passage commitments and permit the delivery of supplies in both Government-held and SPLA controlled territory.

Mr. President, the two resolutions before the Senate address these key points on both Ethiopia and Sudan. They are the very least that we can do. But they send an important message to the parties in both countries. We know the cause of the famine and we know how it can be averted. There is no time left for excuses, and there is no time for finger-pointing by the parties. These resolutions endorse concrete proposals that will avert a colossal catastrophe. Millions of lives are literally at stake.

The resolutions (S. Res. 270 and S. Res. 272) and their preambles are as follows:

S. RES. 270

Whereas famine threatens the lives of some three million five hundred thousand to five million people in the northern Ethiopian provinces of Eritrea, Tigray, and Wello;

Whereas the major cause of the famine is ongoing civil war;

Whereas all parties to the conflict have deliberately put military objectives above the food needs of innocent civilians;

Whereas cross-border feeding operations are insufficient to meet the desperate needs;

Whereas the northern corridor through the Eritrean Port of Massawa, currently held by the rebel Eritrean People's Liberation Front, is critical to relief efforts to feed some one million five hundred thousand people in need in rebel and government-held areas;

Whereas the Government of Ethiopia has refused to accept the offer made by the Eritrean People's Liberation Front to allow international relief access through Massawa; and

Whereas the relief operation along the southern corridor through Wello Province must be expanded to reach the one million four hundred thousand people estimated to be at risk there: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) all parties to the conflict in Ethiopia must put humanitarian needs above military goals and adopt an immediate ceasefire;

(2) cross-border feeding operations should be expanded to their fullest capacity;

(3) the Government of Ethiopia should permit the Port of Massawa to be opened immediately for the purposes of international relief operations;

(4) the President should encourage all parties to the conflict to adopt an immediate cease-fire;

(5) the President should impress upon all nations supplying military assistance to the parties in the conflict the importance of their role in facilitating a ceasefire;

(6) the President should impress upon the Government of Ethiopia the urgent need of allowing relief access through the Massawa Port and along the northern corridor;

(7) the President should encourage the United Nations to take a more prominent role in coordinating relief efforts in Ethiopia;

(8) the President should call on the Soviet Government to continue to respond to the war and famine in Ethiopia by exerting increased pressure on the Ethiopian regime to allow for the full utilization of all available relief corridors; and

(9) the President should encourage European, African, and other leaders to help facilitate a cease-fire and emergency relief efforts.

S. RES. 272

Whereas famine is a direct result of the ongoing civil war in Sudan;

Whereas the Government of Sudan and the Sudanese People's Liberation Army have used food as a political weapon;

Whereas two hundred fifty thousand Sudanese people, one-quarter of them children, died of famine in 1988;

Whereas Operation Lifeline Sudan, initiated by the United Nations in the spring of 1989, with strong support of the United States Government, saved the lives of thousands of Sudanese people through the delivery of one hundred ten thousand metric tons of food;

Whereas as many as seven hundred and sixty thousand Sudanese people, many of them in garrisoned government-held towns in southern Sudan are threatened with starvation;

Whereas the breakdown in October 1989 of the informal cease-fire and the resumption of intensified fighting hinder famine relief efforts by the international community;

Whereas, in November 1989, the Government of Sudan suspended all cooperation with humanitarian efforts to assist the people of southern Sudan; and

Whereas the Government of Sudan and the Sudanese People's Liberation Army have reached agreement on Phase II of Operation Lifeline Sudan: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is sense of the Senate that—

(1) the President should urge the Government of Sudan and the Sudanese People's Liberation Army to adopt an informal ceasefire in order to facilitate relief efforts;

(2) the Sudanese People's Liberation Army should immediately cease shelling of the garrison town of Juba;

(3) the Government of Sudan should not obstruct the activities of private voluntary organizations assisting with humanitiarian relief activities; and

(4) the President should encourage the Government of Sudan and the Sudanese People's Liberation Army to implement fully the agreement on phase II of Operation Lifeline Sudan.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as in executive session,

I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the protocol amending the Extradition Treaty with Canada—Treaty Document No. 101-17—transmitted to the Senate today by the President.

I also ask that the treaty be considered as having been read the first time; that it be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message of the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the Protocol signed at Ottawa on January 11, 1988, amending the Treaty on Extradition Between the United States of America and Canada, signed at Washington on December 3, 1971, as amended by an exchange of notes on June 28 and July 9, 1974. I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to the protocol.

The protocol amends the Extradition Treaty Between the United States and Canada, signed at Washington on December 3, 1971, as amended by an exchange of notes on June 28 and July 9, 1974. It represents an important step in improving law enforcement cooperation and combatting terrorism by excluding from the scope of the political offense exception serious offenses typically committed by terrorists; e.g., murder, manslaughter, kidnapping, use of an explosive device capable of endangering life or causing grievous bodily harm, and attempt or conspiracy to commit foregoing offenses.

The protocol will help to improve implementation of the current extradition treaty in several other respects. Most significant, the protocol substitutes a dual criminality clause for the current list of extraditable offenses, so that, inter alia, parental child abduction and certain additional narcotics offenses will be covered by the new treaty.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the protocol and give its advice and consent to ratification.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 24, 1990.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I would like, with the distinguished Republican leader present, to advise Senators of the schedule for tomorrow and Thursday in light of the events of today.

The Appropriations Committee has met and reported out a supplemental appropriations bill, which includes the aid to Panama and Nicaragua which the President has requested and has urged prompt action on.

It is my hope and my intention that we take up that appropriations bill tomorrow.

I personally would prefer to have attempted to complete action on it tomorrow. However, nine of our colleagues, I believe five Democratic and four Republican Senators, have been invited to join the Vice President in the delegation traveling to Nicaragua tomorrow to participate in the inaugural ceremony of Mrs. Chamorro, and I am advised by the distinguished Republican leader—and I will ask him momentarily to comment on it—that the administration encourages their participation

Nine of our colleagues do travel to Nicaragua for that purpose tomorrow, we obviously would not be voting on the Nicaragua package in their absence and therefore would be in a position to take it up tomorrow, debate it and then conclude debate and vote on it on Thursday.

That being the case, I have suggested to the distinguished Republican leader that the best way to proceed, particularly in view of the appropriate desire of several members to receive the legislation reported out by the Appropriations Committee and have a chance to review it before we take it up, is to have the Senate come in at 11, there be morning business for 1 hour, and then we recess from noon until 2. We have a caucus tomorrow at that time to discuss further campaign finance reform legislation. And then we come back at 2 and take up the supplemental appropriations bill, with the understanding it would not be voted on tomorrow. There would be debate on it tomorrow. Hopefully, if anyone has any amendments, they will be prepared to offer them, with the votes stacked to occur on Thursday.

I inquire of the distinguished Republican leader for his comments on this suggestion.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if the majority leader will yield, I think, first of all, it is accurate to say the administration does support the efforts by our colleagues to be present tomorrow. It is not an easy day's work. I believe they have to arise about 4 o'clock, leave about 5 a.m. and come back at 10 o'clock tomorrow night. So it is going to be a long, arduous day for our colleagues, and I certainly commend those on each side who expressed the willingness to make the trip.

But the majority leader is absolutely correct. I think the White House sees this as more than symbolic. It is important because we have been involved in debate on Nicaragua for a number of years, Members on each side. Some had different views. The point is the election is over. Mrs. Chamorro will be inaugurated, and we are there to show our support for the new government. So I think it is very important, and the White House does share that view.

With reference to the supplemental, obviously, that is also very important. The fact that it is pending and we are working on it I think indicates our good faith. The fact we will finish it hopefully on Thursday will be well received.

I am not in a position now to say we could take up the bill at 2 o'clock. I could not give consent. But I think it has been a reasonable request, by a couple of Members at least, to take a look at what the Appropriations Committee reports. I understand the Government Printing Office has been alerted so they can have copies available maybe by 10 or 11 o'clock in the morning. But I am hopeful that at 2 o'clock we can do that. If I learn something between, say, tomorrow morning and noon, I will certainly advise the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the distinguished Republican leader. My intention is to seek consent tomorrow morning, when we come in, between 11 and noon to go to the supplemental appropriations bill at 2 p.m. As my colleagues and the distinguished Republican leader know, any Senator may object and require the 2-day period. I hope no objection will be heard because we do want to proceed to it.

The fact is, of course, we have not met the President's original time schedule for action. But I hope we can now do it since we have finally had the other matters cleared away and the Appropriations Committee has acted. I think it would be, at least to some extent, symbolic that we had begun debate on it and were proceeding with it at the time the inauguration was occurring with the clear expectation that we would complete action on it on Thursday upon the return of the Senators who are part of the delegation.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader. We will be prepared to cooperate as much as we can tomorrow. I will contact the majority leader then between 11 and noon tomorrow.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M.; MORNING BUSINESS; RECESS FROM 12 NOON TO 2 P.M.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 11 a.m., Wednesday, April 25; that following the time for the two leaders there be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each. I further ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess from 12 noon until 2 p.m. on tomorrow, Wednesday, April 25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess under the previous order until 11 a.m. on tomorrow, Wednesday, April 25.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 8:50 p.m., recessed until Wednesday, April 25, 1990, at 11 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SPEECH OF DR. JAMES O. MASON IN PERTH, AUSTRALIA

HON. RICHARD J. DURBIN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, Dr. James O. Mason, the Assistant Secretary for Health in the Department of Health and Human Services, gave a significant speech on April 5, 1990, at the Seventh World Conference on Tobacco and Health in Perth, Australia. He spoke about the policies of the transnational tobacco companies, who are selling their deadly products with such success that two and one-half million people die every year around the world from the effects of tobacco use.

Tobacco companies have succeeded in addicting 1 billion people to their products. In other words, one out of every five humans on planet Earth is hooked on tobacco.

As we have gained some success in this country in recent years in our effort to discourage tobacco use, the cigarette companies have turned to overseas markets. Dr. Mason notes that when other countries have the temerity to follow the example of the United States and prohibit tobacco advertising in the broadcast media, the tobacco companies are even given the assistance of U.S. trade agencies to force open other nations' markets and media so that they can push their products.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Mason's comments are a fair characterization of the current state of tobacco promotion and use in the world today. I commend his remarks to my colleagues and ask that they be reprinted in the RECORD.

ADDRESS BY JAMES O. MASON, M.D., DR. P.H., ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR HEALTH, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

I regret I cannot address you in a language common to everyone in this room.

But I am honored to have been asked to speak to you about our common cause.

Whatever the language of the scores of speakers at this Seventh International Conference on Tobacco and Health, we're all saying the same thing:

"No smoking!"

You're all here to convince the "Marlboro Man" to get off his high horse and into an honest line of work . . .

I'm here to help make that happen . . .

You're here to tell the world that you're four-square against the only mass consumer product that kills people when used as intended.

I'm here to help spread that word . . .

U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary Dr. Louis Sullivan asked me to extend his regrets for not being able to be here. He made a point to ask me to cheer your efforts on.

Getting the message out on the grim choice between tobacco or health is the most important purpose of these conferences.

We have much to learn from one another about how to do just that. I've learned a lot and so have my anti-tobacco experts who are here. I expect to learn a lot more from the proceedings of this conference. I hope to be able to attend the Eighth Annual Tobacco and Health Conference in Buenos Aires in 1992 to learn even more.

Two thoughts struck me in my preparations for this meeting.

The first is the theme of this Conference. . . "The Global War."

The second is the sheer size of that "War."

Just last week, the American film industry beamed the "Motion Picture Academy Awards"—the "Oscars"—around the world to an audience estimated at more than a billion people in more than one hundred Nations.

It was a truly "world-class" event with segments beamed up from Hollywood, the Sydney Opera House, Moscow, London, France, Tokyo and Buenos Aires.

In a sense, it was a kind of "town meeting" of the planet.

Next June and July, the World Cup Soccer matches will also be seen by more than a billion people throughout the world. It's the "Superbowl" of professional sports.

And every four years—the Olympics, another billion-watcher spectacle.

The audiences for these events make headlines by their sheer size. They're seen by one in five of all humans on Earth. But the "Oscars" happen only once a year—World Cup soccer and the Olympics only once every four years.

There's only one other "audience" of that size on this planet—the one-in-five of all humans hooked on tobacco products.

But that billion-plus "audience" is out there every single day of every year—"competing" among themselves for the "Worst Victim" award.

That "audience" seldom makes headlines—except when events like this Seventh World Conference make the kind of headlines we all wish that "audience" would read—and heed.

Tobacco doesn't make headlines every day because smoking is so deeply ingrained in cultures throughout the world that it's not seen by the media as "news."

It's seen by the media as a given fact of life.

You and I see it as a grim fact of death and disability.

It's our job to focus on smoking as "news people can use."

It's a primary benefit from Conferences like this that experts in the business of tobacco prevention can make that kind of news.

Our one billion-plus tobacco users are unwitting recruits in the "global war" at issue in this meeting. Only unlike other wars, in this one each soldier is at war with himself or herself. And the casualties are horrendous:

2.5 million die worldwide from the effects of tobacco every year—a fatality every 13 seconds;

The estimate you heard earlier in this Conference by Dr. Richard Peto and his colleagues that the annual worldwide tobacco body-count could climb to 10 million over the next generation staggers the mind;

In my own country, nearly 400,000 people—or one in six of all smoking deaths worldwide and one in six of all deaths in the United States—will be fatalities this year from the self-inflicted wound of tobacco use.

That's a thousand-plus deaths every day in my own country. You fill in the blanks on that number for your own country.

And how many tens of millions more in your Nations and mine will suffer crippling effects from this unholy war?

The only "generals" in this war are the leaders of the tobacco companies. Their customers are all privates, each one marching in his or her own direction toward disease, disability, and death.

Tobacco use is always a personal decision. It is too often a personal tragedy.

One other unique fact about this war: it's the only war in which a soldier can declare his or her own personal "victory"—quitting smoking—which yields an intensely personal "peace dividend:" namely, a personal dividend of better health and longer life.

Going "Absent Without Leave" in this war is a good thing. Health and life are the rewards.

Modern medicine looks back on the sometimes naive, sometimes grotesque practice of previous generations and asks: "How could they have been so stupid?"

Will future generations look back at us and ask: "How could they have been so stupid as to let two-and-a-half million or more people a year commit slow-motion suicide—and let the tobacco industry commit the mayhem of death and disease on its own customers?

Let's not give our sons and daughters cause to say that about us.

That's what this Conference is all about, isn't it?

I want to address two concepts at issue in this global war.

The first I'll call "offense." That's the multi-billion dollar tobacco marketing and distribution business. That's the job of those responsible for the macro- and microeconomics of domestic and international trade.

The second I'll call "defense"—or "reverse-marketing" which is the job you and I have to do to defend our people against them.

About the "offense."

It is indeed offensive that cigarette makers can peddle more than five trillion of their pernicious products a year around the world, or more than 5,000 cigarettes per smoker. That's enough for every smoker throughout the world to light up at least thirteen times a day.

How many people think 13 is a "lucky number?" Certainly not the every-13-second victims I mentioned a moment ago.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

We all wish we could write the "operator's manual" for that product. It would consist of one word: "Don't."

If we could wave a magic want today there wouldn't be a tobacco product on this planet. But we can't. The market for those products is out there. The best we can do is shrink it.

Many speakers at this Conference—I'll be one of them—have been appalled over the cynical marketing techniques of the tobacco companies.

As we all know, their bottom line is to at least replace the 2.5 million customers they lose every year to death and disease worldwide because of their products—and to replace the millions more who quit. Indeed they'd like to get ahead of those numbers and expand their markets.

At the same time, I'm very aware, as all of us must be, of the new geo-political and geo-economic climate we live in—the new realities that we face in what is fast becoming an almost one-world economy.

I'll join the chorus of those at this Conference who think it is unconscionable for the mighty transnational tobacco companies—and three of the major ones are in the United States—to be peddling their poison abroad, particularly because their main targets are less-developed countries.

In my own Nation's domestic markets, these same companies are targeting their wares on the most vulnerable among our own population—and that means Blacks, Hispanics, blue collar workers and the disadvantaged population.

We don't let them advertise on publicly-regulated mass media like television and radio at home. Yet they do use those same broadcast media in other countries wherever they can.

Indeed, they have used their vast economic and political power to force some Nations to change their laws to let such advertising happen. They even export their products in packages that don't carry the health warnings we mandate at home. That's hypocritical.

They play our free trade laws and export policies like a Stradavarius violin, pressuring our trade promotion agencies to keep open—even force open in some cases—other Nation's markets for their products.

They argue strenuously that when other Nations erect trade and tariff barriers against their product, it's "unfair." And under our laws and under many international trade treaties and agreements, they may be right.

Under common sense—in the case of health sense—they are not right.

Which brings me to my second main point: defense.

Starting a quarter-century ago, the United States went on the defensive with the first Surgeon General's report on smoking.

That report was simple and direct. Smoking is bad. What made news was that was the first time a U.S. government official said it so forcefully, backed with facts and figures.

That report—and a lot of subsequent reports and legislative activity—led to the banning of cigarette and "smokeless" tobacco advertising on our public airwaves. That report also set in motion a move to put warnings on every cigarette package—like "Smoking by pregnant women may result in fetal injury, premature birth, and low birth weight."

Over the last 25 years, the momentum has increased as public and governmental consciousness about "second-hand" smoking has increased.

There's hardly a State or local government or business in the U.S. that hasn't introduced a "hassle" element into the smoker's daily life: no smoking in public spaces; no smoking in parts of restaurants; no smoking in taxis; no smoking in entire office buildings; no smoking floors in hotels; no smoking in airports.

And now, under Federal law, no smoking on domestic airline flights. And soon, under company and State government pressures, there'll be no smoking on most buses and trains.

Some local governments are even insisting that none of their employees smoke on or off the job, and some private employers are adopting the same policy. They know how much tobacco use costs their health insurance plans. They also know how much it can affect employee productivity.

Over just the past two months, Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan has gone on an unprecedented offensive against a cigarette maker which set out to capture new markets among Blacks and young, uneducated women and another maker whose reputation has been built in part by its support of women's sporting events.

In the first instance, he decried the "slick and sinister" nature of the company's plans. The company backed off and pulled back its marketing plans. In the second, he called sports-support by any cigarette maker "blood money." In the latter case, let's see what happens when future years' contracts come up for renewal.

In both cases, Dr. Sullivan used words as strong as we feel about cigarette sales and promotion.

Just a month ago the United States Public Health Service put out a status report on smoking and health in which we reported that smoking costs the American economy more than $52 billion a year—a billion dollars a week—in health care, lost wages, lost productivity. And that doesn't even count the nearly $40 billion smokers spend to support their own addictions.

Some countries put a stiff excise tax on tobacco products. It can help keep consumption down or declining.

But no such tax can ever make up for the true costs that tobacco products exert on the economy—and the personal health of the people.

The $52 billion our report was talking about is an "excess tax"—as in wretched excess. It's a measure of how much it hurts America's 50 million smokers—and their families, friends and co-workers.

Our idea in this campaign has been: make it hard to smoke and hope people will make the hard decision not to.

And in that connection, let's not kid ourselves: when you're confronted with an addictive drug as strong as nicotine, it's a hard decision, indeed.

More power to those who can make such a decision . . .

In recent decades, we've worked very hard to reduce the "demand side" of personally injurious products or habits.

That has meant a lot of education against wretched excesses in personal behavior like smoking, heavy drinking, illicit drug use, bad eating and exercise habits—a whole gamut of self-destructive behavior.

We tried outright prohibition of alcohol once. It didn't work in our favor. In fact, quite the reverse: it helped build organized crime in our Nation even as it bred disrespect of government.

That's why you'll probably never see prohibition of cigarettes in America. But that's why you will see more and more efforts to counteract this addiction.

Of course, we've made progress.

In 1965, 40 per cent of American adults smoked.

Today, we're down to about 29 percent.

Half of all living Americans who ever smoked have quit.

The bad news is that 50 million Americans still smoke. The good news is that 38 million Americans who would be smoking today are tobacco-free—in large part due to our efforts to make them that way.

Many of you could report similar progress in your countries.

But we haven't made nearly as much progress as we've wanted to, particularly with respect to women, adolescents and minorities among our population.

For example, more American high school-age females are taking up the habit than their male counterparts. And for the first time ever, lung cancer among women in the United States exceeds breast cancer as a cause of death among women.

Among the disadvantaged and minority populations, the rates of smoking and resulting diseases, disabilities and deaths are not falling as rapidly as among the majority.

The worst news—for the United States and for every other Nation—is the most pernicious aspect of tobacco addiction.

And that is: four out of five smokers get hooked before they turn 21 years of age.

And it's the young people—male and female, majority and minority—to whom the cigarette makers are turning more of their advertising efforts to replenish their shrinking markets. The markets whose shrinkage is due to death and disability.

In 1981, 20 per cent of our high school seniors smoked. In 1989, the percentage was about the same.

This year, more than a million American teenagers will take up the habit.

Anyone who thinks cigarette makers aren't after the youth market—in America or worldwide—must live in a cave. And it's not a smoke-free cave . . .

After all, when the tobacco industry sees 2.5 million of its best customers die every year worldwide, it's got to find replacements somewhere.

And you know it's not among older and wiser consumers who know better. It's among the young who are most likely to succumb to the sexy, flashy, sports-figure-dominated ads that say: "Smoking is cool."

We've found that carefully planned, comprehensive school health education programs can make a big difference in preventing the onset of smoking. But we haven't found quite the right formula to make the kind of difference we want. Nor have we found the resources to make such programs universal.

I'm looking forward to reading the proceedings of this conference to learn what's worked among young people in other Nations.

Some of you are way ahead of us in this crucial area. We can learn from you. We'll do our best to put your best ideas to best use in the United States.

Overall, smoking is moving slowly from the "norm" toward the abnormal in American society.

We have invested considerable time, money and talent in the general education of our people—youngsters and adults—over the past 25 years. We'll invest much more in the years to come.

We already know that pounding the anti-smoking message home has an effect. We can point to the 38 million Americans who don't smoke today who would be smoking if we hadn't launched our campaign against the addiction.

We already know that most people know that smoking is bad for them. Three out of four smokers in the U.S. will tell you that they know what smoking might mean to their lungs and their hearts. And that many will tell you they want to quit.

But not enough do quit.

So what do we as public health professionals do?

We keep up the pressure. We increase the "hassle" factor on those who smoke. We redouble our efforts to keep those who don't yet smoke away from the addition.

Over the past generation we've made historic—if slow—inroads in getting this message across.

And so have so many other Nations represented here.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, we're all here to learn from one another how to do our anti-tobacco jobs better.

A remarkable diversity of countries is represented here—large countries and small ones, rich ones and poor ones, old ones and new ones, and countries with vastly different political structure and political systems.

Our governments may disagree over trade, geography, the global economy or arms control.

But all of us here are bound together in the pursuit of one critically important goal: the elimination of tobacco use and the prevention of tobacco-related death and disease.

This conference has given us more understanding of how to accomplish that goal.

For that, the United States thanks you.

And so does the rest of the world.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, the incredible events we continue to witness in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union have accelerated the demands for even deeper reductions in U.S. defense spending. While I agree that these changes warrant realignments and cuts in our defense budget, significant unilateral disarmament is irresponsible and, contrary to some public perceptions, can upset rather than enhance further responsible arms reductions and political reforms.

As a senior member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and a congressional observer to the Geneva arms control talks, I have been involved closely in the arms control and defense arenas for some 16 years. I've learned to differentiate words from actions, perceptions from reality, and emotions from facts. These are valued and uncommon skills necessary for responsibly assessing our national security needs, "we must think with our heads and not our hearts."

The American defense budget is not based on some arbitrary number. It reflects what is needed to adequately defend our Nation and interests against a myriad of threats. While our hearts rejoice over Eastern Europe and want to slash defense spending, our minds instruct us to focus on the threats and make realignments based on the reality, not the perception, of those threats. Unfortunately, many threats remain unchanged.

Based on my recent visits to Czechoslovakia and Hungary, I am encouraged and optimistic that lasting political and economic reforms in Eastern Europe, and to a lesser degree in the Soviet Union, will bring further security to Europe and encourage more arms reductions—in both nuclear and conventional forces. But, these reforms have yet to solidify and not one Warsaw Pact weapon has yet been destroyed. On the contrary, the Soviets under Gorbachev continue to modernize their already superior war machine, particularly strategic nuclear weapons—the ones aimed at us. The Soviets continue to add more nuclear warheads to their arsenal. While we debate the MX, Midgetman, and B–2 bomber, the Soviets deploy two new mobile ICBM's and the advanced "Blackjack" bomber and modernize their first-strike SS–18 ICBM's—for which we have no counterpart. Gorbachev's actions do not reflect his words upon which we base our perceptions.

I believe that our resolve and strength helped bring about today's changes. The Reagan-Bush policy of "Peace Through Strength" has borne fruit with the INF Treaty—which eliminates two entire classes of nuclear weapons—and real progress on strategic arms reductions [START], conventional arms reductions [CFE], and other arms control initiatives. These are fair, equitable agreements fostering mutual reductions based on vertification. They enhance our national security while reducing deadly arsenals.

Unilateral disarmament, including one-sided defense cuts, actually hinder, not help our security. Unlike negotiating a treaty from a strong position, unilateral reductions cannot—and never have—pressured the Soviets to match us nor do they provide for true verfication—the real key to making arms control work. Our dismal experiences with unilateral disarmament in the 1970's are proof.

Our military and economic strength coupled with new technological challenges, like the SDI, forced Gorbachev to release Eastern Europe and reform at home to ensure the Soviet Union's survival as a great power. Continuing such a policy will promote further reforms in Eastern Europe and the U.S.S.R., further real arms reductions and further security. It's the right policy. Just ask Czechoslovakian President Havel, as I did.

Much attention has focused on the Warsaw Pact threat. While it is lessening to a degree, other significant threats have not. The Soviets continue to pump billions into their expansionist Communist allies in the Third World. There is no peristroika in Afghanistan, Angola, Vietnam, North Korea, or Cuba. As witnessed in Tiananmen Square, Communist China brutally crushed its democratic reform movement. These same Communists control China's nuclear missile arsenal. The threats to our economic security posed by Iran and Iraq through their violent expansionist policies in the Persian Gulf remain. Libya continues to develop chemical weapons and support terrorism. Many of these threats require maintenance of strong conventional forces, like aircraft carriers, which are far more expensive than the strategic forces that comprise less than 5 percent of the defense budget.

During the past 5 years, we have cut the defense budget by over 12 percent in real dollars making it today the lowest in both a percentage of GNP and Federal spending in over 50 years. Today's global changes do warrant further defense spending cuts. But, these reductions must be responsible and measured. They must correspond to the real threats and needs. I'll be voting for a smaller defense budget, not as small as my heart wants, but as small as my mind will allow. President John F. Kennedy stated, "America can afford to be strong, she cannot afford to be weak." Those words are just as meaningful today—perhaps even more so—as they were in 1961. The Soviets may have lost the cold war, but the West has not yet won it.

HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL DAY COMMEMORATION

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, the current week of April 22–29, 1990, is our annual commemoration of the memories of the 6 million innocent Jewish victims of the Nazi Holocaust. We also recollect the 47th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, in which a small band of men and women, dedicated to honor and freedom, managed to fend off Hitler's forces for a short period of time in a valiant display of courage.

I was, therefore, pleased to be able to attend the ceremony commemorating Yom Hashoa, as Holocasut Memorial Day is known in Hebrew, held this past Sunday in New York City at Avery Fisher Hall. Our national commemoration, in the Capitol Rotunda, is being conducted today, and as one of the candle lighters of the candelabra in memory of the 6 million, I appreciate the opportunity to be part of this significant occasion as well.

I would like, therefore, to take this opportunity to insert the remarks of Benjamin Meed into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for my colleague's review. Mr. Meed is president of the American Gathering of Jewish Holocaust Survivors and the Warsaw Ghetto Resistance Organization. His address on Sunday was an eloquent one, and I believe that it is appropriate, as we publicly remember these 6 million souls, that his statement be shared.

AN ADDRESS BY BENJAMIN MEED, PRESIDENT, WARSAW GHETTO RESISTANCE ORGANIZATION, AMERICAN GATHERING OF JEWISH HOLOCAUST SURVISORS

Distinguished guests, fellow survivors and dear friends.

We gather today in this hall of music, played in by the Yitzhak Pereimans, the Pinchas Zuchermans and the Ashkenazis. But today, from this auditorium and from the halls and gathering places around the world, other sounds emanate. Sounds of crying and remembrance for the Yitzchoka, Pincuses, Rachels, Rifkeies and Leaheles, whose voices and lives were cut short so prematurely, at the hands of the German Nazi murderers and their collaborators.

Today, we gather once again to unravel our bandages—bandages which still cover our deep wounds—wounds which were inflicted only 50 years ago. But this year, new-forms of concern have begun to inflame our ever painful injuries—and now again, there is an atmosphere of political turmoil that is frightening.

The world is again in political disarray Again a scapegoat is needed and again the finger is being pointed at Jews. In Russia, resurgent nationalism has led to the growth of right-wing anti-Semitism—Pamyat. In Hungary, anti-Semitism is on the rise—everywhere that the Soviet empire has collapsed, native nationalism replaces communism.

In Germany, the architect of Bitburg, Chancellor Kohl, is on his way to become the hero of reunification. We survivors remember all too well a "Unified Germany", From the East and the West—including Austria—they came to murder us. They wore the same uniforms, spoke the same language, and their aims were the same—they succeeded in murdering Six Million of our people, including over a million children.

Let me say bluntly, yes, we are concerned about German unification. Yes, we are concerned because of our experience of the Holocaust, We, the victims, feel that history can repeat itself.

We are burdened and tormented by our memories. In our experience, all German promises were lies to lure us into the trap of the gas chambers. We were betrayed by the murderers, and by the bystanders. We have all the reasons in the world not to trust.

As for the recent East German parliamentary declaration asking us for forgiveness.

Yes we do recognize their admission of guilt even though it has come 45 years late. But forgiveness, forgiveness, this belongs only to the victims—brutally and systematically murdered. Six million innocent men, women and children killed for one reason only—because they were born Jews—and in this instance, their legacy to us is "Never to Forget, Never to Forgive, and to Never Let Others Forget."

But for us to measure Germany's admission of guilt, needs more than statements. We must see the deeds which should follow. A reunified German nation must assume responsibility, not only for the Fatherland, but for the deeds of its fathers.

We have the right to insist that the memories that torment us at night be taught by day to German youth, for all generations to come.

True, it is easier for those who did not directly experience the Holocaust, to forgive; but we know that there is a dangerously thin line between forgiveness and forgetfulness. Today, we are being asked to forgive. Tomorrow, will we be asked to forget?

We, the survivors, must continue what we have been doing within our communities, and within this great country, to intensify the remembrance of the Jewish uniqueness of the Holocaust. We must help build the museums and memorials, support the educational programs, and bear witness with our memories.

We must be concerned not only that the past be remembered, but with the quality of that memory, so that the community at large learns—not only of the lives that were lost, but of the lives that were lived. The victims must be remembered not as the human skeletons the Germans portrayed them, but they must be remembered as men, women and children—part of a world of culture and of values, part of the dynamic world of European Jewry with its diverse movements—people who embodied the values of Yiddishkeit and Menchlechkait.

We are here today not only to remember the past, but to guard the future.

Above all, we must be our brothers keepers. We must support the resettlement of Soviet Jewry, which has come about only because the American Jewish community has understood that saving Jewish life is an absolute priority, that there can be no compromises, no waiting, no delays, when it comes to saving Jewish lives. We must wholeheartedly support UJA—Federation of Jewish Philanthropies in Operation Homecoming, to help the exodus of Soviet Jewry.

Today, more than ever, we must express our solidarity with our beloved State of Israel, which protects all Jews, and which is willing to receive them all.

Today we mark the 47th Anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising. I recall seeing the Warsaw Ghetto in flames. Through the dense smoke, I could hear the sounds of the Jews defending themselves, in those days, they were abandoned and betrayed by the entire world.

History will record the Warsaw and other Ghetto Uprisings, as well as the Heroic Partisan Fighters, as the symbols of Jewish resistance during the German Nazi occupation. For us it is an integral part of our very being. It is a legacy that we carry with sorrow—but also with price, for it is a legacy of a fight against impossible odds.

But today we bear an added burden. We must insist that the drunkenness of freedom does not express itself in anti-Semitism or anti-Zionism. Pamyat can not be the banner of freedom and democracy.

Today, we challenge Germany, East and West, and all Eastern European countries, to preserve all and any records documenting the vicious atrocities, against the Jewish people. Preserve as well documents of our acts of resistance and to submit them to nationally recognized Holocaust institutions for further study, examination, and preservation . . . Not For Incarceration . . .

It is not only for the six million that we make those demands—for them it has long been too late. It is not for us—after all, it is already late for us. It is for the sake of mankind for a future of new generations that we demand that the world leaders ensure that history will not be allowed to repeat itself.

We offer our memories to the world, for we know that the only way to safeguard future generations is to remember the past, and to understand its painful and poignant lessons.

Let us remember.

VISCAP VOLUNTEERS

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, please allow me this moment to pay tribute to the Volunteer Incentive Service Credit Account Program at Kirtland Community College.

VISCAP is an excellent program which strives to assist older adults—those over the age of 60—as well as the handicapped and disabled, to remain living independently at home rather than being institutionalized prematurely.

The program revolves around the concept of the "time dollar." By means of these time dollars, when volunteers give their time to help others, they accrue service credits toward their own needs should they ever arise. Younger volunteers and those from civic, service or religious organizations receive either bank credits for further use or they may donate them to individuals in want. The coordinator of the program said VISCAP volunteers logged 7,640 hours of work in the program's first year, an incredible figure.

Funded through a grant from the Michigan Office of Services to the Aging, VISCAP came into being through legislation introduced by State Senator Connie Binsfield and State Representative Maxine Berman. At present, VISCAP has expanded from its original six counties and now reaches nine Michigan counties: Benzie, Crawford, Kalkaska, Leelanau, Manistee, Ogemaw, Oscoda, Otsego, and Roscommon.

Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues in the House, please join with me today in honoring the selfless volunteers of VISCAP who have given so generously of their time and talents to benefit the aged, handicapped, and disabled in their moment of need.

TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH PETRUS

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Joseph Petrus of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio, who will be receiving the "Fraternalist of the Year" award from the Fraternal Societies of Greater Pittsburgh. Mr. Petrus will be receiving his award on Saturday, May 5, 1990, at a dinner at the Sheraton Hotel at Station Square in Pittsburgh.

Mr. Petrus is receiving the award for his work and dedication to the United Societies of the U.S.A. He began his involvement with United Societies U.S.A. in 1962, since that time he has held numerous leadership positions including president of auditors, a member of the board of directors, and national treasurer. Mr. Petrus has been involved in a number of activities including Family Day, a scholarship program, a Disaster Relief Program for its membership, and a special recognition for its 50-year members. The culmination of Mr. Petrus' service to United Societies was exemplified in his election as president of the Fraternal Societies of Greater Pittsburgh in 1987.

Joseph Petrus was born and still lives in Youngstown, OH, with is wife, Dolores. Mr. and Mrs. Petrus have four children, Donna, Karen, Patricia, and Joseph, as well as three grandchildren. He served in the 6th Armored Division during World War II and received the Bronze Star and the Purple Heart.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize Joseph Petrus who is receiving the "Frantemalist of the Year" award this year. He is an exceptional person who has devoted many hours to United Societies of the U.S.A., our community, and this great country. I am honored to represent this outstanding individual.

THE COAST GUARD'S BICENTENNIAL

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I stand today to pay tribute to the U.S. Coast Guard on its bicentennial. For over 200 years the Coast Guard has stood "Semper Paratus" in its many missions. The Navy League of Maryland will honor the Coast Guard's hard work April 27, 1990. As a part of the celebration, I endorse the service's accomplishments and hope my colleagues will do the same.

In 1790, in order to combat violations of the U.S. customs laws, Secretary of the Treasury Alexander Hamilton authorized 10 sea-faring vessels to carry out his request. Since then, the Coast Guard has continued the Nation's fight against the importation of contraband by sea. With the cooperation of other governmental agencies, the Coast Guard has played a vital role in preventing illegal drugs from reaching the United States. The versatility of the Caost Guard cannot be matched. During a patrol, pilots often detect oil slicks, spot vessels smuggling drugs, and rescue survivors from a foundering raft.

The U.S. Coast Guard is celebrating its bicentennial August 4, 1989, through August 4, 1990. The past 200 years have been packed with exciting tidbits of valantry. The Coast Guard has established itself as a viable military force battling pirates, privateers, and smugglers over the years. The service has participated in every major U.S. war, including Vietnam and the Grenada expedition.

During the Civil War, the Harriet Lane cutter forced the merchant steamer Nashville to show its colors during the attack on Fort Sumter. As tensions mounted, the Harriet Lane and two other warships anchored outside the harbor entrance. The cutter observed an unidentified steamer, later discovered to be the Nashville approach failing to show its colors. The Nashville continued on its way, failing to heed the Harriet Lane's signal, so the cutter fired a shot across the steamer's bow. Nashville quickly identified itself as an American ship by hoisting the American flag. Harriet Lane allowed the steamer to continue on its way and is credited with firing the first shot from the deck of a ship during the Civil War.

During the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, the cutter Taney fired at an enemy aircraft. When the first Japanese aircraft appeared over the Hawaiian islands. Taney's crew observed the antiaircraft fire over Pearl Harbor, went to general quarters and prepared to get underway if necessary. During the second wave of Japanese fire, the cutter opened fire with its guns when the planes came into range. There were no direct hits, but the Japanese fighters were forced to avoid the fire. Throughout World War II, the Taney provided a valuable service by escorting convoys in the Pacific Ocean and Mediterranean Sea.

Over the years, the Coast Guard has experienced growing pains that have evolved into the formation of the Revenue Cutter Service, the Lighthouse Service, the Life-Saving Service, the Bureau of Navigation, and the Steamboat Inspection Service. There are nearly 38,000 active duty military members in the Coast Guard, making it the smallest branch of the five armed services. More than 5,000 civilians, 12,000 reservists, and 32,000 volunteers participate in the Coast Guard Auxiliary.

Today, 65 percent of the U.S. population lives within an hour's drive of the coast. By the year 2000, more than 80 percent will live there. The important role of the Coast Guard in protecting our marine environment and improving the quality of life in America will only grow. Therefore, I am pleased to commemorate the achievements of the Coast Guard on this very special occasion. May the next 200 years be as successful.

TRIBUTE TO ART STEARNS

HON. LES ASPIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to honor Art Stearns who is retiring after 30 years with the Janesville Fire Department, the last 8 of which he served as fire chief.

Art joined the Janesville Fire Department on November 16, 1959. During his years in the fire department, he refined his skills in many areas. Art not only operated all of the vehicles, but he also acted as ambulance attendant. For 8 years Art served on the fire department union board. On July 29, 1977, he was appointed lieutenant. Two years later, on May 14, 1979, Art was chosen as fire chief where he served until January 3, 1990.

Art was born in Janesville, WI, on December 24, 1934. In 1955 he graduated from Janesville High School. After graduation, he worked at the General Motors Assembly Division, Janesville plant. From 1956 through 1959 Art served in the U.S. Navy.

On April 26, 1958, Art married his wife, Gladys. Art and Gladys made their home in Janesville, WI, and raised six children.

Art has always worked toward improving the city's fire department. He initiated a program to enable more efficient, effective, and safer handling at emergency situations called Incident Command. It was through Art's efforts that the Janesville Fire Department Training Center was built.

Art's continued interest and concern for the community is demonstrated by his involvement in a variety of organizations which focus their attention on helping others. As fire chief he was a member of the National Fire Protection Association, Wisconsin State Fire Chiefs, Illinois State Fire Chiefs, Rock County Fire Officers, International Association of Fire Chiefs, Rock Safety Committee, Loyal Order of the Moose, Janesville Elks Club—Great Lakes Division, International Association of Fire Chiefs—State vice president 1983–90, and the Janesville Kiwanis Noon Club.

I am honored to pay tribute to Art Stearns. He has had a long and admirable career and he has made invaluable contributions to Janesville. Wisconsin's First District is fortunate to have Art as a valued member of our community, a devoted husband and father, and a good friend. I wish Art a happy retirement.

A TRIBUTE TO THE AFRO-AMERICAN HISTORICAL AND GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY AND DAVID RUGGLES, BLACK ABOLITIONIST

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, from May 3 to 5, 1990, the Afro-American Historical and Genealogical Society's Annual Conference will be held here in Washington, DC. This conference will trace the rich history of black Americans and their invaluable contributions made to our great Nation, as well as instructing individuals on how to trace their genealogy.

Ms. Margot Webb, a constituent in my district and a certified genealogical researcher, will be one of the featured speakers at the society's conference. She will be discussing her great-great uncle, David Ruggles, a black abolitionist who helped Frederick Douglass escape from Maryland in 1838.

The theme of the Afro-American Historical and Genealogical Society, Inc. is "Race-Creed-Color: heritage we all have; working together we can help each other document our past history and genealogy."

Mr. Ruggles is a significant individual in the rich heritage of our great Nation. He was at the crossroads of history in the 19th century, a time when our Nation's salvation was jeopardized by the evils of slavery. Mr. Ruggles assisted the leading abolitionist, Frederick Douglass, to escape to Maryland in order to continue his campaign against slavery.

After fleeing to Maryland, Douglass was a key player in recruiting black soldiers for the Union Army as well as seeing to it that they were treated humanely. As we look back at the vital assistance lent by Mr. Ruggles, and the very important contributions made by Frederick Douglass, we can clearly say that men such as Mr. Ruggles and Mr. Douglass have made contributions which have enabled our Nation to overcome seemingly insurmountable odds to establish themselves at the leading edge of change and progress in American society. Black Americans have clearly played a vital role in our Nation's development—socially, politically, economically, and religiously. Events such as the one hosted by the Afro-American Historical and Genealogical Society, enable all Americans to learn from our past injustices in order to further ourselves as a nation. Through this valuable history lesson, we can look confidently into the future with a commitment to perpetual harmony between races.

VOTE ON H.R. 1463

HON. JOHN MILLER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be on the House floor March 28, 1990, when the House voted on H.R. 1463, the National Capital Transportation amendments. Had I been here, I would have voted: "yea," on the Solomon amendment and "nay," on final passage for H.R. 1463

WASHINGTON POST EDITORIAL CRITICIZES STATUS BILL FOR PUERTO RICO

HON. JAIME B. FUSTER

OF PUERTO RICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. FUSTER. Mr. Speaker, the political status situation in Puerto Rico is getting increasing attention in the national press. Within the last month alone, articles on this issue have appeared in the New York Times, the Wall Street Journal, Time magazine, and the Washington Times.

Now comes a most perceptive editorial in today's Washington Post, which goes very succinctly to the essence of the problem. I commend it enthusiastically to the attention of my colleagues.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 24, 1990]

PUERTO RICAN STATEHOOD

A game is being played in a mostly indifferent Congress with the people and the future of Puerto Rico. The issue is the recurrent one in island politics of statehood or independence versus the present mixed status of commonwealth.

The last election on the island in 1988 was won by the commonwealth party, but it was close. In hopes of taking the distracting status issue away from the statehood advocates nipping at their heels, the commonwealthers decided to ask Congress to authorize a binding referendum. Puerto Ricans would choose among the three broad relationships with the United States, and Congress would agree in advance to give effect to the result.

The other Puerto Rican parties also supported the idea, as did the administration, on record as favoring statehood. Then came the problem, which persists, of defining the alternatives that would be voted on. The administration wanted to leave them vague. The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee rightly resisted, on grounds that the voters should know what they were voting for. But the committee then produced a seriously misshapen bill, tilted sharply in favor of statehood. The legislation front-loaded the statehood option by providing that benefits would go up right away and taxes only later. Opinion polls on the island picked up an instant pro-statehood shift.

Now the Congressional Budget Office has done a study of the likely economic effects of statehood as outlined in the committee bill. From what might be called a welfare standpoint the island would gain (and the Treasury lose). Benefits would rise not just earlier than taxes, but as much as $2 billion to $3 billion a year more. But the Puerto Rican economy is dependent on a special provision in the U.S. tax code exempting from tax part of the income of U.S. companies that invest there. As a condition of statehood the exemption would be phased out. CBO says that would mean loss of jobs and calculates that within 10 years this loss on the job side would be greater than the gain in benefits. Puerto Rico would be both more dependent and worse off.

The bill has now gone to the Finance Committee, whose chairman ordered the CBO study. Finance, which has jurisdiction over taxes and many benefit programs, is scheduled to hold a hearing this week. The Agriculture Committee, which has jurisdiction over the food stamp program, an island mainstay, must also be heard from before the legislation can go to the floor. Then the whole process would have to be repeated in the House. There isn't time, and therefore there isn't likely to be a bill. The way the idea has been abused and mangled thus far, that would be a merciful result. But in the meantime the people of Puerto Rico have been badly jerked around.

TRIBUTE TO ROGER OSMAN

HON. GEORGE E. SANGMEISTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. SANGMEISTER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to salute the work of Roger Osman, a distinguished citizen of the Fourth Congressional District. Mr. Osman served as a tireless leader in the labor movement and the community until his death on January 26, 1990, which ended a brave battle with cancer.

Roger had a lasting impact in the labor movement, working as the international representative for the United Steelworkers of America for over 12 years. During this time Roger was devoted to serve and protect his members with his knowledge, experience, compassion, and above all integrity.

Roger also faithfully served the United Way of Will County in numerous capacities. After his death, the Roger Osman Award was established in his honor. The award will be given to the individual that exemplifies the ideals and performs the greatest services for the United Way cause. This year the award was given to Roger's wife, Anna Mae.

Mr. Speaker, the labor movement and the community of the Fourth Congressional District will miss their loyal friend. I know my colleagues will want to join me in honoring Roger Osman.

THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF TRITT ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, Tritt Elementary School in Marietta, GA, will celebrate its 10th anniversary on April 29, 1990. Tritt is one of the outstanding schools in my home county, and I am proud that this school has completed a decade of excellence. And excellence is something the community has come to expect of Tritt Elementary. With teachers and faculty who demonstrate their care and commitment to the needs of the students, the parents are given even more incentive to get involved in their children's education. Cobb County is recognized statewide as having one of the finest school systems, and Tritt Elementary is an example of this reputation of excellence. Though 10 years may not seem like a long time, in that period a multitude of students have received a tremendous head start on life at Tritt Elementary. Congratulations to Tritt Elementary School on its 10th anniversary, and I look forward to another decade of quality education.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO BELLFLOWER MAYOR JOHN ANSDELL

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding public servant who has devoted so much of his time to the southern California community. John Ansdell will be honored for his term as mayor of Bellflower which ended on April 17, 1990. This occasion gives me the opportunity to express my sincere appreciation for his years of dedication to public service.

Prior to his service as mayor from 1984 to 1985 and 1988 to 1990, Mayor Ansdell served on the Bellflower City Council, a position he held since 1982. Aside from his involvement in the city council, John has also served as delegate to the California Contract Cities Association, delegate to the County Sanitation District No. 2, delegate to the League of California Cities, and delegate to the Southeast Mosquito Abatement.

As mayor, one of John's major accomplishments was the curtailment of the Eucalyptus Avenue drug problem by his introduction of traffic control measures and special Sheriff's Department foot patrols. He also presided over the establishment of the Substance Abuse Narcotic Education [SANE] Program in local fourth, fifth, and sixth grade classrooms. In addition to his drug control initiatives, during his term ground was broken for the Bellflower Aquatic Center and the Bellflower Transportation Center. Clearly, Mayor Ansdell's aforementioned accomplishments are just a few of the many.

John's community service is not just limited to government. He is also a member of the Eagles Lodge, a charter member of Elks new lodge 888, and a charter member of the Noon Lions Club. Based on his many accomplishments and unsurpassed involvement in the community, it is no wonder he is so well respected and honored. However, despite Mayor Ansdell's significant involvement in the community, his major focus is on his wife, Irene, and their two sons, Gary and Alan.

In honor of John Ansdell's term as mayor, my wife, Lee, joins me in extending our congratulations to this caring and giving man. He is truly a remarkable individual who has devoted his talents and energies to enriching the lives of so many other people. We wish John, his wife, Irene, and their two sons, Gary and Alan, all the best in the years to come.

TRIBUTE TO HERMAN FARRIER

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a member of my community for his outstanding work on behalf of our Nation in times of peace and of war.

Mr. Herman Farrier is being commended for his outstanding service by the Rhode Island District No. 5 Veterans of Foreign Wars. Herman is a decorated World War II Navy veteran who has served our country well. In 1974, Herman was named post commander of the Eugene T. Lefebvre Post No. 1271 in Central Falls, RI. Currently, he is the District No. 5 commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of Rhode Island.

Herman Farrier's work within the post has been extraordinary as he has dedicated so much of his time to his fellow veterans. Within the Lefebvre Post, Herman is currently the post chaplain, the service officer, the hospital chairman, and the community activities chairman. He is also the youth activities chairman and a post trustee.

It is with distinct pleasure and profound respect that I salute Herman Farrier for his outstanding service to his community. I would like to thank Herman for his years of service to his fellow veterans. I wish him continued success in the future.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE 1989-90 NASHVILLE HORNETTES

HON. GLENN POSHARD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, some special students in my district deserve recognition for their efforts on behalf of their community.

I'm very proud of the Nashville Community High School Hornettes and everyone associated with their year of tremendous success.

The Hornettes had an outstanding season, including a 29-3 overall record, finishing as undefeated conference champions for the second straight year, along with claiming a first place finish in the Kaskaskia Tournament.

You could tell the Hornettes were headed for great things when they also won their regional, sectional and super-sectional championships, earning the right to play for a State title.

After two thrilling victories in the quarterfinals and semifinals the Hornettes concluded their season with a valiant effort to take second place in the Illinois Class "A" Girl's Basketball Tournament.

I followed their success throughout the season, and I am extremely proud of the way these young women approached both victory and defeat. And the people of Nashville stood by them 100 percent, as they always do, in victory and defeat.

Long after this success is just a pleasant memory, I'm sure these young women will look back on this as a great learning experience. They will some day appreciate even more the rewards that come not only from winning, but with caring enough about something to always do your best, on behalf of your friends, family, and community.

I wish everyone associated with this team's effort great success in the future, and we'll always remember the 1989-90 Nashville Hornettes as a team with courage, conviction, and class.

I'm pleased to represent Nashville, IL, here in Congress, and would like to enter the names of the people involved with this team in the RECORD so they may receive the congratulations they have earned.

PROMISES AND PITFALLS OF THE "PEACE DIVIDEND": THE MYTHS AND REALITIES—PART II

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, the hottest topic around the country these days is how to spend the so-called peace dividend. However, before blindly engaging in a new Federal spending spree as advocated by some of my liberal colleagues in Congress, it is imperative to separate the myths from the realities—to get to know the facts behind the Peace Dividend. As St. Paul implored, "Come, let us reason together."

Past experiences exemplify how the immediate rewards of Peace Dividends can be deceptive. Following Allied victory in 1945 the United States undertook massive unilateral disarmament relying on our nuclear monopoly to protect our interests. Trusting the Soviets—who did not similarly disarm—condemned Eastern Europe to Communist domination. Had we remained in central Europe with conventional forces equal to the Soviets until the political situation stabilized, the chances are very good that some of those countries, like Czechoslovakia and Poland, would have remained free. While the immediate Peace Dividend would have been less, perhaps much of the long-term expense of the 40-plus years of troop deployments to NATO and cold war defense spending could have been saved. This Peace Dividend also set the stage for Communist adventurism in Korea, costing us billions of dollars, almost 34,000 lives, and over 100,000 wounded.

While the incredible events in Eastern Europe warrant a realignment and reduction in defense spending, the threats to American national security interests have actually diminished very little. The Reagan-Bush policy of "Peace Through Strength" has succeeded in promoting real arms control and political reform throughout the Warsaw Pact. While this success allows us to make corresponding cuts in our military, it also underscores the need to continue to maintain a strong, viable defense. Prudence dictates any further cuts be measured and responsible. We should learn from past mistakes. Hence, rather than a major windfall, the so-called Peace Dividend is really a modest bonus.

The experience of the post-Vietnam Peace Dividend shatters the myth of immediate social benefits. Like entitlement programs of the 1970's, today's proposed social welfare projects are not one-time expenditures. In reality, once established they must be funded every year, usually increasing in cost over time. It's no wonder that during the past two decades domestic programs have grown $7 for every $1 of growth in defense. The Peace Dividend is a one-time bonus. Once spent, it is gone.

Daily life provides a simplistic analogy to this post-Vietnam experience. The Peace Dividend of the 1970's was similar to a small financial bonus. While providing the short-term resource to pay for the downpayment on a new car, the bonus was spent and not available to augment future monthly budgets now burdened with car payments—additional expenditures for which there is no matching income. America bought a new car following Vietnam and has been paying for it since through deficit financing and increasing debt.

The lion's share, though not all, of savings from today's defense spending cuts or Peace Dividend should be spent eliminating the Federal deficit. In other words, we should finish paying off the car we have today before buying yet another new one.

Some of this former defense spending should be devoted to critical domestic needs, like the war on drugs. Taking care not to add to the deficit, we can focus on needed one-time initiatives like environmental cleanup. Realigning Federal spending also offers a good opportunity to reassess and remodel current social programs to achieve greater efficiency without additional spending—getting more "bang for the buck."

The promises of future defense spending reductions are great. To achieve the most success and benefit from them, we should know the limitations, appreciate the realities, and cast aside the myths.

RADIOVISION: 10TH ANNUAL VOLUNTEER RECOGNITION DAY

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, this coming Saturday, one of the most impressive organizations in my 22d Congressional District of New York will be conducting its annual Volunteer Recognition Day.

For the past 10 years, Radiovision has been a window on the world for our blind and sight impaired individuals. Radiovision brings into their homes local news, topical literature, shopping hints, and other vital information to which the blind and the sight impaired normally would not normally have access.

Daniel Hulse, the director of Radiovision, and Carol Cleveland, the volunteer coordinator, have done an excellent job throughout the years and are richly deserving of our congratulations.

But Radiovision is, and has always been, maintained by its many devoted volunteers.

It is these selfless people who we honor this week: Those people who give of their time, and of their hearts, to assist in bringing this vital service to the blind.

Today, Radiovision boasts an estimated audience of about 650 listeners, although the exact number cannot be known because many of these "listeners" are nursing homes and other facilities with a fairly substantial audience. This listenership represents a 10-percent increase over 1989. Furthermore, Radiovision is currently serviced by about 131 volunteers—an increase of over 20 percent since last year. There is no doubt that Radiovision is growing by leaps and bounds.

Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join in commending Radiovision on the occasion of their 10th anniversary. The Middletown (NY) Times Herald Record published a comprehensive article, written by Peter Schoenberg, which eloquently captures the spirit and the worthy service of Radiovision. I request the insertion of this article at this point in the RECORD:

SO THE BLIND CAN HEAR THE NEWS

(By Peter Schoenberg)

MIDDLETOWN.—For Roy Featherstone of Milton, it's the only radio station on the dial—literally.

Featherstone, an 85-year-old retired attorney, is one of more than 650 listeners of a unique kind of radio station that doesn't worry about rating or beating the competition.

That's because the station supplies the radio. And this special radio can get only one station.

The station is Radio Vision, a closed-circuit broadcasting service for the blind, which on Oct. 1 observed its 10th anniversary.

Operated by the Ramapo Catskill Library System, the Middletown-based station broadcasts throughout eight counties in the Catskills and Mid-Hudson, using FM transmission facilities of WSPK in Dutchess County and WELV in Ulster County.

Radio Vision reads to those who can't read for themselves—the legally blind and others who possess handicaps that make it difficult or impossible to hold a newspaper, book or magazine.

It's just what the doctor ordered for Featherstone, who is completely blind in one eye and has weak vision in the other.

"I would go crazy if I didn't have Radio Vision," Featherstone said. "It's excellent. I have one alongside my bed and I listen to it every night."

He and the other Radio Vision listeners are loaned the special radios free of charge. The closed-circuit radio signals are broadcast on wavelengths not used by the two commercial radio carriers—the kind of frequencies used for such services as Muzak and paging services. Regular radios can't pick up the signals.

What listeners hear on Radio Vision is news and information, the kind of information most people get daily from newspapers and magazines. Commercial radio doesn't have the time to broadcast news in the depth offered by Radio Vision. Its 114 volunteers take the time to read more than a dozen local newspapers to the special audience.

"They want to hear the news that day, that's the advantage we have," said Daniel Hulse, Radio Vision director. "A radio station can only give a few minutes of news each hour. We favor local news."

That's why Radio Vision doesn't duplicate the services of an all-news station in New York. Most of the air time is taken up by reading local news from daily and weekly newspapers.

Some magazines also are read. Radio Vision began a twice-weekly program for young people featuring articles from "Rolling Stone" and "Spin" after a teen-age listener in Newburgh called up to ask "how do I know what everyone's talking about?"

Although there are no commercials on Radio Vision, that doesn't mean there aren't any ads.

One of the most popular of Radio Vision's programs is Elaine Brandon's Market Guide. The Middletown volunteer reads supermarket ads from daily newspapers to listeners who otherwise might miss the specials. Mrs. Brandon, however, occasionally goes beyond mere ad-reading to offer some homey advice.

During the summer months, for example, she might advise listeners to check out local vegetable stands. Or, this time of year, she could suggest listeners visit the stands of local apple orchards for some fresh, local produce.

"It's very comforting to know there are people out there who really listen," said Mrs. Brandon, a charter member of Radio Vision's volunteer staff, who jumped at the chance to apply the college radio major that she never before had the chance to use.

She and Radio Vision officials were reminded of the popularity of the market program one day when the tape broke and they went off the air for a couple of minutes. In that brief span of time, Radio Vision received two phone calls wondering what was going on.

Maybe that wouldn't be impressive for a big city commercial station. But it's not bad for Radio Vision, with its 650 closed-circuit listeners.

One of its most faithful is Agnes Lutjens of Chester. The blind, 82-year-old's been listening daily for the past nine years.

"It's the greatest thing in the world," Mrs. Lutjens said. "I used to be able to read the paper, but now I can't read. I think it's marvelous so many people give their time to read to us."

People like John L. Masi, 63, of Middletown, who's been reading the newspaper over Radio Vision for all of its 10 years. He originally got involved as a member of the Middletown Lions Club, which was an early supporter of the radio service. Being a Lion, with the club's emphasis on sight-related programs, Masi was eager to offer his help. But his links with amateur theater groups also provided a lure.

"The possibility of going on the air intrigued me," he said.

Masi can recall when Radio Vision broadcasted out of a single studio the size of a closet. Nowadays, the studios aren't much bigger, but there are three of them, plus a control room and office. It's housed in an addition at the rear of the Ramapo Catskill Library System building at 619 North Street, Middletown.

Assisting Hulse in running the broadcast service is Carol Cleveland, coordinator of volunteers. The station broadcasts live from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., and then switches to an automated system that repeats the previous seven hours of live programming. At 11 p.m., the automated system switches over to the In Touch network from New York, where readers go over such publications as the New York Times and Wall Street Journal until 9 a.m. when local programming again takes over.

The non-commercial Radio Vision service is funded by local donations and state and federal grants. It began operations in October, 1979, in Sullivan County with just 21 listeners.

"It's grown a lot," said Richard Anglin, director of the Ramapo Catskill Library System. "I think the impact on the community has been strong all these years."

The service is looking for additional listeners. Anyone knowing of someone who is visually or print handicapped and can benefit from the service may call 343-1131 or 1-800-327-7343. Prospective readers also may call the numbers to volunteer their services.

CADILLAC HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS SKI TEAM: 1990 STATE CHAMPS

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to extend my sincere congratulations to the Cadillac High School girls ski team for their State championship victory on February 26 at the Crystal Mountain Ski Lodge.

Each individual on the team put in many long and strenuous hours of practice to achieve this illustrious award. The viking ladies who accumulated 78 total points to defeat the defending State champions, exhibited exemplary teamwork and sheer determination to turn their dream of a State championship into a reality. The victory marks their first State title since 1983.

The Cadillac High School girls ski team, which is under the leadership of head coach Gay Thompson and technical coach Joe Host, include the following members: Amber Corsiglia, Courtney Craig, Lizi DeBoer, Patti DeBoer, Kattie Frier, Jenny Goodson, Marci Johnson, Missy Montague, Amy Potvin, Brita Sjogren, Christina Streff, Kristin Tatarchuk, and Kelly Thompson. Statisticians for the team were Christa Gensler, Mandy Kesl, and Laura Warren.

I commend each and every member of the girls ski team for their outstanding performance throughout the year. Potvin, Tatarchuk, and Thompson earned all-State honors.

High school athletics bring a school and community together in a common cause, leaving memories that last a lifetime and enrich the lives of everyone involved.

On a final note, I would like to congratulate the Cadillac High School boys ski team for their strong third place finish at the State meet.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in congratulating this talented group of fine young ladies for their accomplishment. They have made us all proud and I wish them the best of luck in the future.

TRIBUTE TO DONALD W. "SQUIRE" HURRELBRINK

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Donald W. "Squire" Hurrelbrink of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio. Mr. Hurrelbrink is celebrating his 60th year as director of the Warren Junior Military Band of Warren, OH.

Mr. Hurrelbrink established his musical career at the age of 12 when he began playing the violin and the French horn. He was a member of his high school band and received his formal music education at Dana's Musical Institute of Warren, OH, and continued his education at the Cincinatti Conservatory of Music.

Mr. Hurrelbrink took over as director of the Warren Junior Military Band in 1930 and is its director to this day. He also taught music education at Austintown-Fitch High School, but retired in 1971 after 24 years. He has received a variety of awards in his many years of music. In 1973 he received the George Washington Award which is the highest award given by the Freedom Foundation of Valley Forge, PA, as well as the Veterans of Foreign Wars Silver Medal of Honor, which is the highest VFW award given to a civilian. The most recent award he received was the city of Warren's Ohio Spirit of '87 Award in Education.

The Warren Junior Military Band has grown and prospered under the leadership and guidance of Donald Hurrelbrink. The band has won 20 national championships, 11 Canadian championships, and has been awarded gold, and silver medals in international competitions. The Warren Junior Military Band has performed all over the United States participating in such major events as the Orange Bowl parade, Hudson's Thanksgiving Day parade, Gimbel's Thanksgiving Day parade, the Indy "500" parade, Disney World's Christmas parade, and most recently the Macy's Thanksgiving Day parade. Mr. Hurrelbrink has also taken his band to Europe, not once but three times, performing in such countries as Holland, Austria, Germany, Italy, France, and Great Britain.

The Warren Junior Military Band has accomplished a great many things, but Mr. Hurrelbrink has not lost sight of what is the most important aspect of young people's participation in an extracurricular activity. He has taught his many musicians pride, patriotism, and dedication.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend Donald W. "Squire" Hurrelbrink on his 60 years of dedicated service to the Warren Junior Military Band as well as congratulate him on his shining example for the young people of our community and we owe him a great deal for the time and dedication he has shown to the thousands of young people he has influenced. I am honored to represent this outstanding citizen.

TRIBUTE TO MR. JAMES W. ROUSE

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a friend and constituent Mr. James W. Rouse who will receive the 1990 Victorine Q. Adams Humanitarian Award on June 7, 1990. The award will also be presented to the Honorable Clarence H. "Du" Burns, former mayor of Baltimore City, and Dr. Percy V. Williams, noted educator and community leader in Harford County.

James Rouse has devoted his adult life to working with cities across America—their problems and their opportunities—both as a developer and as a member of public interest organizations.

He is the founder of the Rouse Co., and for 40 years served as its chief executive officer, as president and then chairman of the board. Upon retirement from the Rouse Co. in 1979, he founded the Enterprise Foundation, a charitable corporation that works with neighborhood groups throughout the United States to provide fit and livable housing for the very poor.

Jim Rouse has worked hard to serve not just his local community, but the Nation as well. He was a member of President Eisenhower's Task Force on Housing in 1953 and of President Reagan's Task Force on Private Sector Initiatives in 1982. In 1987 he was chairman of the National Housing Task Force which made proposals to Congress in 1988 for a new housing program for the United States and for legislative action to carry it forward.

I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring James Rouse, a man who has helped so many in our community and across the country.

NATIONAL LAW ENFORCEMENT TRAINING WEEK

HON. LES ASPIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a joint resolution to designate January 6 through January 12, 1991, as "National Law Enforcement Training Week."

Law enforcement training, which serves as our law enforcement professionals' weapon against crime, is critical to the immediate and long-term safety and well-being of this Nation. As you know, law enforcement professionals provide service and protection to our Nation, so that our citizens may live free from fear. Each day, 500,000 law enforcement officers put their lives on the line as they go about their duties. Their jobs are dangerous ones. In the past 10 years, over 1,500 police officers have been killed, over 200,000 have been injured and approximately 600,000 have been assaulted. Law enforcement training is the tool which enables these professionals to protect the Nation and themselves from harm.

Last year we passed National Law Enforcement Training Week. Now, with the crime and drug war raging, our law enforcement professionals need our support more than ever. That is why I am again sponsoring legislation to recognize the importance of law enforcement training. Law enforcement training is a critical element in keeping our law enforcement officers safe and effective. The legislation will not only honor current law enforcement training professionals, but it will also heighten the importance of this profession as a potential career path for the youth of our Nation. I hope you will join me in sponsoring this legislation.

A SALUTE TO FATHER FELIPE J. ESTEVEZ

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the achievements of Father Felipe J. Estevez, in this the 20th anniversary of his ordination as a priest. I would like to share with my colleagues some of the wonderful things Father Estevez has done for our community in Miami.

Father Estevez is the pastor of St. Agatha Catholic Church and the Director of Catholic Campus Ministry at Florida International University. He is also a professor at St. Vincent de Paul Regional Seminary, in Boynton Beach, FL. He was ordained a priest in Fort Wayne, IN, on May 30, 1970. He served as a missionary in Honduras and since 1974, has belonged to the Archdiocese of Miami where he began as professor at St. Vincent de Paul Seminary.

Father Estevez received a doctorate in theology at the Pontifical Gregorian University, in Rome, Italy. His doctoral dissertation is titled "The Spirituality of Félix Varela." He is nationally recognized as an expert on Félix Varela, one of the most prominent intellectuals of Cuban culture. Father Estevez has also published a critical translation of Varela's "Letters to Elpidio" and "El Perfil Pastoral de Félix Varela."

In 1980, Father Estevez was honored by being chosen president/rector of the seminary at Boynton Beach. During his tenure at the seminary, the institution was transformed into a regional mode of governing under the bishops of Florida. Father Estevez was the first Cuban-American to become head of a major American seminary. As an educator, he has served the Association of Theological Schools for numerous visitations to theological schools for accreditation and has given priests' retreats in different dioceses throughout the Nation. As a genuine educator, Father Estevez loves children and youth and is currently responsible for coordinating the completion of St. Agatha School.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to congratulate Father Estevez for the wonderful tasks he has so skillfuly undertaken and for his dedication to his vocation and his community.

WHY I AM PROUD OF AMERICA

HON. GEORGE E. SANGMEISTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. SANGMEISTER. Mr. Speaker, each year the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and its Ladies Auxiliary conduct the Voice of Democracy broadcast scriptwriting contest. This year more than 137,000 secondary school students participated in the contest competing for the 12 national scholarships totaling $56,000, which was distributed among the top 12 winners. The contest theme this year was "Why I Am Proud of America."

The winning contestant from each State came to Washington, DC, for the final judging as a guest of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

I am proud to announce that Steven Connor Cortes from Park Forest, IL, was the first place winner for the State of Illinois in the Voice of Democracy broadcast scriptwriting contest. Mr. Cortes is a senior at Marian Catholic High School in Chicago Heights, IL. I am submitting Mr. Cortes' speech for the RECORD so that others may benefit and be inspired by this young man's words.

WHY I AM PROUD OF AMERICA

(By Steven C. Cortes)

I am in love with a lady in New York. We have met only once, yet I am in awe of her. She is beautiful, yet strong, old yet forever young. She is the Statue of Liberty, and she represents the reasons Why I Am Proud of America.

The Statue of Liberty, majestic and beautiful, stands as a symbol of the greatness of America. I am proud of America because America is a great nation, the greatest in the world. However, this greatness is not deprived from our national wealth or prestige. No, America's greatness emanates from its people * * * its spirit. Dwight D. Eisenhower stated it well when he said, "America is great because America is good." You can see the goodness of America everywhere, in South Carolina, where volunteer groups are helping the victims of Hurricane Hugo rebuild their shattered homes * * * in Northern California, where neighbor is helping neighbor recover from a devastating earthquake. America's goodness is evident in the inner-cities, where volunteers are teaching their fellow Americans to read and write and providing food and shelter for the less fortunate.

I am proud of America because we welcome immigrants from around the world and allow them to share in our opportunity. Opportunity * * * America still is the land of opportunity * * * a country where no dream is too big, and dreams can become a reality. In America's free enterprise system, a person is rewarded and judged by merit, not birthright or status. Because of this opportunity, we have become a nation of vision * * * a bold nation of men and women striving to defy the odds and achieve success * * * such as Walt Disney, who as a boy in Chicago held two jobs to help support his poor family, but through hard work and visionary spirit rose to achieve unparalleled success in the entertainment industry.

The American people are champions of the underdog, this is the country where a man, like Abraham Lincoln, can go from a log cabin to the White House where a poor ghetto kid can become a head of a corporation, and an immigrant can share in the American Dream. I am proud of America because the American Dream is still a reality. The American Dream says that anyone who is willing to work can share in the prosperity that is America.

I am also proud of America because we are free people * * * free to determine our own destiny, free to express ourselves, free to exercise our religious beliefs. We are free from the tyranny and oppression which so much of the world endures. We enjoy these freedoms because we are a democracy, a nation in which the people rule the government, not the other way around.

This past summer, we all witnessed with great admiration the students of Beijing, China, as they raised an effigy of the Statue of Liberty, and quoted Patrick Henry while demanding freedom and democracy from their communist government. Then, we were horrified when the Chinese Army slaughtered thousands of those innocent demonstrators in Tiananmen Square. The difference between China and the United States is that those brave Chinese students have no rights. I am proud that in America we have rights to protect us from tyranny. I am proud that in this, the 200 year anniversary of the Bill of Rights, the Constitution still protects our personal liberty.

We owe much of our liberty to the Fathers of our country, men like George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Ben Franklin, patriots who fought and died for our independence and created our government, truly they did pledge, in the words of the Declaration of Independence their "lives," their "fortunes," and their "sacred honor."

In the intervening years and wars, countless brave veterans from Saratoga to Normandy, from Yorktown, to Iwo Jima have renewed this pledge and paid the price for freedom. Often that price was their lives.

The Statue of Liberty symbolizes the goodness, the opportunity, and the freedom of America, I am proud of the United States, and I thank God daily that I was born an American. May we all, young and old, rich and poor, black and white, pledge "our lives our fortunes, and our sacred honor" to defend and advance the cause of mankinds greatest hope * * * the United States of America.

NATIONAL LIBRARY WEEK

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, this week is National Library Week, and in libraries throughout the Nation there will be a special emphasis on family literacy. Tomorrow, on the "Night of a Thousand Stars," libraries will host family read-alouds to highlight the importance of reading and literacy. In my district, I was invited to be a reader at the Cobb County Public Library for this event. Though, I will be unable to attend, I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues the outstanding role the Cobb County Public Library plays in our community. Under the leadership of its director, Mary Louise Rheay, this library has recently completed a major addition to its headquarters and branches. Use of the headquarters library has doubled and overall circulation has increased dramatically. Cobb has one of the finest libraries in the State, and with the efforts of those in the library, literacy is becoming a reality for many.

IN PRAISE OF THE COMMERCE DEPARTMENT'S EXPORT PROGRAM FOR JAPAN

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Commerce Department's new program to encourage American exports to Japan. This is an idea whose time has come.

For too long United States industry has sat back on its heels in the face of the onslaught of Japanese imports. For too long has our business community placed its emphasis on turning to government for defense of its domestic markets, rather than for assistance in carrying the economic offensive to markets abroad.

Yes, there are barriers to free trade in Japan and in other nations, but the best way to reduce those barriers is to confront them head on with export initiatives of our own, rather than through restrictive trade sanctions. This is what the Japanese do themselves. In Korea for instance, Japan faces the same trade barriers which we do. Yet Japan has over a $5 billion trade surplus with Korea. The United States is predictably running a trade deficit with Korea. This is one problem we cannot blame on Japan. A member of the $100 million Association of Foreign Trade Agents of Korea [AFTAK] buying mission to the United States recently said about himself and his fellow mission members: "We have to come to the United States to buy United States products because not enough United States companies bother to sell their products in Korea." America must wake up. The United States is still the world's No. 1 overall exporter, but we need to adjust more quickly to the new competitive global environment if we wish to stay that way.

We need to balance our budget to free up capital for new private investment. We need to invest more in new research and development. We need to implement new export enhancement program such as the new Commerce initiative. Most of all, we need to balance our budget to free up capital and allow new United States, rather than foreign private investment in the American economy. This would be the greatest export enhancement project of them all.

DRUG FREE SCHOOL

HON. RONALD K. MACHTLEY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the efforts of a high school from the First District of Rhode Island, North Providence High School.

What is so special about this school? I am proud to announce that North Providence High School has been named one of a drug free school by the Department of Education. This is a highly competitive honor—261 schools throughout the country are nominated, and only 51 were chosen for this distinction.

During a time when the drug problem plagues our cities and towns, affecting people of all ages, races, and backgrounds, these 51 schools are at the forefront of the war on drugs. By demonstrating a substantial decrease in drug and alcohol use, North Providence High students have been practicing what we here in Washington preach. Through education initiatives, hard work, and perseverance, these students are just saying no.

Schools like North Providence High in Rhode Island prove that it can be done, and they should stand as an example for us all.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE 1989-90 NCOE FIGHTING CARDINALS

HON. GLENN POSHARD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, we have a name for it in Illinois. It's called March Madness.

Every year the powerhouses and upstarts alike aim their sights on representing their school in the Illinois State High School Basketball Championships. It's a time when we all take a moment to enjoy the accomplishments of our young people, and point with pride to the communities we call "home."

I am extremely proud to recognize the March Madness accomplishments of a school that includes students from my district, and is in the same area where I first learned to love the competition and learning experience found in sports.

The Norris City-Omaha-Enfield High School Fighting Cardinals completed this season with a 31-2 record, winning the Eldorado Holiday Tournament, the Mid-South Conference Championship, plus regional, sectional and super sectional championships.

To cap it all off they came within inches of a State championship, and indeed showed great courage and determination by shaking off that disappointment to come back and win third place in the Illinois Class "A" Basketball Tournament.

I salute everyone involved with making this such a terrific season. And I'm entering their names in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so they may receive the recognition they so richly deserve.

THE SECOND FRONT IN THE DRUG WAR

HON. LAWRENCE COUGHLIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues a recent speech by White House Drug Policy Director William Bennett. The speech concerns the difficult problem of ridding our urban areas of drugs and drug-related violence. I urge my colleagues to read it carefully.

REPORT FROM THE DRUG WAR: THE SECOND FRONT

(By William J. Bennett, Director, Office of National Drug Control Policy, National Newspaper Association Conference, Friday, March 16, 1990)

Last summer, Secretary Louis Sullivan and I released the findings of the 1988 National Household Survey on Drug Abuse. As I described the results then, we are fighting two wars. The first, more manageable front against casual drug use has turned in our favor. Overall, there are fewer Americans using drugs than five years ago. But we have a second front. It is against chronic, addictive drug use—cocaine use in particular—and we are not yet winning on that front. For every indication we have that overall drug use is declining, we have another reminder that chronic, addictive drug use remains a severe and stubborn problem. There is some evidence that things are not getting worse on the second front, but it will still be some time before things there will be better and seem better.

In a way, this stubborn front is the part of the problem we are most familiar with. The drug problem that we read about in our newspapers each day and see on TV at night is usually about habitual cocaine use and the crime that often accompanies it. On this front we see the hard-core addicts. We stare at and pity the cocaine babies. We are shocked by the crack houses. The drive-by shootings. The decaying neighborhoods. And although our data are not what they should be, it seems to most demographers that this part of the problem is concentrating increasingly in our poor, black, and Hispanic inner-city neighborhoods.

Having said that, let me hasten to add that this is by no means a problem of every inner-city neighborhood. Again, by a long shot, most black and Hispanic citizens are innocent of drugs, either as users or dealers. They are most often the victims, not the perpetrators, of drug crime. Most inner-city residents are people who, despite their poverty, despite their often run-down housing, and despite the dire predictions of the culture-of-poverty theorists, confront and resist drug use every day. They are America's new invisible men and women. We rarely hear about them. We rarely see them on TV. But they are there. They retain their dignity and pride by keeping their children away from drugs, obeying the law, and by opposing the drug dealers in their midst.

It is at the second front of the problem that many of these good citizens live, and life there can be very tough. The problem is tough not for any abstract, philosophical reason; not because we can't comprehend the culture of inner-city life; and not because we don't understand it. It is tough because of the facts on the ground, and the very tough nature of those facts. Life in some of these drug-torn neighborhoods is characterized chiefly by its murder and addiction rates. Here drug kingpins may be heroes to the young, and the meanest thugs can rule the streets. Open air drug markets are adjacent to elementary schools, crack vials are strewn across parking lots, and in some schools, students must walk through metal detectors to check for weapons.

I have been to 41 American cities where there are drug problems and it is no exaggeration to say that in some of these places, drugs have made life very much as Hobbes imagined it to be in the state of nature: solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short.

Now given these facts—facts not open to serious dispute—I confess that I still find it remarkable that there remains any debate over what our response should be to this specter. The position that I have taken all along is that the rehabilitation of a community cannot begin until some degree of fundamental order and basic civility has been established. Treatment and education stand little chance of succeeding if they must compete in a neighborhood where drugs and drug dealers flourish on every corner. Most people who use drugs cannot be made whole or made well in such an environment.

Yet some people think they know different. One critic insists that "until the root causes of drug abuse are addressed—the lack of education, housing, employment, health care, family, and above all poverty—the scourge of drugs will continue to expand." He and many others argue, essentially, that the real task of drug policy in these communities is not to create safety and order, but to rid society of poverty, unemployment, racism, illiteracy, disease. I say we need to get at these things too, but we must immediately, and directly, and with all deliberate speed go after the drug problem. The larger conditions do exist, of course, and no one denies that they are important factors in locating chronic drug use. But I have grave doubts that we can explain the drug problem in our cities merely by pointing to sorrounding social conditions.

Now let's agree on some things: unemployment makes people poor. Poverty deprives them of certain material goods. Prejudice keeps them excluded. Broken homes or nonexistent families make children vulnerable. Bad schools do the same. All these things may indeed make people more likely to succumb to drugs; they sap the spirit and weaken the will. They are conditions that present us, all-together, with a kind of weakened immune system. But drugs are the invading virus. And you must attack the virus while you are pondering how to strengthen the immune system. Drugs are not merely a symptom, they are a cause, an efficacious and sometimes deadly one. They degrade human character. They sear the mind and they numb the soul. And that is why we oppose them.

Drugs can make other serious problems seem modest. As John Jacob, president of the Urban League, has observed: "Drugs have destroyed more families than poverty ever did." I think he's right. Drugs can turn good citizens into victims. They can turn otherwise solid citizens into addicts, and even into criminals. That's why good citizens in bad neighborhoods need our help—active and aggressive help.

When drugs penetrate a neighborhood, all other efforts to improve the condition of the people who live there are weakened. Schools can't function when gang members roam or rule the halls. The local economy can't work when store owners, tired of risking their lives, move their businesses elsewhere. Young people don't bother looking for honest work when it seems as if only crime pays. Streets, parks, and recreational areas become places to purchase drugs, consume them, and wage gang war on a daily basis.

To save these communities, the legitimate forces of good—law enforcement officials, private citizens together, all the agents of the rule of law and civility—must assert themselves. Measures of enabling toughness are called for because, as Flannery O'Connor wrote: "You have to push as hard as the age that pushes against you." Only here, with drugs, you must push harder.

That means that in our inner-city quasi-states of nature, the good guys must confront the bad guys, and they must win. They must do so responsibly, lawfully, and constitutionally. But they must also do so decisively. This is true and it is common sense. And I say it because the people who live in neighborhoods that most of us here would be too scared to walk through say it too. Last week, a number of courageous local heroes—from Albuquerque, New York, Houston, Oakland, and other cities—came to Washington to have lunch at the White House and exchange stories about their experiences. Some of them organize neighborhood patrols; others bring anti-drug messages to schools or youth groups. But all of them know this to be true: Where they live, as elsewhere, order must prevail over chaos. Similar men and women live in the towns and cities where your papers are published. Ask them.

When you meet people who have seen the drug epidemic up close, they'll tell you that there are two arguments they hate hearing. The first is that we should legalize drugs. The second is that their neighborhood doesn't need more cops. The fact is that they need more cops and they want them. If you disagree with me or with them, then let me suggest that you go see for yourself.

In the neighborhoods where they live, law enforcement is not a political option or a policy question; it's a moral imperative. The drug trade has succeeded in many places in eroding the basic sense of security that is a precondition of life, liberty, happiness, and so much else. So while others debate the fine points of root causes, and deride the role of basic law enforcement, the residents of poor neighborhoods are busy marching on crack houses, putting locks on their doors, and chasing dealers out of apartment courtyards. Sometimes, in the absence of enough police, they themselves help patrol the streets.

I think if we fail to see this part of the drug war, this second front, as first a question of restoring an essential level of security to citizens, then we risk ignoring the most pressing concern of the people who live there, the people who everyone involved in the debate say they want to help. If we fail to act here, their lives will go on, but they will increasingly be lives shaped by drugs and the street culture drugs have produced. And on such streets, as we all know, drugs themselves will soon become a root cause of one more generation's misery.

Finally, let me point to the educational implications of what we do or fail to do. If we teach that crime is wrong and that, in the end, crime doesn't pay, we should be ready to back up those sentiments with action. Not for the sake of seeming tough, being tough, or acting tough, but for the sake of acting compassionately toward our children. What I mean is so obvious it seems to have been forgotten, but as Orwell said, sometimes our most important responsibility is a restatement of the obvious. Here's the obvious: there are two things children need more than anything else; they need love and they need order. And if you love children, the first thing you do for them is to secure their safety. I ask you: why might some people who work to provide these things for their own children deprecate the value of these things to the children of others?

In my neighborhood, middle- to upper-class Chevy Chase, Maryland, if we see someone selling drugs on the street, there is no debate about what we do. We call 911. We do not convene a seminar on root casues. We expect action, and if we don't get it we raise hell. I think that is a natural, civilized, and appropraite reaction. And I don't believe for a moment that a single-parent in Southeast Washington should behave any differently. Equality is the oldest promise of America. Parents—all law-abiding citizens—have an equal right to expect security regardless of where they live.

We have been examining the problem of poverty for decades. Fine. Let it go on. Let it go on smarter. But today the primary need is not to study residents of poor neighborhoods, but to help them. How? By doing unto them what we do for ourselves. I'm asking that we start treating these drug benighted neighborhoods as if we lived there, not as if they were some laboratory for social policy. If we do, we can make things better. I think we can do so soon. And I think we have to, soon.

A TRIBUTE TO NASH CASTRO

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, last weekend Americans everywhere celebrated "Earth Day"—a day we came together to underscore ways to preserve our precious environment.

In our 22d Congressional District of New York, the occasion was bittersweet for us, because it coincidentially coincided with the retirement of the man who over the past 20 years has done more than anyone else to preserve the Palisades Interstate Park for future generations.

Nash Castro is universally respected for his concern for our parkland. The Rockland Review, an outstanding weekly newspaper, published a splendid tribute to Nash upon his retirement. I would like to insert it into the RECORD at this point, and I invite my colleagues to join in saluting an outstanding public servant.

The article follows:

[From the Rockland Reivew, Apr. 19, 1990]

THE PEAKS, VALLEYS OF TWO DECADES AT THE HELM OF THE PIP

(By Alan Lonstein)

After 20 years, Nash Castro is retiring from his post as executive director of the Palisades Interstate Park Commission. "I've worked a long time," he answers when asked why he is leaving now. "It's quite timely for me to retire and venture into other things.

The 70-year-old Castro, a member of several environmental preservations organizations and commissions, will begin working as consultant two days a week. He and his wife Bette will continue to reside in Palisades. "I want to have some time for traveling, perhaps some writing, some fishing, and golfing, landscaping, gardening, visiting with the grandchildren."

Claiming that offering any unsolicited advice to his successor, Robert O. Binnewies, would be presumptuous, Castro would say only, "He is inheriting a very fine staff, very dedicated, very committed, very loyal staff. And he is also inheriting an extraordinary group of commissioners, very talented, very devoted to the park system."

Castro, who is also known for his writing and public speaking, writes as glowingly about the park as he does his staff. In the just published, "Second Century Plan," the park's new blueprint for the future, Castro writes:

"The Palisades Interstate Park System is an environmental vignette of superlative quality, a natural laboratory with many micro-habitats that give rise to the diversity of life, a way station where wilderness and urban clots co-exist, where people come to learn and draw inspiration. It is a priceless resource worthy of our very best effort to assure its integrity."

Castro began his career in 1939 at Grand Canyon National Park, followed by work in a variety of state park. His most recent position was as regional director of the National Capitol Region in Washington, D.C., before becoming executive director of the PIP In 1969.

His interest in this work goes back to his childhood. His mother instilled in him an "inherent interest in nature. She had a passion for horticulture," he remembers, "and I just naturally trended in the same way, by virtue of the example that she set and the enthusiasm she showed. I think she inspired me perhaps to venture into the natural world. I've always been glad that she did, because it's been a very happy, a very fulfilling career."

Castro can easily pinpoint the source of that fulfillment. "Do you realize that in the 20 years that I have been here we have hosted about 150 million visitors to this park system, 60 percent of the nation's population? That's what I mean when I say satisfaction knowing that because of your work, you are providing recreational opportunities, and learning opportunities, to people who might not otherwise have them. And there is no way that you can translate that satisfaction into a monetary value. It transcends it."

The numbers are impressive. During the 20 years Castro has been executive director, the total acreage has increased steadily from 53,616 to 85,208 acres. During the same time, attendance has been erratic, averaging around 7,000,000 people a year.

Looking back on his tenure, Castro is proud. "One of the high points has got to be the acquisition of land for a new park, in the form of Minnewaska State Park. I started working on that project in September of 1969. We're still not finished. We've acquired 11,600 acres, and have plans for acquiring an additional 4,600 hopefully before the summer's over. That's well under way now."

The key to this project, as is true for so many others in the park system, is the generosity of New Yorkers, he says. The park system began solely out of public donations, and Castro feels that the public support will continue for an expansion at Minnewaska. "We see continuing opportunities for interested people to donate land for the parks, yes, and to donate money. I think as time goes along the people of New York will probably achieve that objective. But we've made a good start."

Despite the popularity of the parks, Castro sees "chronic budgetary problems" hampering the parks. "I'm afraid that the parks take too low a priority with those in the position to make the budgetary decisions. There are so many other programs that receive consideration ahead of parks; for example, prisons, health, the social programs; the emphasis is on them. As long as that competition exists the parks will not get their due, which I think is very unfortunate."

These budgetary problems are at the root of Castro's primary regret. "I'm disappointed that I'm unable to leave the park for my successor in a mint like condition, that's my biggest disappointment. For example, our physical plant needs attention, our water systems, our amenities, swimming pools, golf courses, trails. A lot of the physical plant, requires rehabilitation but we just simply have not been able to do it.

"Also, I'm disappointed that our staff has diminished by 30 percent in the 20 years that I have been here, and we're just not able to maintain the kind of standard that we had when I first came. And it's not that this commission has been negligent or has not tried; it's only because public funds simply have not been forthcoming."

These budgetary constraints, however, are not going to prevent the park system from celebrating Earth Day. There are a variety of programs in the works. "The most dramatic thing that we are doing is the Hands Across the Hudson event Sunday, Apr. 22," says Castro. "So much going on, it's hard for me to single out one thing." (For more information on Earth Day activities in the parks, call Zshawn Sullivan at (914) 424-3155 or Carol Schminke at (914) 737-0061).

Castro sees the upcoming Earth Day celebrations as part of a positive trend in people's relationship to the environment. "I think the environment has come into its own finally and I think it's going to be on the top of the nation's agenda from now on. I feel we're going to see a great emphasis on the part of the academic world to train youngsters in the importance of a healthy environment, because I feel that we've reached a point where we can no longer turn our backs on the momentous problems that we've created for ourselves."

NATIONAL CRIME VICTIMS' RIGHTS WEEK

HON. GEORGE E. SANGMEISTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. SANGMEISTER. Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleague, Mr. GEKAS of Pennsylvania, for introducing a measure that designates this week as National Crime Victims' Rights Week. All too often, we seem to give more attention and understanding to the people who commit crimes, than to the unfortunate victims of these crimes. The number of victims of crimes in the United States is astonishing. According to the Bureau of Justice statistics, one in four households, or 23 million families, were victims in 1988 of either a crime of rape, robbery, assault, burglary, household theft, or auto theft.

Mr. Speaker, this assault on the American population represents a direct threat to the preservation of American freedoms. In the spirit of National Crime Victims' Rights Week, I reaffirm my pledge as a member of the House Judiciary Committee to support efforts to protect the victims of crime, to see that justice is done, and also to help prevent crimes from occurring in the first place. I applaud the valiant efforts by the law enforcement officials in my district in their fight to protect citizens from crime. I believe the best way Congress can honor the victims of crime is to increase efforts to prevent crime. Laws should be friendlier to victims and tougher on criminals. Police departments, prisons, and the court system should be given the support they need to effectively carry out their duties and responsibilities. Many of us have come to accept this high rate of crime. I, along with my constituents, refuse to do so.

IN MEMORY OF REV. RALPH D. ABERNATHY

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in memory of Rev. Ralph David Abernathy, a truly great leader in the civil rights movement. A dedicated campaigner for freedom, Reverend Abernathy's contributions will never be forgotten in the hearts of all Americans.

I am truly saddened by Reverend Abernathy's death, and he is one individual I wish I had the opportunity to meet and discuss his honorable lifelong commitment to civil rights. He has inspired me with his tireless campaign against segregation through nonviolent means and above all, his tremendous humility.

Beginning in 1955 with the Montgomery bus boycott, Reverend Abernathy began his commitment to a cause which was neglected for more than 100 years. Joining the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in the same year, Reverend Abernathy joined Martin Luther King, Jr., and orchestrated the nonviolent resistance to segregation throughout the South for the next 13 years.

When Martin Luther King, Jr., was assassinated in April 1968, the mantle of leadership of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference fell on his most trusted deputy and closest friend, Reverend Abernathy. Under the presidency of Abernathy, the SCLC took on a new militancy without abandoning the philosophy of nonviolence to which King was dedicated to.

In the SCLC's Poor People's Campaign during May and June 1968 in Washington, DC, Abernathy drew the much needed attention to unemployment and underemployment of minority groups in our Nation, as well as forcing a commitment to eradicating poverty from the United States. He was an American committed to the freedom and equality of all people.

Although Dr. King's dream is not perfectly realized today, it is individuals such as Reverend Abernathy that have enabled all Americans to continue our journey to the promised land. Reverend Abernathy's contributions as a campaigner for justice have made our Nation much better in the cause of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

A TRIBUTE TO: MRS. DAVID PUGSLEY

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, please allow me a moment to recognize an outstanding citizen, Mrs. David Pugsley. In honor of her community efforts, Mrs. Pugsley is being inducted into the Exchange Club of Midland, MI, Book of Golden Deeds on Tuesday, April 24, 1990.

I believe Mrs. Pugsley exemplifies the spirit of civic virtue. For over 20 eyars, she and her husband, David Pugsley, have volunteered at the Pineview Homes, an Evart-based child care agency which provides homes for 37 boys. In recognition of Marvel and David's tireless service, Pineview has named one of its homes the Pugsley House in their honor.

Mrs. Pugsley's many contributions as a volunteer are rich and varied. When her daughter Kathleen was still a little girl, Mrs. Pugsley assisted with her Campfire Girl activities. In fact, it was on a Campfire Girl field trip in 1966 that Mrs. Pugsley first discovered Pineview, which was then just being built. In 1968, Mrs. Pugsley became chairwoman of the Midland District Campfire Girls Leaders and Sponsors Association.

Throughout her many years of service, Mrs. Pugsley has never lost sight of the Christian virtues which inspire her. She credits her faith for the success of her volunteer efforts, and says, "you gotta give God the glory."

Mr. Speaker, please join me in honoring Mrs. David Pugsley, who as a volunteer, a mother, a grandmother, and a humble Christian, has exemplified those personal characteristics which we all hold so dear.

A TRIBUTE TO THE UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA LAW SCHOOL

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, the University of Georgia School of Law is one of the finest institutions in the Nation, and I don't say that just because I am a graduate of that institution. The law school's excellence is well known in Georgia and throughout the Southeast, and I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues the fact that a team of Georgia law students recently won the international championship in the 1990 Philip C. Jessup International Law Moot Court Competition. After defeating four teams in the tournament to capture the U.S. championship, the Georgia team then, in the World Championship Final Four, defeated Australia and Canada to gain the international title.

The members of the University of Georgia championship team are: Myra Creighton, Charles Gernazian, Mike Sharp, Doug Smith, and Michelle Vaughan. These students, along with their student coach, Mike Daley, and adviser, Jere Moorehead, have brought pride and great honor to the University of Georgia School of Law.

While these students were in Washington winning national and international honors, another group of Georgia law students was winning an intrastate moot court championship in Athens. These students, Shawn Holtzclaw, Jeff Warncke, and Traci Green, insured a weekend sweep for Georgia's moot court competitors.

Dean Ron Ellington and the rest of the faculty and staff of the school of law are to be congratulated and commended for setting the standards of excellence for their students. The people of the State of Georgia have always recognized the University of Georgia as a world-class institution. This victory only confirms the quality and commitment to excellance that has been a trademark of this school for many years. How about those Bulldogs!

FAMILY AND MEDICAL LEAVE ACT, H.R. 770, PART II

HON. TIMOTHY J. PENNY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, last week I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an analysis of H.R. 770, the Family and Medical Leave Act—April 19, 7663–7666—that document stated a number of potential areas of concern should the extensive mandate of leave provided by H.R. 770 become law.

Today I rise to place on the RECORD "Words From Outside the Beltway Against Federally Mandated Leave." Tomorrow, I will continue this series of extensions in opposition to H.R. 770 with the positions of the small business community and the Bush administration.

WORDS FROM OUTSIDE THE BELTWAY AGAINST FEDERALLY MANDATED LEAVE

Our view is shared by employees. A recent Washington Post/ABC News public opinion poll found that only 3% of the American public believes that parental leave legislation should be given high priority by the Congress. (Washington Post, April 6, 1989.) In addition, the "Employee Attitude Survey on Flexible Compensation" (Swinehart Consulting Inc., March 1987) shows that 91 percent of women and 80 percent of men prefer flexible plans over other benefit systems with fewer choices.

From Norfolk, NE:

"We must have a qualified, certified technical engineer to maintain our equipment to prescribed fidelity levels. Can you please tell me where we are going to find a qualified engineer for a predictably temporary job? In fact, where can we find a qualified temporary sales person, program director, sales manager, etc., etc.??? We have just finished a three month search for a qualified sales person? Our benefits are exemplary!!!"—Robert E. Thomas, Radio station WJAG/KEXI.

From Bristol, RI:

". . . as a mother of 5, grandmother of 12, please understand I am absolutely in favor of appropriate benefits; but they should not be mandated by the government . . . Your obvious concern will be that employers may not offer appropriate benefits; but believe me, if you look at the demographics of the work force nationwide, the competition is so keen that the benefit system will be self-driven and produce many creative cafeteria-style benefit programs. That, I believe, is the appropriate method to meet the needs of the individual employees in various situations across the nation."—Ursula M. Beauaregara, Administrator, Metacom Manor Health Center.

From St. Petersburg, FL:

"This legislation could unnecessarily inflate the cost of basic electric service and hurt families who are already struggling to meet their basic needs. To remain competitive, in some of our smaller companies should this bill pass, these mandated minimum benefits could force the reduction or elimination of other existing benefits or jobs."—Lee H. Scott, Florida Progress Corporation.

From Memphis, TN:

"The biggest problem we have with this one-issue approach to benefits is just that—it appeals to just one group of employees or applies just to limited circumstance. As I travel . . . I am impressed by the diversity of our employees. They are all ages, all races, male and female, some highly educated, some less so; some hold high-tech jobs, others do not. The 55 year old employee may be more interested in prescription drugs. The 24 year old single parent is probably more interested in child care. The more flexible a company benefit program, the better for the workplace."—Gary L. Burhop, Malone & Hyde, Inc.

From Harvard University:

". . . mandated benefit programs can work against the interests of those who most require the benefit being offered."—Respected public policy expert, Lawrence H. Summer, (Business Week, January 16, 1989.

SHOULD CONGRESS DESIGN THE BENEFITS PIE?

Congress will soon be asked to make an important decision which will affect the benefits received by millions of America's workers. The Family and Medical Leave Act, H.R. 770/S. 345, would mandate that all firms over a certain size provide 10 weeks family leave and 13 weeks medical leave (15 in the House version) for all employees. Health benefit continuation coverage and restoration to the same job position would also be mandated. The Family and Medical Leave Act sounds like a simple solution to the problems faced by workers struggling to balance work and family demands. The truth is that the needs of workers are as diverse as the workers themselves.

Creative policies and flexible benefit plans are the wave of the future. The use of flexible benefit plans rose considerably between 1986 and 1988 (Bureau of Labor Statistics, 1988 Survey of Employee Benefits in Medium and Large Private Firms). Today's plans include such options as health insurance, child care, flexible working hours, retirement plans and work sharing. The list of options is endless and continues to grow.

Mandated family and medical leave jeopardizes the rights of employers and employees to decide the work and family benefits best suited to their individual and mutual needs. More important, it puts at risk other, possibly more important, benefits. The pie cannot be expanded, only pieces adjusted. To accommodate a new piece, another one must be removed. For example, a survey conducted by the Census of Certified Employee Benefit Specialist found that a majority (62%) of respondents are concerned that mandated leave policies may actually reduce the overall flexibility of employers to meet the needs of a changing work force.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q. Congress has enacted minimum standards such as child labor laws and health and safety standards. Isn't this just another labor standard?

A. No. While Congress has imposed anti-discrimination and safety measures on the workplace, it has always stopped short of indicating particular benefits. For example, there's no federal law mandating vacation benefits; and although ERISA regulates pension plans, it does not mandate that pensions be provided. A minimum standard should be designed to help everyone. Mandated leave would not help all workers.

Q. The 9–5 study shows that family leave policies help small business growth. Seven parental leave states experienced job growth while seven states without parental leave did not. Wouldn't you agree that this will actually benefit business?

A. This study has been discredited because it compares apples and oranges. The study draws a cause and effect relationship where there is none, ignores the impact of population changes on job growth and uses the manufacturing sector as the sole basis of its comparison.

Q. Doesn't the GAO (General Accounting Office) claim that there is virtually no cost to this bill—only a few dollars a year per employee?

A. The General Accounting Office claimed that federally mandated leave would cost employers $188 million to $212 million annually. Moreover, all GAO estimates only covered the employer's cost of continuing health coverage for the absent employee. The study ignored other implications of the legislation which are likely to constitute a far larger cost than health insurance alone. The study claims no cost in lost productivity or operational problems and no cost in recruiting, hiring or training the substitute employee to replace the employee on leave. The GAO admits that their 1988 estimates are 30 percent too low.

Q. Our surveys show that the majority of the American public favors parental leave.

A. While the American public may support parental leave as a benefit, it does not support federally mandated leave legislation. For example, a recent Washington Post-ABC News Poll found that only 3 percent of the American public believe that parental leave legislation should be given high priority by the Congress (The Washington Post, April 6, 1989).

Surveys used by the proponents are misleading because they simply ask whether parental leave is a good benefit. That is not the issue. The issue is whether the federal government should mandate it.

For example, surveys such as the one recently published in Better Homes and Gardens magazine simply asked whether or not parents should be able to take the leave. It did not ask whether it should be federally mandated. The surveys also don't ask employees whether they would be willing to sacrifice other benefits which they prefer in order to accommodate a mandate.

Q. You referred to flexible compensation plans. Don't few employers use cafeteria benefit plans?

A. You have to look a the trend toward cafeteria plans. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics (1988 Survey of Employee Benefits in Medium and Large Private Firms), flexible benefit plans rose considerably between 1986 and 1988. This trend will continue. Flexible benefits are the wave of the future.

Q. You say that if this bill passes, employers may subtly discriminate against women. How can that be? This bill is available to both women and men.

A. We fear that employers will consider a woman's likelihood of taking mandated leave and subconsciously opt for candidates who aren't as likely to do so.

● A survey conducted by the Certified Employee Benefit Specialists found that "a majority (61%) are apprehensive that mandated leave policies may have an inadvertent discriminatory effect against hiring employees who would be most likely to use the benefit (such as women of childbearing age and persons with a history of or propensity toward illness, including older workers)."

● A 1988 CATO Institute Study ("Mandatory Family-Leave Legislation: The Hidden Costs") found that if the bill is enacted, "job opportunities for women would decrease, not increase."

Women are viewed as the primary caregivers—even by GAO which based its cost estimates solely on women. It stated that: "We believe that leave to care for new children is used predominately by women."

Q. Aren't we years behind the other industrialized countries?

A. We shouldn't base our policy on what everyone else does. Do we want the oppressive tax policies of these countries? Despite the extensive benefits available to European workers, a greater percentage of their working day must be devoted to purchase goods and services considered standard in this country. Do we really want to Europeanize our job creation record and standard of living by moving down the path of extensive European mandated employee fringe benefits?

Q. What is the Administration's position?

A. The Administration opposes the bill. Secretary of Labor Elizabeth Dole has stated that she will advise the President to veto the bill or any mandated leave legislation.

Q. How many employers currently offer leave policies?

A. A 1988 Bureau of Labor Statistics benefit plan survey of over 30 million employees at medium and large firms found that approximately 90% were covered by disability leave with some level of income replacement. In addition, a recent CENSUS of Certified Employee Benefit Specialists found that a solid 72% of respondents indicated that, in the absence of formal leave policies, employers with whom they are associated informally accommodate workers who are ill or have seriously ill children (CENSUS, March 1989, pp. 3, 4).

Q. Does action at the state level make the case for federal legislation?

A. The state laws have been in effect for only a short time period—not long enough to make a full determination of the impact on businesses operating in these states. However, we are already beginning to discover some of the adverse effects of these laws.

It is also important to note that these state laws are not as broad as the proposed federal "Family and Medical Leave Act" and place many more restrictions on how the leave can be used.

SAN CARLOS INDIAN RESERVATION

HON. JON L. KYL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. KYL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior the administration of surface rights in approximately 10,650 acres of land which are presently within the boundaries of the San Carlos Indian Reservation in Arizona, but which are managed by the Forest Service as part of the Coronado National Forest.

This legislation will resolve a longstanding controversy over the status of those 10,650 acres.

The south boundary of the San Carlos Reservation, which is affected by this bill, was originally established by President Grant in 1872. By an agreement dated February 1896, and ratified by the act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat. 360), the San Carlos Tribe conditionally ceded approximately 232,000 acres of land, known as the San Carlos Mineral Strip, to the United States. In approving the agreement, Congress expressly provided that "the lands so surrendered shall be open to occupation, location, and purchase under the provisions of the mineral-land laws only."

San Carlos Mineral Strip lands were added to the Crook—now Coronado—National Forest by Presidential proclamations on July 1, 1908, and March 21, 1917. These actions were prohibited by the act of June 10, 1896. They also violated section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. 703), which authorized the Federal forest reserves to be created from public lands, not Indian lands, as well as section 10 of the 1891 act. Section 10 stated:

That nothing in this act shall change, repeal or modify any agreements or treaties made with any Indian tribes for disposal of their lands, or of any land ceded to the United States to be disposed of for the benefit of such tribes . . .

On June 17, 1963, Undersecretary of Interior Carr issued an order restoring the subsurface rights in the mineral strip to the San Carlos Apache Tribe, subject to any valid existing rights.

On July 17, 1963, Secretary Udall issued an order restoring the surface rights in the mineral strip to the tribe. The Forest Service objected that National Forest lands were not subject to the authorities under which the Secretary of the Interior's order was issued, and that there was no other authority by which the Secretary of the Interior could legally transfer National Forest lands to the tribe.

It is not the intent of my bill to transfer to the tribe lands owned by the United States. The purpose of the bill is to direct that the Secretary of the Interior administer the lands. The jurisdictional dispute between the Secretary of Agriculture and the tribe has impaired the ability of the tribe to make economic use of the land.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the text of the bill be reprinted in the RECORD at this point.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "San Carlos Mineral Strip Act of 1990."

SEC. 2. DECLARATION OF BOUNDARY.

Congress hereby affirms that the San Carlos Indian Reservation includes those lands consisting of more or less ten thousand six hundred and fifty acres and generally depicted on the map entitled "San Carlos Apache Mineral Strip—Coronado Division" and dated April 24, 1990, which shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Chief, Forest Service, and the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, and the tribal offices of the San Carlos Apache Tribe. The boundary of the Coronado National Forest is hereby modified as depicted on the map referred to in this section.

SEC. 3. DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT.

The lands referred to in Section 1 shall be deemed to have been held in trust by the United States for the benefit of the San Carlos Apache Tribe since December 14, 1872.

SEC. 4. ADMINISTRATION OF LANDS.

All right, title, and interest in the lands referred to in section 1 shall hereafter—

(1) be administered by the Secretary of the Interior; and

(2) be held in trust by the United States for the benefit of the San Carlos Apache Tribe and to be a part of the San Carlos Indian Reservation for all purposes.

SEC. 5. SAVINGS PROVISION.

Nothing in this Act is intended to affect or modify any valid entries under the mining laws of the United States.

WELCOME TO OUR NEWLY NATURALIZED CITIZENS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is with sincere pleasure that I congratulate the residents of New York's 22d Congressional District who have chosen to become citizens of the United States with all the privileges, freedoms, and responsibilities that American citizenship entails.

Our beautiful Hudson Valley region in New York State is proud of its newest citizens, and I invite my colleagues to join me in welcoming the following newly naturalized Americans and extending to them our best wishes for a happy and prosperous life in their new homeland:

EASTERN AIR LINES BANKRUPTCY EXAMINER'S REPORT

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by a group of former Eastern Air Lines employees who live in my district to place the entire Eastern Air Lines bankruptcy examiner's report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

My constituents feel that the public has a right to know what Frank Lorenzo has done to Eastern Air Lines. As my colleagues will remember, Mr. Shapiro, the court-appointed examiner in the Eastern bankruptcy, found that, in 12 out of 15 instances, it was reasonable to assert claims totaling between $284.5 and $403.1 million. In essence, the examiner found that it was reasonable to support claims that Texas Air had unfairly drained assets from Eastern Air Lines.

Because of the concerns a number of my colleagues have with the $40,436 cost of printing the entire report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I would like to bring the following summary of the report to the attention of my colleagues and to the public.

This summary was prepared to serve as a guide for the entire report. For any of my colleagues who wish to see the full report, it can be purchased by calling (215) 425-2711.

SUMMARY

A close examination of Texas Air Corporation dealings with Eastern demonstrates how Lorenzo has implemented an overall strategy to strip key component parts from Eastern for the purpose of transferring those assets to the rest of the Texas Air family. These actions have diminished the value of Eastern while enriching sister subsidiary Continental and the parent company, Texas Air.

Eastern management is controlled by Frank Lorenzo and Texas Air through managers installed in positions of authority at Eastern, who owe their allegiance to Texas Air and Lorenzo. The compensation of these executives is largely based on the performance of Texas Air, not Eastern. All of them own Texas Air stock or have Texas Air stock options. During the period that Eastern management was selling assets, purportedly to raise cash, it was diminishing Eastern's value while enriching its affiliates, primarily Texas Air and Continental. Eastern management engineered the transfer of value by:

Selling Eastern assets and services for less than they were worth.

Financing the sale of Eastern assets and receiving substandard credit instruments that were not marketable.

Purchasing assets and services from Texas Air and affiliates for more than they were worth, and purchasing unnecessary assets and services.

Making operating decisions that enhanced the interests of Texas Air and its subsidiaries at the expense of Eastern (i.e., curtailing service from Eastern markets that were subsequently picked up by Continental).

Lending cash to affiliated companies, while at the same time claiming a need for liquidity.

In order to more fully investigate, Texas Air's "asset transfer scheme", the Bankruptcy Court (in March 1989) assigned Examiner Shapiro to report upon "certain disputed pre-petition transactions and relationships" between Eastern and Texas Air and its 2 affiliated companies. While limited to just 15 such transactions, the conclusions documented in the recently issued (March 1, 1990) Report of the Examiner and the Examiner's Analysis are very clear.

First, Texas Air was accused of taking hundreds of millions of dollars (at least $493 million, adding all the Examiner's figures) out of Eastern in a series of transactions beginning in 1986. (The lower $403 million figure reported in the press did not include the additional $90 million claim that the Examiner referred to in connection with the original acquisition. See Section 8.2 pg. 3 or Report pg. 81) The Examiner reported these asset transfers could be challenged as "self-dealing" on the part of Texas Air. He went on to outline thirteen deals that specifically benefited Texas Air and its non-union subsidiary Continental, at Eastern's expense. In fact, Examiner Shapiro stated in the strongest possible language: "The history uncovered in the course of the investigation reveals a host of transactions where Eastern apparently suffered from conflicts of interest on the part of Texas Air and the interlocking officers and directors it has put in place. Indeed, there are indications that from time to time Texas Air's officers entertained the notion to 'Cherry pick' Eastern assets to the benefits of Continental." (Report pg. 103)

From the very first transaction investigated, the Examiner was highly critical of Texas Air's actions. Examiner Shapiro noted that even in Texas Air's initial acquisition of Eastern in 1986, there was "no clear evidence that the acquisition by Texas Air was anything other than harmful to Eastern economically." (Report pg. 80)

Second, although the Examiner was very careful not to draw any conclusion as to criminal misconduct, his report provides a detailed, and at times scathing examination of the relationship between Texas Air and Eastern and the pre-petition transactions. The Examiner reported that he: "Has determined that twelve of the fifteen pre-petition transactions referred to him for investigation would have sufficient merit to warrant assertion of claims on behalf of Eastern against Texas Air or others under either a theory of constructive fraud on creditors or a theory of breach of fiduciary duty." (Report pg. 98)

Under ordinary circumstances, the Examiner reported he would recommend that the Court commence "adversary proceedings to prosecute claims on behalf of the estate concerning the pre-petition transactions." (Report pg. 74) However, because Texas Air and Eastern have agreed to a "settlement" of these claims, the Examiner has suggested that the Court look toward approval of the proposed settlement and hold off the question of commencing adversary proceedings against Texas Air.

Of the potential $493 million in pre-petition claims documented by the Examiner, Texas Air and Eastern have agreed to a $280 million settlement, of which only $133 million would be paid in cash upon confirmation (and of this amount, $26 million represented a pension payment Texas Air was already mandated to make by a Court Order of September 13, 1989). The balance will be in the form of "soft assets." Thus, even under the Examiner's proposed settlement, Eastern will receive only $107 million in real cash of the more than $493 million taken from it illegally by Texas Air and Continental. Referring to this settlement, ALPA attorneys have accused the Examiner of being willing, "despite the clear rape of [Eastern] by its parent, to let the rapist go free."

Third, referring to the crucial need for increased vigilance in the future, the Examiner stated: "In view, however, of the continuing danger of conflict of interest, the Examiner deems it essential that any plan of reorganization contain safeguards against any future sacrifice of Eastern's interest to those of Texas Air and its other affiliates. The Examiner therefore "strongly recommends that the Court not approve any plan that does not include appropriate undertakings by Texas Air in this regard, provide for a continuing monitoring arrangement to assure compliance with them, and reserve oversight jurisdiction in the Court." (Report pg. 104)

Finally, The Report of the Examiner and the Examiner's Analysis of Pre-Petition Transactions strongly vindicate Eastern unions' position and their long-standing contention that Texas Air Chairman Frank Lorenzo bought Eastern intending to strip it of its best assets (i.e., planes, gates, landing slots and cash) to benefit his non-union carrier Continental and Texas Air to the severe economic detriment of Eastern and its unionized employees.

The following sections detail some of the specific pre-petition transactions which took place after Texas Air gained control of Eastern. What is important in each of these is not so much the Examiner's recommendations, but rather the diversity of the schemes utilized by Texas Air to transfer assets and hence, value from captive Eastern to non-union Continental and Texas Air itself.

TAB 1—TEXAS AIR'S ACQUISITION OF EASTERN

In connection with the 1986 acquisition, Eastern paid Texas Air a $20 million inducement fee and funded approximately $109 million of the total cash paid by Texas Air to Eastern's shareholders. Texas Air in turn paid Eastern approximately $68 million to purchase previously unissued Eastern stock. Thus, the acquisition of itself by Texas Air cost Eastern a net amount of $61 million in cash. This payment of cash by Eastern directly benefited Texas Air by reducing the cash it had to pay for the acquisition. The Examiner found it doubtful that Eastern received any benefit from making this payment. In fact the Examiner stated, "there was no clear evidence that the acquisition by Texas Air was anything other than harmful to Eastern economically" (Report pg. 80). The Examiner has reported that it would be reasonable for Eastern to assert a claim in the amount of approximately $61 million.

This $61 million amount includes only the net cash payment to Eastern's common shareholders and does not include an additionally $90 million that Eastern paid in dividend arrearages on its preferred stock, unreimbursed expenses and other items relating to the acquisition. Since most if not all of these expenditures would not have occurred but for the acquisition, there is a basis for seeking to recover the additional amount. If proceedings were brought to recover in connection with the acquisition, the Examiner recommended that consideration be given to adding a claim for this $90 million as well. This brings the total acquisition recovery amount up to $151 million. (Report, footnote 44, pg. 81)

TAB 2—EASTERN'S $16 MILLION RECEIVABLE FROM TEXAS AIR

Apparently, to improve the appearance of Eastern's financial statements, approximately $16 million in expenses paid by Eastern in connection with the acquisition by Texas Air were recorded as a receivable from Texas Air. The purpose was to permit the expenses to be capitalized and charged against income over time rather than immediately. (Report pg. 81) Although Eastern showed this amount as an asset on its balance sheet for two years (a non-interest bearing receivable payable on demand), no effort was made by Eastern to collect until the matter became the subject of attention in litigation between the unions and Eastern. Finally, in October 1988, Texas Air paid the receivable without interest. At the rate being paid by Eastern to borrow money at the time, this two-year forbearance cost Eastern approximately $5 million in lost interest alone. (Report pg. 81) In contrast Texas Air demanded immediate payment of $4.8 million for fees and expenses related to the failed sale of the Shuttle to a Texas Air subsidiary.

This was a genuine obligation and Eastern treated it as such in its publicly filed financial reports. There is authority in the Bankruptcy Court for the principle that forbearance from collecting a receivable due on demand can be viewed as a transfer of rights without fair consideration. Moreover, a controlling stockholder's failure to pay a substantial receivable (and officer's and directors' failure to make any collection effort) in a time of financial need would appear to be an appropriate subject for a claim of breach of fiduciary duty. According to the Examiner, the probable amount of recovery should be at least $5 million. (Report pg. 82)

TAB 3—MANAGEMENT FEES PAID BY EASTERN TO TEXAS AIR

Eastern paid Texas Air a $6 million management fee annually ($500,000 per month) from January 1, 1987 until filing for bankruptcy in March 1989, when the fee was reduced to $250,000 per month. During that time Texas Air charged Continental and SystemOne fees of $400,000 and $100,000 per month, respectively. the aggregate fees from the three subsidiaries were intended to cover Texas Air's annual expenses for financial, investor, government relations and other services provided to them by Texas Air. (Report pg. 82)

However, the evidence found by the Examiner raised questions as to whether the value of the services received by Eastern, or the cost incurred by Texas Air in providing those services, was equivalent to the fee paid by Eastern. The unions still assert that in fact, there were no readily apparent or tangible services provided. Further, although Eastern initially was charged a greater fee than Continental because surpassed it in size in the latter part of 1987, and there is no clearly sufficient justification for its having been required to do so. At a minimum, the Examiner stated that it would be reasonable to assert a claim, with a probable recovery of about $1.4 million (the excess of Eastern's fee over Continental's from January 1988 through February 1989). (Report pg. 83) At a maximum, one might contend the entire fee charged, of over $15 million, should be recovered from Texas Air.

TAB 4—CONTINENTAL-EASTERN SALES, INC. (CESI)

Continental-Eastern Sales, Inc. was formed in December 1986 to ostensibly combine the sales forces and City Ticket Office ("CTO") operations of Continental and Eastern. It was owned equally by the two airlines, and expenses were divided between them using various ratios based on revenues and/or mileage. However, the transaction immediately favored Continental.

The Examiner's investigation revealed evidence that Eastern contributed substantially greater numbers of experienced sales personnel, sales offices and CTO's without an equivalent corresponding contribution from Continental. Specific investigation aslo revealed Eastern brought 166 sales offices to CESI compared to 27 from Continental. Eastern's offices were concentrated mostly in the high-traveled and heavily populated Northeast, where Continental desperately needed sales offices to support its People Express acquisition. Conversely, the relative few Continental sales offices were located in markets where Eastern had little or no presence, and, therefore, were of little value to Eastern. The Report also revealed evidence the CESI maintained excessive accounts receivable from Continental which improved Continental's cash flow position, at times at Eastern's direct expense. (Report pg. 84)

By December 1988, Continental and Eastern jointly dissolved CESI. Mr. John Nelson, former Eastern Executive Vice President of Marketing, who had headed CESI, became Executive Vice President of Continental's Marketing division. At a minimum, the Examiner documented the probable amount of recovery would be in the range of $1 to $3 million.

TAB 5—AIRCRAFT TRANSACTIONS BY EASTERN WITH CONTINENTAL

In late 1986, Eastern decided to dispose of six A300 aircraft. In February 1987, Eastern entered into a four-year lease agreement with Continental for these aircraft, providing a fixed purchase option price that could be exercised at the end of the lease term. Upon delivery of the aircraft, Continental learned that the A300s were in worse condition than it had expected, and convinced Eastern to restructure the lease in terms of the method of payment and the financing of modifications and maintenance costs. By late 1988, Continental and Eastern agreed to exercise the purchase option and Eastern sold the A300s to Continental. Continental immmediately entered into a sale/leaseback agreement with a third party at a profit to Continental.

The results of the Examiner's investigation support a contention that Eastern did not receive fair value for its lease and eventual sale of the A300s to Continental. Eastern initially agreed to a very low lease rate and locked itself into a purchase option price based on the 1987 market with the option was to be exercised four years later and the market was rising. Further, the restructuring of the lease agreement appears to have remedied Continental's cash-flow problems to Eastern's detriment. While these transactions are complex, the Examiner reported it would be reasonable to assert a claim in the range of $5.7 million to $11.5 million. (Report pg. 85)

TAB 6—PEOPLE EXPRESS NOTES PURCHASED BY EASTERN FROM TEXAS AIR

In March 1987, Eastern purchased People Express unsecured notes due 2001 with a face value of $30 million from Texas Air for approximately $26 million in cash. This acquisition was approved by Eastern's Board of Directors under circumstances warranting an inference that Eastern's management and the common directors made material omissions and misrepresentations. In addition, the price that Eastern paid appears excessive since it was based on the market price of unrestricted securities, whereas the notes held by Eastern are restricted securities which could not be freely sold. Finally, these unsecured notes, which Texas Air had selected for Eastern, have not performed as well as secured notes of People Express held by Texas Air that could have been sold to Eastern instead. Texas Air realized over a $4 million profit on the sales of these notes to Eastern. The purchase made no economic sense for Eastern for two reasons:

The notes were of questionable worth, and Eastern was, according to its management, desperate for cash.

The Examiner reported that there were reasonable grounds for a claim relating to Eastern's purchase of the People Express notes, with a probable range of recovery of between $8 million and $11 million. (Report pg. 85)

TAB 7—SALE OF NEWARK GATES LEASE FROM EASTERN TO CONTINENTAL

Effective February 1, 1987, Eastern assigned its lease of sixteen gates at Newark International Airport to Continental in exchange for an $11 million promissory note (due in 1998) and a sublease of five gates. Although the witnesses involved in the deal testified that the $1 million per gate price was based on comparable transactions at Newark, the only other assignment of gates at Newark resulted in a price of $1.9 million per gate. Before the transaction, Eastern's Newark gates were valued at $2.03 million per gate by a consultant hired by Eastern (AVMARK), and at $1.875 million each by Eastern itself and Eastern's own investment banker. The evidence concerning the transaction suggests something less than arm's length negotiations. A year earlier, in December 1986, Eastern had sold 8 gates in the less congested Charlotte Airport, to Piedmont for $25 million in cash. The Examiner believes that there were reasonable grounds to assert a claim that Eastern received less than fair or reasonably equivalent value in the Newark gates transaction, with a potential recovery in the range of $10 million to $14 million. (Report pg. 86)

TAB 8—TRANSFER OF INTERNATIONAL ROUTE AUTHORITY FROM EASTERN TO CONTINENTAL

In conjunction with the Department of Transportation's approval of Texas Air's acquisition of Eastern, Eastern's international route certificates were reissued to allow Eastern or Continental, but not both, to serve those routes (Eastern received no monetary compensation for any of its routes from Continental). Among the numerous routes co-certified were Eastern's Mexican and Canadian routes, its Miami-London route, and its Central and South American routes. After the acquisition, Continental began to serve Eastern's Miami-London and some of the Mexican routes. The Miami-London route is now being sold by Continental, not Eastern, to American.

Before the acquisition, Eastern had a single "tag" flight between Baltimore and Ottawa, which was maintained to prevent any competing carrier from obtaining such authority. After the acquisition, Eastern and Continental agreed that Continental would use the authority to fly between Washington and Ottawa and Montreal, and Eastern had to drop its Baltimore flight. (Report pg. 87)

TAB 9—TEXAS AIR FUEL MANAGEMENT ARRANGEMENT WITH EASTERN

TAC Fuel Management, Inc. ("TAC FMI"), a wholly owned subsidiary of Texas Air, was formed in 1987 to (1) combine and coordinate the fuel purchasing activities of Eastern and Continental, (2) develop more sophisticated purchasing strategies, and (3) invest in petroleum refining, transportation and storage facilities. To finance these activities, each carrier paid TAC FMI a one cent per gallon fee/surcharge. This translated into approximately $10–$12 million per year in fees that went from Eastern directly to Texas Air. The Fuel Service Agreement between TAC FMI and each carrier also estimated savings of up to 5% of each carrier's fuel costs, or roughly 2.5 to 3.5 cents per gallon, and provided that at least 75% of the fees paid would be invested in fuel facilities.

In reality, the fees paid by Eastern to TAC FMI were comingled with other Texas Air funds and invested in short-term marketable securities. There were no investments in fuel facilities. The cost savings Eastern realized from TAC FMI's activities were less than the fees Eastern paid. Accordingly, the Examiner reported there were reasonable grounds for asserting that Eastern had received no benefit from its association with TAC FMI and Eastern should recover the entire amount of fees paid less what it would have spent to provide its own fuel management services, for a net recovery in the area of $18.8 million. (Report pg. 88)

TAB 10—EASTERN'S SALE OF SYSTEMONE TO TEXAS AIR

Before its acquisition by Texas Air, Eastern had been seeking equity partners (among them Continental) to help finance expansion and improvement of its computer reservation system ("CRS"), SystemOne Direct Access ("SODA"). In February 1986, Merrill Lynch valued SODA at $200–$250 million. (Report pg. 88) Although there were serious negotiations with a potential consortium of carriers based on such a valuation, those negotiations broke down. In June 1986, Eastern created two new wholly-owned subsidiaries, SystemOne Direct Access Inc., which made "SODA" a separate corporate entity, and EAL Automation Systems ("EASI"), which would provide telecommunications and data processing services to Eastern and to SODA. On the day the subsidiaries were created—which was after Texas Air had agreed to acquire Eastern—Texas Air issued a press release stating that SODA and EASI would ultimately be transferred to a wholly-owned Texas Air company to be known as SystemOne Corporation. The next day, Eastern and Continental entered into an agreement formalizing Continental's participation in SODA by granting Continental the right to purchase 4.9 percent of its stock for $12.25 million (i.e., 49 percent of $250 million).

In December 1986, Eastern's Board authorized management to continue negotiations for the sale of SODA and EASI to Texas Air. Financial analysts from Duff & Phelps opined in January that the sale of SODA/EASI for a $100 million long-term Texas Air note would be "fair from a financial point of view." There were apparently no price negotiations between Eastern and Texas Air. On March 3, 1987, Eastern's Board unanimously approved the sale for a $100 million, 6 percent convertible subordinated Texas Air note due in 25 years (2012). The transaction closed on April 10, 1987 and included agreements for the continued provision of services by SODA and EASI to Eastern on a long-term basis. Under this agreement, Eastern paid almost $130 million to use its old CRS in just the first year of the agreement ($30 million more than it was sold for).

Eastern has asserted several reasons for the sale of SODA and EASI to Texas Air. The first and primary reason presented to Eastern's Board was that, unlike Eastern, Texas Air could meet SODA's and EASI's mounting financial needs. There is evidence that Eastern was concerned over such financial requirements even before Texas Air agreed to acquire Eastern. The evidence is not clear, however, as to the amount of funds needed or whether Eastern anticipated that the subsidiaries would generate sufficient cash-flow to meet their financial requirements without the infusion of outside capital. In any event, Texas Air's cash contribution to System One has been limited to a revolving line of credit. (Report pg. 90) A second asserted reason for the sale was a desire to expand SODA's travel agent base and thereby increase Eastern's "halo" benefits (i.e., increased bookings that result from travel agents' tendency to favor the carrier that provides the CRS). There is evidence to show that Continental (a predominantly Western U.S. carrier), was a good match for Eastern (a predominantly Eastern U.S. carrier), but the Examiner's evidence also shows that Continental would have continued to participate in SODA had Eastern not sold the subsidiaries to Texas Air. A third reason given for the sale—expected cost savings from economies of scale—also does not appear to have been dependent on the sale to Texas Air. (Report pg. 90).

Whether or not the consideration paid by Texas Air was adequate depends on the reliability of the Duff & Phelps fairness opinion. The Examiner uncovered evidence that Eastern provided Duff & Phelps with undervalued financial projections and that their opinion was based on several incorrect assumptions or omissions. Adjustment of the Duff & Phelps valuation for possible changes in the financial projections and assumptions yields significantly higher values for SODA and EASI. Deloitte & Touche, ALPA's experts, testified that SODA's value should have been determined by comparison to the contemporaneous sale by TWA of 50 percent of its PARS system to Northwest Airlines for $140 million, producing a value for SODA of $334 to $394 million, to which $103 million should have been added for EASI (or a total of between $437 to $497 million).

Although the Examiner found it extremely difficult to value a CRS, his analysis of the available evidence indicated that Eastern sold SODA/EASI for less than fair value, by an amount in the range between $150 and $250 million. (Report pg. 91)

TAB 11—BAR HARBOR AIRWAYS TRANSACTION

Bar Harbor Airways was a commuter carrier operating as an Eastern feeder under Eastern's name. In response to Bar Harbor's financial needs, Texas Air agreed in April 1987 to provide funding and purchase an equity interest. In June 1987, Texas Air assigned its financial obligations to Eastern and its ownership rights to Continental. Continental obtained a 50 percent equity interest for $1.4 million. Eastern bought a $5 million subordinated note convertible into Bar Harbor common stock, sold Continental an option on it for $500,000, and established a $5 million line of credit for Bar Harbor. As part of the transaction, Bar Harbor was to acquire Provincetown-Boston Airlines ("PBA"), a troubled commuter owned by Continental, for $1.

In October 1987, the Commuter Division of Texas Air was moved to Continental to coordinate and oversee all its commuters, including Bar Harbor. In late 1987 and early 1988, Bar Harbor again experienced financial difficulties arising in part from operation of PBA, leasing of new ATR aircraft from Continental, and replacement of a Continental feeder in Philadelphia. Eastern supplied much of Bar Harbor's financial needs during this period, and by the end of 1988 Bar Harbor owed Eastern $16.9 million. In September 1988, for the first time, Continental began to provide significant funding to Bar Harbor. In January 1989, Continental purchased a portion of the subordinated note from Eastern. Eastern and Continental then converted their shares into Bar Barbor common stock. At this point, Continental had spent $12.2 million for a 43% share of Bar Harbor and Eastern had spent $32.3 million for its 41% share.

The evidence uncovered by the Examiner shows that Eastern provided disproportionate financial support for a commuter that was virtually controlled and operated by Continental and from which Continental received substantial benefits, and that it did so under unfavorable financial terms. The Examiner reported that Eastern's contributions exceeded by some $10.6 million to $12.4 million the value to Eastern of its ultimate 41 percent equity interest. (Report pg. 92)

TAB 12—STRIKE CONTINGENCY FEES PAID BY EASTERN TO CONTINENTAL

In March 1988, Eastern entered into an Option Agreement with Continental under which Continental would provide Eastern with pilots and flight attendants to enable Eastern to continue its operations in the event of a pilot strike. When a strike did not materialize during 1988 and Eastern concluded that the arrangement was generating unduly adverse labor and public reactions, the Agreement was allowed to lapse by its terms on November 30, 1988. In the interim, Eastern paid Continental a total of $49.8 million in charges specified in the Agreement for training 419 reserve pilots and 600 flight attendants; in essence a readiness fee to pay pilot salaries, payroll costs and maintenance preparedness. The willingness of Eastern management to spend millions in this manner supports the unions' claims that the Eastern/Texas Air team's basic intent has been to eliminate union representation.

TAB 13—EASTERN'S DEPOSIT OF CASH COLLATERAL FOR TEXAS AIR'S GUARANTEE IN CONNECTION WITH A $200 MILLION PRIVATE PLACEMENT

In March 1988, Eastern issued $200 million of Second Priority Secured Equipment Notes due 1993 in private placement. Texas Air agreed to guarantee a portion of Eastern's obligations under this borrowing in consideration of Eastern's payment of guarantee fees. Eastern secured this partial guarantee by depositing $40 million in cash demanded by Texas Air. This collateral deposit earned interest at a rate below both Eastern's and Texas Air's cost of borrowing. The Examiner's investigation raised questions as to whether the deposit was approved by Eastern's Board of Directors and, if so, whether misstatements were made to the purchases of the notes. (Report pg. 94)

The Examiner's evidence suggests that Texas Air apparently treated Eastern less favorably in connection with this guarantee than it had treated Continental in an analogous situation where it had required no collateral for a much larger guarantee just one year earlier. Moreover, Texas Air loaned Continental $193.5 million during this period, on an unsecured basis. Further, Texas Air required Eastern to post the $40 million cash deposit as security for a $69 million secondary liability at the same time that Eastern held $186 million in unsecured obligations of Texas Air and its affiliates. The Examiner reported there were grounds to seek recovery on behalf of Eastern in the amount of $5–$7 million, based on the spread between Eastern's cost of borrowing and the interest that the $40 million security deposit earned. (Report pg. 94)

TAB 14—EASTERN'S $40 MILLION LOAN TO CONTINENTAL

In June 1988, Eastern made a $40 million loan to Continental, which was repaid a few days before Eastern's Chapter 11 filing. This loan took place just three months after Eastern had given Texas Air $40 million in cash collateral as described above, which itself was just weeks before Texas loaned Continental $43.5 million; the $43.5 million loan was, in turn, repaid only weeks after the $40 million Eastern loan to Continental. Although Eastern denied any connection amount these various events, the timing raises serious questions concerning subordination of Eastern's financial interests to those of Continental. (Report pg. 95) During the same time frame, Eastern applied to the IRS for a waiver of a $105 million obligation for underfunded pension contributions because it "didn't have the cash".

TAB 15—EASTERN'S PAYMENT OF CASH DIVIDENDS ON PREFERRED STOCK GUARANTEED BY TEXAS AIR

Eastern has four series of publicly traded perferred stock. The most junior of these series was issued as part of the consideration to the former common stockholders of Eastern pursuant to the acquisition and is guaranteed by Texas Air. Eastern paid cash dividends on these merger preferred stocks for each quarter prior to the bankruptcy, while paying dividends in kind (by issuing additional shares) on the three more senior series of preferred stock for the last three quarters prior to the bankruptcy. This cash outflow occurred at the same time Eastern was selling assets to raise cash liquidity.

The effective cost of paying dividends in kind was the present value of future dividends on stock given as dividends and related sinking fund costs. If this effective cost of dividends in kind was lower than Eastern's borrowing rate, dividends should have been paid in kind. This seems to have been the case with the guaranteed stock, the difference during the final two quarters of 1988 having been about $200,000.

Of greater significance, the last cash dividend payment of approximately $6.7 million on the merger preferred stock occurred just days before Eastern declared bankruptcy, at a time when Eastern's borrowing cost was practically infinite because of its poor financial condition. This payment of cash dividends definitely benefited Texas Air in that paying in kind would have meant issuance of additional shares on which Texas Air would be the guarantor. Accordingly, the Examiner reported that there were reasonable claims on behalf of the estate in the approximate amount of $8 million. (Report pg. 96)

EXAMINER'S ESTIMATE OF PRE-PETITION CLAIMS RECOVERY

To summarize, the fifteen pre-petition claims investigated by the Examiner have the potential recovery values of between $284.5 to $493.1 million as outlined in the table on the following page. The unions believe that even these staggering numbers are still too low. Had these transactions never taken place, Eastern would have remained a much stronger carrier with the possibility of there having to be a union confrontation, a strike or the bankruptcy filing.

EXAMINER'S ESTIMATED RECOVERY VALUE FOR EASTERN ASSETS—INVESTIGATED TRANSACTIONS

Asset transfer transaction	Recovery/settlement value
Texas Air's acquisition of Eastern	$61 to $151 million.
Eastern's $16 million receivable from Texas Air.	$5 million.
Management fees paid by Eastern to Texas Air.	$1.4 million.
Continental-Eastern Sales, Inc.	$1 to $3 million.
Aircraft transaction by Eastern with Continental.	$5.7 to $11.5 million.
People Express notes purchased by Eastern from Texas Air.	$8 to $11 million.
Sale of Newark gates lease from Eastern to Continental.	$10 to $14 million.
Transfer of international route authority from Eastern to Continental.	Not estimated.
Texas Air fuel management arrangement with Eastern.	$18.8 million.
Eastern's sale of System One to Texas Air	$150 to $250 million.
Bar Harbor Airways transactions	$10.6 to $12.4 million.
Strike contingency fees paid by Eastern to Continental.	$180,000.00.
Eastern's deposit of cash collateral for Texas Air's guarantee in connection with $200 million private placement.	$5 to $7 million.
Eastern's $40 million loan to Continental	No claim.
Eastern's payment of cash dividends on preferred stock guaranteed by Texas Air.	$8 million.
Total	$284.5 to $493.1 million.

In addition to these fifteen transactions investigated by the Examiner, Texas Air has implemented numerous other schemes to transfer assets from Eastern. The next two sections briefly deal with just two of these schemes.

EASTERN SHUTTLE SALE

Eastern initially attempted to sell its profitable Northeast Shuttle operation to a new Texas Air division for $125 million in cash and a $100 million note. When blocked by the unions, the Shuttle was then sold for $365 million (or $145 million more) to New York developer Donald Trump.

At best, the Shuttle sale was an ill-conceived plan. Its loss to Eastern was not offset by the infusion of cash it brought since most went into the Escrow Account and has not been available for current operations. Eastern's shuttle was a highly visible brand name that had been developed over two decades. And, as the only consistently profitable segment of Eastern, it added $40–$60 million annually into Eastern cash flow. It sale also significantly reduced Eastern's presence and visability in the critical Northeast corridor.

Additionally, the removal of the Shuttle from Eastern did not result in the total removal of Shuttle-related overhead expenses. When the loss of cash flow was combined with these residual overhead expenses, the balance resulted in a loss of $30–$40 million to Eastern rather than the $60–$70 million gain originally claimed by Eastern management.

EASTERN DOWNSIZING SCHEME

Since the takeover of Eastern by Texas Air, Eastern has been "downsized" through reduced flying and reduced aircraft utilization, and through direct as well as indirect transfer of its flying to Continental. This is in addition to the previously mentioned direct asset transfers (See Section 9, Texas Air's Route Transfer Scheme).

In the 21 month period from February 1986 until September 1988, this "downsizing" strategy reduced Eastern's available seat miles (ASM's) by 25%; yet this resulted in a 31% increase in Eastern's cost per available seat mile. Thus, by reducing/transferring its capacity by one-fourth, Eastern increased its unit cost by nearly one-third. Far from improving Eastern's financial condition, this "downsizing" strategy has significantly worsened it, as Eastern's operational performance continues to deteriorate based on the management decisions made since the Texas Air takeover.

But, mis-management at Eastern has not necessarily translated into trouble for Continental and Texas Air. Nationally, Eastern's traffic has plummeted since the takeover in 1986, while Continental's has increased markedly. Domestic routes represent intangible assets that nevertheless have real, underlying value. Often, where Eastern has dropped routes or services as a result of the downsizing strategy, Continental has generally increased service in those markets. In these cases, no assets have physically changed hands, and yet real value has been transferred from Eastern to Continental.

This not so subtle strategy of asset and route transfer has been further enhanced through Onepass, Eastern and Continental frequent flyer program. When Eastern dropped a route that Continental then picked up, Continental gained the majority of Eastern's market share because of consumer inclination to take advantage of the mileage bonus benefits.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY CONCLUSION

The evidence set forth by the Examiner and other parties strongly suggests that the types of asset transfers detailed in this section are the result of a well thought-out and executed Texas Air plan to systematically strip Eastern of component parts while shifting them to Continental and Texas Air, leaving Eastern unable to function as an independent carrier. Hence, Examiner Sharpiro's reference in his report to the "cherry picking of Eastern's assets to the benefit of Continental".

Texas Air, through its Eastern management team, has and continues to extract value and worth from Eastern leaving its creditors and employees "holding the bag." Key components have been removed while leaving enormous debt behind. The small cash investment that Texas Air made in purchasing Eastern has already been extracted. What remains is the mortgaged empty shell of Eastern's former self.

THE AMERICAN STANDARD FOR HIGH QUALITY

HON. TIM VALENTINE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, among the proudest but lesser known achievements of the 100th Congress was the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Improvement Act of 1987—Public Law 100–107. First proposed by Science and Technology Committee Chairman Don Fuqua in 1986, the legislation was reintroduced by Congressman DOUG WALGREN and became law through the efforts of the committee's current Chairman ROBERT A. ROE, Congressman WALGREN, and Congressman SHERWOOD BOEHLERT. The act establishes the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award which is presented annually to a handful of American companies which have best implemented the concept of total quality management throughout their companies.

On March 20, 1990, I chaired hearings of the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology on implementation of Public Law 100–107. All witnesses indicated that the initial impact of the National Quality Award has been impressive. There is clearly an increasing awareness of the importance of quality in much of the business community. Although relatively few companies feel ready to compete actively for the award, tens of thousands of copies of the award application have been requested. Award winners cannot keep up with the requests they receive to provide advice and information on how they achieved success. Major business publications are including feature stories on the merits of the program. Furthermore, certain of the award winners, realizing that the quality of their products reflect the quality of the components contained in them, have asked their suppliers to institute total quality management programs.

The April 23, 1990, issue of Fortune magazine published the following excellent article on the first 2 years of the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award program. I commend it to my colleagues.

[From Fortune magazine, Apr. 23, 1990]

HOW TO WIN THE BALDRIGE AWARD

(By Jeremy Main)

It takes plenty of work to capture the new national Holy Grail of quality. Happily, companies that lose get nearly as much benefit as the victors. Here are some tips.

If you measure yourself against the criteria laid out by the Baldrige award, you have a blueprint for a better company.—Jerry Junkins, CEO, Texas Instruments.

If all eligible companies in the U.S. went for the Baldrige, the natural growth rate of the GNP would rise by an extra half a percentage point.—Robert Galvin, exchairman, Motorola.

Applying for the Baldrige and getting the feedback they give you is of incredible value to a company.—Roger Milliken, CEO, Milliken & Co.

Companies that are winning the Baldrige are telling the world, and it's doing them a lot of good.—Steve Jobs, CEO, Next, Inc.

The prize has no monetary value. It's a gold-plated medal encased in a crystal column 14 inches tall. Yet a lot of CEOs would give away whole layers of vice presidents to win the thing.

In the three years since Congress created the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award, it has become the standard of excellence in U.S. business. It means that the winner is producing goods or services that are the equal of any in the world—or so close that it's hard to tell the difference—and that their quality continues to improve. Not many U.S. companies appear to satisfy the rarefied standards the Baldrige judges set. Of the tens of thousands of eligible competitors—corporations or major units of them may enter—only 106 applied for the Baldrige in its first two years. And of the five winners so far, none reached the top-scoring category.

Winning isn't the only thing. Contestants discover that standing before the Baldrige examiners and judges reveals their strengths and weaknesses unsparingly. Merely entering the contest creates a competitive urgency that sharpens a company's quality efforts. Xerox vice president Norman Rickard says the successful year-long effort to win the Baldrige in 1989 speeded improvements at the Xerox Business Products and Systems division by three to four years. A weekly "wart report" during the preparations led to a whole series of changes, from keeping plants cleaner to using statistical tools more widely.

For winners, losers, and even nonparticipants, the Baldrige has become a widely accepted guide to running a successful company. Some unexpected effects:

Many companies that haven't yet competed for the award, including Cummins Engine, Next, Texas Instruments, and 3M, have made the Baldrige criteria their corporate standard. Next and Texas Instruments' Defense Systems division will enter this year, the others when they think they are ready.

After winning in 1988, Motorola told 3,600 of its larger suppliers that they too must be prepared to compete—or else. Two hundred refuseniks have been dropped.

Westinghouse Chairman John Marous told all 90 corporate division to compete this year for the George Westinghouse Total Quality Awards, two new internal prizes modeled on the Baldrige—or explain to him in person why they can't. One prize goes to the best unit, the other to the most improved. Each gets $200,000 to spend on anything "as long as it's not immoral or illegal and I approve," says Marous. The best unit last year, the Thermo King Truck Trailer division, automatically becomes the Westinghouse candidate for a Baldrige this year.

Any CEO who catches the fever and tells his vice president for quality to run along and fetch him a Baldrige will be disappointed. Unless the whole company—the CEO included—has made quality central to its efforts for a number of years, there's no point in applying by the April 25 deadline for 1990. (The winners are announced in the fall.)

The Baldrige judges don't look simply for first-rank products or services (see box, "Eight Essentials"). Indeed, only two of the seven categories of questions they ask deal directly with product quality. They want to see quality in everything the company does: in accounting, training, and management, as well as in relations with employees, suppliers, and—above all—customers. Out of a potential top score of 1,000 points, the biggest chunk, 300 points, is allotted to customer satisfaction. The judges want to see careful measurements of quality in all areas—and a rising curve over several years.

Six prizes are offered every year: two each for manufacturing companies and service companies, and two for small businesses with fewer than 500 employees. But only five companies out of a potential 12 winners in two years have capture the Baldrige. Four are big manufacturers: Motorola and the Commercial Nuclear Fuel division of Westinghouse in 1988; Milliken & Co., a major textile firm in Spartanburg, South Carolina, and the Xerox Business Products Systems division in 1989. Only one small company, Global Metallurgical of Cleveland, has received an award. No service company has won yet, partly because U.S. service companies haven't been sharpened by the kind of Japanese competition the manufacturers have faced.

To get an idea of what it takes to win, look at the levels Xerox and Motorola achieved. They made quality central nearly a decade ago. Xerox woke up to find Japanese copier companies gobbling market share with more reliable machines. In 1983, Chairman David Kearns declared quality improvements to be the company's driving principle and started turning Xerox inside out. The company established statistical process controls, trained all its employees and got rid of 90% of its suppliers, awarding all its business to the remaining 450. To give itself benchmarks, Xerox looked for the best competing products and manufacturing methods in the world and set out to equal them.

Back in 1982, before the quality drive took hold, only 92% of the parts that suppliers shipped to Xerox were defect free—a typical figure for U.S. companies. By 1988 the figure was 99.97%. Like other quality-driven companies, Xerox had to change the scale it uses for counting defects. Instead of a percentage, it now counts the number of defects in parts per million. On that scale, 99.97% comes out to a defect rate of 300 parts per million. The next target is 125 parts per million in the 1990s, and the ultimate goal is no defects per million.

That's not totally far-fetched. Several Xerox suppliers haven't shipped a single defective part for three years. The improvements mean that when the customer pushes the button on a 50 Series copier today, he has about a 98% chance of getting good copies. In 1982 when he pushed the button on a 10 Series machine, he had only a 90% success rate—a level that left many customers apoplectic. With these improvements, Xerox has won back some market share and cut costs close to the Japanese level.

In 1981, Motorola set itself a goal of reducing defects 90% by 1986. Former chairman Robert Calvin, a quality fanatic, put in the whole panoply of quality improvement techniques—statistical measures, training, employee involvement, emphasis on customer satisfaction, and so forth—and achieved the goal. Motorola got good enough to export its pocket pagers to Japan. In 1987 the company set new targets: a second 90% improvement by 1989 and yet another by 1991.

Motorola announced an even tougher goal for 1992. The watchword is six sigma. Sigma is a statistical symbol, an indicator of variation outside acceptable limits. The higher the sigma number, the less the variation and the better the quality. Right now Motorola, companywide, is operating at a little better than five sigma, or about 300 failures per million. Attaining six sigma means cutting failures to no more than 3.4 per million. If Motorola gets there, you would have to buy one million of its pagers or cellular phones to find three or four that did not work or had a cracked case or some other fault.

Since speed is an element of quality, Motorola does things faster too. The company cut the time it takes to fill an order for portable radios from 55 days to 15; next year's goal is seven days. Not even the corporate legal department is exempt. Motorola's patent lawyers used to take 18 to 36 months to write and file a patent claim. That leisurely pace has been cut in many cases to two months. The eventual six sigma goal: one-day service for getting the information about an invention from the engineers and filing the claim. Imagine lawyers starting and finishing a job in one day!

Congress created the Baldrige award in 1987 at the urging of some business leaders, notably John Hudiburg, then chairman of Florida Power & Light. The name honored Malcolm Baldrige, a much admired secretary of commerce, who was killed in a rodeo accident as Congress debated creating the prize. Congress gave responsibility for administering the award to the National Institute of Standards and Technology. But most of the costs of processing and judging applicants are covered by a $10.4 million foundation endowed by industry.

Curt Reimann, a former research chemist at the institute who now runs the program, gets high marks from industry for setting up a tough and well-designed, if rather elaborate, award system. Applicants pay a $2,500 fee and submit a 75-page packet ($1,000 and 50 pages for small companies) with answers to 133 detailed questions. Getting ready to compete can be a daunting task—so much so that Christopher Hart took leave in 1989 from teaching at the Harvard business school to set up TQM (for total quality management) Group, a consulting firm in Cambridge to help applicants. Hart is a Baldrige examiner, but conflict-of-interest rules prohibit him from examining an applicant he has served as a consultant.

To win last year, Xerox created a 20-person task force headed by James Sierk, a vice president for quality. All the corporate officers up to Kearns and President Paul Allaire served on oversight committees. Xerox spent $800,000 to gather the necessary data for the application, which covered the activities of the 50,200 employees of the Business Products and Systems division and its suppliers and customers.

But for a small firm like Globe Metallurgical, with only two plants in Ohio and Alabama, 240 employees, and $115 million in sales, the process was relatively simple. Globe produces metal alloys, mostly for the auto industry. Since starting its quality program in 1985, Globe had made all the right moves and kept careful records. For example, even the smallest customer complaint—say, if a shipping label comes unstuck—must be reported and acted on. Complaints dropped from 44 in 1984 to three in 1988, the year Globe won. Productivity in the two plants tripled from 1986 to 1988 despite a painful strike.

When the time came to go for the Baldrige, vice president Kenneth Leach, 35, one of four executives who took control of Globe in an LBO three years ago, sat down at his Apple computer and wrote the whole application single-handedly in one long weekend. He could do that because the data the Baldrige examiners needed were already in his computer.

The applications are scored by teams of examiners drawn mostly from the senior ranks of industry, but also include consultants and academics. Even though examiners get no pay for up to three weeks' intensive work, the jobs are prized as a badge of expertise in a hot field and a ticket to lucrative consulting work. Reimann's office received 592 applications for 169 examiners' spots this year.

Contestants that scored above 601 on the 1,000-point scale usually moved on to the second stage of competition—a site visit by a team of four to six examiners who check the data in the applications. Then the scores plus the subjective findings of the examiners are put before a panel of nine judges who submit their choices to the Secretary of Commerce. He has the final say but so far has followed the judges' recommendations. Getting a site visit is equivalent to being a finalist, although the Baldrige officials don't use the word.

In 1988, out of 66 applicants, 13 rated site visits and three won awards. Last year ten out of 40 applicants got site visits and two won. The drop in applicants in 1989 presumably reflects the sobering realization that the Baldrige is tougher than it first seemed. Certainly interest in the prize has grown. Reimann's office got requests for 65,000 application forms last year.

In the end, the White House announces only the names of the winners. The finalists and other applicants, and all scores, are confidential. But many who applied are proud to reveal that they were also-rans. The runners-up include GM's Allison Transmission and Cadillac divisions, Ford's North American Automotive division, two IBM plants, GTE's Telephone Systems division, as well as Corning, L.L. Bean, and Paul Revere Insurance as entire companies. Units of AT&T and Hewlett-Packard entered but didn't rate site visits. Even though some of the applicants put enormous effort into the competition—14,000 man-hours in Corning's case—they feel the race was worthwhile.

The winners face one serious obligation: They must share what they have learned with others. Motorola's vice president for quality, Richard Buetow, said Motorola people made 352 speeches to conventions and corporations on the subject last year, answered queries from 1,162 companies, and held monthly five-hour briefings for 150 executives of other companies at a time. Ken Leach of little Globe traveled as far as Singapore and Moscow last year to deliver 136 speeches.

Winners and losers get a report from the examiners telling them where they are good and where they aren't so good. "It's the cheapest consulting you can ever get," says David Luther, Corning's vice president for quality. Xerox Chairman David Kearns says 90% of the value of the process lies in the feedback.

The examiners concentrate on large management questions rather than on the product itself. Their general recommendations to Xerox urged, for example, a greater stress on continuous improvement. At IBM, says Robert Talbott, director of quality the examiners "found all the soft spots." These included the need for tighter links all the way from the development labs to the marketing organization, and for better benchmarking. IMB was rating itself against other electronics companies but should also be looking to other, outside businesses, said the examiners. Consequently IBM decided to match its distribution system against L.L. Bean's.

At GTE the examiners said the company's program for keeping track of supplier quality needed more maturity and breadth. The program was only two years old, too new for the company to have deployed it fully or to show solid trend statistics. Corning was told that while the reliability score of its fiber-optic cable was excellent, the same rigor should be applied more extensively to nonmanufacturing activities, such as ordering and shipping.

The feedback Milliken got in 1988 helped it win in 1989. Says Roger Milliken: "They told us we didn't have tough enough objectives." The company adopted a "10-4" goal, meaning a tenfold improvement in its quality indexes in four years, by 1993. Milliken observes: "You've got to shoot for objectives that stretch you because then you force everyone to find a new way and not just do a little bit better." The first year's examiners also found that Milliken's top executives didn't understand statistical process controls well enough. Everybody took a fourday course before the company tried again.

A few quality professionals criticize the Baldridge or its side effects. They think Motorola went too far in demanding that all its suppliers apply for Baldridge awards. (IBM wants its 10,000 suppliers to follow the criteria but doesn't require them to apply.) In a letter to Quality Progress, a trade magazine, John O. Brown, a Cummins Engine quality manager, objected: "Motorola has done the quality profession a disservice by this act of coercion." Brown said the way to raise supplier quality is "by mutual pursuit—not by brute force."

Other resentments arise from the poor luck service companies have had with the Baldridge. Only 15 have applied, vs. 68 large manufacturing companies. None have won, though two rated site visits each year. L.L. Bean and Paul Revere insurance were runners-up in 1988 GTE's Telephone Systems division in 1989. USAA, a $16.5-billion-a-year San Antonio insurance company that serves military officers, entered both years and earned a site visit in 1989.

Says David Snediker, vice president for quality at Batelle, a Columbus, Ohio, research center: "The Baldridge doesn't fit service companies very well." Quality standards were developed first for manufacturers, since foreign competition threatened them first. Also, the precise measures demanded by the Baldridge examiners are harder to apply to services. You can count the number of defective TV sets that customers return, but you can't count the number of bank depositors who walk away from the teller's window steaming with resentment.

David Nadler, a leading expert in the field and head of Delta Consulting Group in New York City, thinks the service companies' lack of success is justified. Says he: "Service companies are far behind manufacturing companies in quality." Many quality professionals insist that measurable standards can be developed for almost any service, and quite a few companies are making the effort. Metropolitan Life, for example, hopes to be ready to qualify for the Baldridge in three or four years.

Florida Power & Light proved last year that service companies can compete with the best manufacturers: It became the first company to win Japan's Deming prize in a special category for foreign companies. The prize, which has been offered to Japanese corporations since 1951, was named for W. Edwards Deming, the American statistician who helped show the Japanese the path to quality in manufacturing after World War II. Today, at 89, he still carries his message, roasting poor management, around the world.

By choosing to go after the Deming rather than the Baldrige, Florida Power & Light picked the tougher path. The Japanese Union of Scientists and Engineers, which administers the Deming, does not accept applicants unless they are approved by the organization's own consultants, who prefer to be called counselors. They work with the applicant, sometimes for years, to bring it to a competitive peak.

Florida Power & Light started using the Japanese group's counselors in 1984. In 1988 the counselors finally deemed it a worthy applicant. The utility filed a 1,000-page description of its quality program in late 1988 and began preparing feverishly for the visits of Japanese examiners the following summer. Management knew they would pick the company to pieces and demand detailed data on a few moments' notice. That's one of the reasons for applying for a prize, says John Hudiburg, CEO at the time: "It creates an artificial crisis and puts pressure on the company to advance rapidly."

Employees certainly felt the pressure. Says Kent Sterett, who was then chief of quality for the utility and now has the same job at Union Pacific: "It meant a lot of sweat, a lot of nights, a lot of weekends for literally thousands of people." But the benefits became evident even before the company won the Deming in October. During the warm-up, indexes of quality such as customer complaints, employee safety, and the duration of outages—already good by industry standards—jumped ahead positively. Says Sterett: "We made two, maybe three, years' progress in one year."

American companies concerned with quality have had a multitude of standards to choose from. Should a company follow one of the gurus, like Deming, or Joseph Juran, or Phil Crosby? Should it seek Ford's Q-1 stamp of approval for suppliers or GM's Mark of Excellence? How about the Q-90 criteria of the American Society of Quality Control of Milwaukee or the ISO 9000 specifications of the International Standards Organization of Geneva?

David Snediker of Battelle argues that the Baldrige forces companies into a mold to compete for a prize, when it's business that they should be competing for. "The Baldrige represents creeping bureaucracy," he says. He would prefer detailed standards of quality that don't tell a company how to get there. The ISO standards have been adopted widely in Europe, by NATO, and by the U.S. Department of Defense.

But right now U.S. business is coalescing around the Baldrige as the definitive approach. Mead D'Amore, the general manager of the Commercial Nuclear Fuel division at Westinghouse, which won in 1988, echoes what a lot of senior executives believe: "The Baldrige award has the best guidelines I have ever seen." If IBM, Milliken, Westinghouse, and many other companies are using the Baldrige as an internal measure, then clearly it is catching on. David Nadler summarizes its benefits: "The process refocuses companies and makes them look hard at themselves. It gives them a level of understanding of what's good and bad that they never had before. It forces senior executives to focus in detail on what they are doing for quality."

In short, the Baldrige itself is a continuously improving high-quality tool for improving quality.

BREAKING THE TRUST

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, the Associated General Contractors have strongly stated their support for taking the transportation trust funds off budget, most recently through a letter to congressional leadership. I would like to share their official letter of support for off-budget status with the other Members of the House.

In addition, the most recent edition of Constructor, an AGC publication, included an article by Susan Loomis tracing the history and status of these trust funds. Loomis' article provides insight on the budgetary manipulation now taking place, and I commend this article to the attention of my colleagues.

THE ASSOCIATED GENERAL CONTRACTORS OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, March 2, 1990.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The Associated General Contractors of America, representing over 32,500 firms including 8,000 leading general contractor construction firms, has been a long-time advocate and supporter for improvements to the infrastructure through a dedicated funding mechanism.

Over the years, the trust implicit in such trust fund programs for highway, airport and, water infrastructure needs has eroded, as those dedicated funds have been withheld from the programs and the fund balances utilized to give the appearance of a smaller federal deficit.

As members of the House and Senate consider the various budget proposals, and the specific proposals to take the Social Security trust funds off-budget, the Associated General Contractors of America asks that these infrastructure-related trust fund programs be likewise considered and also be removed from federal deficit calculations if such action is taken on social security.

The AGC would offer full support to such a proposal.

Sincerely,

SUSAN J. LOOMIS,
Executive Director, Congressional Relations.

BREAKING THE TRUST

(By Susan J. Loomis)

America's transportation network is a point of national pride. This vast country has planned and created a national system of roads and bridges, regional and feeder airports, and inland waterways that connects all major propulation centers. It is this network that underpins our economy and society. Everytime you send a letter, drive to work or to the store, or fly from one place to another you are using America's transportation infrastructure.

The success of these programs, particularly the highway, bridge, and air transportation systems, has come about because of trust * * * and specifically because of the trust fund method of financing these essential public works.

The trust fund concept of infrastructure funding began in the 1930s when several states initiated dedicated user fees to support state highway programs. The success of those dedicated programs ("dedicated" in the sense that their funds could only be spent on the infrastructure for which they were collected—in this case, highways) was such that in 1956, when the Interstate Highway Program was initiated, a dedicated trust fund mechanism was developed at the federal level as well.

The commitment was made then to entrust the federal gasoline tax into the care and keeping of the federal government to be expended for highway construction. In 1970 a similar financing mechanism was developed for the airport and airways system.

For years the trust fund mechanism worked well. The users of the system did not object to the gasoline taxes because they could see the results of that user fee in the ever-expanding Interstate Highway System.

This stable, reliable program allowed the states to plan for expected transportation capital needs. Because the program was authorized for several years at a time, there was certainly that over the seven to 10 years needed to move a project form inception to completion, the federal funds would be there, in trust, ready to be paid to the states as the work progressed.

1969: "TRUST" FUNDS BECOME "HOSTAGE" FUNDS

In 1969 the federal unified budget concept was adopted. This pulled the unobligated balance in the Highway (and later the Airport) Trust Fund into the calculations of the federal deficit or surplus. Suddenly, long-term captial programs, which "pay their own way," were looked at—in budgeting circles—in the same light as entitlement programs. In short, the moneys in the Highway and Airport Trust Funds—which by law can only be spent for their intended purposes—were being frozen, held hostage to reduce the deficit on paper.

As a result, the budget continues to be "reconciled" with smoke, mirrors, and nonexistent savings, while our transportation system's unmet needs continue to grow.

AGC and others in the transportation community have been urging Congress for years to return an element of trust and reliance to the trust-funded programs by removing them from federal budget calculations. That battle cry is now being joined by others.

In the 1985 budget reconciliation process language was included to move the Highway Trust Fund, including its mass transit account and the Aviation Trust Fund, off budget. The Budget Committee offered an amendment to strike that provision, keeping the trust funds in the unified budget.

Rep. Glenn Anderson (D-Calif.), then chairman of the Surface Transportation Subcommittee, stated "These transportation trust funds clearly belong off-budget. Yet amendments may be offered to the reconciliation bill that would retain them under the unified budget, so that the federal government can continue to deceive the American people into thinking that the deficit is smaller than it actually is."

Unfortunately, the Budget Committee amendment to deep the trust funds as part of the unified budget process prevailed.

LEGISLATIVE EFFORTS TO RESTORE "TRUST" IN TRUST FUNDS

In April 1988 Sen. Steven Symms (R-Idaho) successfully offered a sense of the Senate amendment to that year's budget resolution that Highway, Airport, and Social Security Trust Fund surpluses (or deficits) be excluded from budget deficit calculations. That non-binding provision was dropped in conference.

In May 1989 the Chairman of the National Governors' Association, Virginia Gov. Gerald L. Baliles, urged the Senate Appropriations Committee to substantially increase the obligational ceiling for the highway program and even recommended it be set at a rate at least equal to trust fund receipts—projected to be $14.3 billion (with interest) in fiscal year 1990. Governor Baliles stated that leadership on this issue from the Transportation Appropriations members "will be invaluable in putting 'trust' back in the Highway Trust Fund."

Later that year Gov. Baliles accused the federal government of hoarding its transportation trust funds to camouflage the size of the federal budget. At the 81st annual meeting of the National Governors' Association, he commented that "* * * the money represents tax dollars already paid by the people of this country and it ought to be spent for the purpose it was collected for and not used tp play games with the size of the budget deficit in Washington.'

At that same meeting, Federal Reseve Board Chairman Alan Greenspand said it is his opinion that a dedicated fund should be used to balance the federal budget. Secretary of Transportation Samuel K. Skinner responded by declaring "We can no longer afford a system which balances its budget on the trust funds."

FIVE BILLS IN 1989

In 1989 five bills were introduced addressing the trust fund issue:

H.R. 286, Rep. Bob McEwen (R-Ohio). Provides that the receipts and disbursement of the Highway Trust Fund, the Airport and Airway Trust Fund, and the Inland Waterway Trust Funds shall not be included in the totals of the U.S. Government as submitted by the president or the congressional budget.

H.R. 1352, Rep. Larry Hopkins (R-Ky.). Provides for the same as H.R. 286, and requires an adjustment be made to the maximum deficit amounts prescribed by the budget act to reflect the change in budget calculations.

H.R. 2669, Rep. Bill Clinger (R-Pa.). Improves bugetary information by requiring that the unified budget presented by the presiding contain an operating budget and a capital budget and distinguish between federal funds and trust funds.

H.R. 3531, Rep. Ben Cardin (D-Md.). Excludes receipts and disbursements of the Highway, the Airport and Airway, and the Social Security Trust Funds from the calculations of deficits and maximum deficit amounts.

S. 1572, Sen. Herbert Kohl (D-Wis.). Improves budgetary information by requiring that the unified budget presented by the president contain an operating budget and a capital budget, and that it set distinctions among general funds, trust funds, and enterprise funds.

Sen. Kohl's bill would provide for separate deficit-reduction targets for the general and enterprise accounts and, Kohl believes, would preserve the unified budget concept while preventing the use of trust fund surpluses to subsidize spending in other programs.

At a joint hearing before the Senate Budget and Senate Governmental Affairs Committees in October on the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget law, a number of members of the Senate addressed the trust fund-budget deficit dilemma.

Senate Budget Committee Chairman James Sasser (D-Tenn.) was critical of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law for allowing the government to hide true budget deficits by using the trust fund surpluses as part of the deficit calculations.

Sen. John Glenn (D-Ohio), chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, noted that according to the Government Accounting Office, if all trust funds were separated from the budget, the current deficit would equal $283 billion, well above the October 1989 estimate from the Office of Management and Budget of $116.1 billion.

INFRASTRUCTURE REPAIR: PAY NOW OR PAY MORE LATER

In a statement to the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on May 19, 1989, on the topic of infrastructure problems and intergovernmental solutions, AGC recommended that Congress facilitate the removal of the transportation trust funds from the unified budget. AGC stated "Since 1969 artifical spending restraints have caused the Highway Trust Fund balance to grow dramatically to a current balance of over $15 billion, including the mass transit account. Including the Aviation Trust Fund, the combined balance exceed $25 billion. Bankrolling these trust funds is not only a breach of faith with the transportation users in this country, but is merely postponing work that should be done now to prevent costly repairs later."

As long as we are faced with a budget deficit and a budget law mandating annual reductions, the Congress and Administration will look to trust fund surpluses to mask the size of the deficit.

If the trust funds are removed from consideration while a substantial deficit still exists, the method for meeting the deficit numbers will be program spending reductions (including the public works programs), tax increases (including possible increased federal fuel taxes for deficit reduction purposes), or a combination of both.

An estimated $40 billion to $60 billion in budget deficit reductions will be required for the fiscal year 1991 budget. Resolving the deficit will continue to tie the Congress in knots for several years to come. If, however, the Congress continues to wear blinders to the damage being done to our economy through a deteriorating infrastructure, the members will have another complex and expensive dilemma to resolve.

Allowing an accumulation of unobligated funds in the trust funds neither resolves the budget deficit nor assists in meeting our transportation infrastructure needs. It begs the question of trust—that reliance on something in the future.

REPRESENTATIVE IKE SKELTON DEDICATES U.S. ARMY ENGINEER SCHOOL HEADQUARTERS AND COMPLEX AT FORT LEONARD WOOD, MO

HON. BILL EMERSON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, this morning our friend and colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON] was the keynote speaker at the dedication of the U.S. Army School of Engineering Headquarters and Complex at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

It was my pleasure to be present at this occasion and to hear the remarks of our distinguished colleague, a dedicated member of the Armed Services Committee, one who is especially concerned with the welfare and education of the men and women who serve in our Armed Forces.

This complex is in Congressman SKELTON's district; he has nurtured it diligently over the years. All Missourians take pride in his efforts, and share in his joy at this fortuitous culmination of a lot of hard work. Missouri is especially proud to host this school and complex an important function of the U.S. Army, as indicated by the presence and remarks of Gov. John Ashcroft at this morning's dedication.

I want to share with my colleagues the keynote remarks delivered by Representative SKELTON. It memorializes an important chapter in the life of Fort Leonard Wood, the Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Army and the lives of great men after whom elements of the complex are named. Following are Representative SKELTON's remarks:

REMARKS BY CONGRESSMAN SKELTON, TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 1990

Fifty years ago, this land on which we stand this morning, was a vacant patch of rural Missouri farmland, surrounded by a thick barrier of Ozark forest. Just before World World War II, in 1940, one of the army's largest training centers was built here and named after Major General Leonard Wood, a renowned soldier, statesman and recipient of the medal of honor. Half a century later, a new chapter in the annals of the United States Army begins.

We Missourians feel quite fortunate that Fort Leonard Wood is now the home of Army Engineering. It is not just the center for training all United States army military engineers, but a school for officers from other services and other lands who will come here to further their professional education.

The United States Army chose well when it designated For Leonard Wood, Missouri to become its engineering center. The consolidation of engineering training and education will save millions of dollars each year for the American taxpayer. In addition to the facilities here, the location of Fort Leonard Wood, here in the Ozarks, is extremely well-suited for engineering challenges in the great outdoors. But most of all, by choosing this military post, the Army is the beneficiary of a dedicated work force and of local people who understand, appreciate, and support the men and women who wear the uniform of our country. Many Missourians here today will play a part in making this engineering school a success.

I was pleased to have had a role in the construction of this engineering complex. Being a member of the armed services committee enabled me to authorize the first to the last brick of these structures.

The engineering school complex consists of three main buildings and an adjacent officer's quarters. Each of these facilities is named in memory of outstanding soldiers who made great contributions during their service to our country. The officer's quarters is named for Major General Donald R. Morelli; the engineering library is named for General Bruce C. Clarke; the academic building is named for a Lexingtonian, General William M. Hoge. Other buildings memorialized here today are named in honor of Captain Thomas J. Hayes IV, Lieutenant Louis J. Storck, Captain Robert P. Ross, and General Hugh B. Mott.

Major General Donald Morelli was a remarkable officer. I had the pleasure of meeting him in December of 1983, when, as I later learned, he got out of his sick bed, though terminally ill, to give me a briefing on air-land battle, of which he was the chief architect. During his army career of more than 28 years, he served with the second engineering training brigade there at Fort Leonard Wood, saw combat in Vietnam, held staff positions at the Corp of Engineers headquarters, and was deputy Chief of Staff for combat development at the training doctrine command.

The library honors the name of General Bruce C. Clarke, who served honorably as a soldier in both World War I and World War II. During the battle of the Bulge, General Clarke's seventh armored division opened the first gaps in the German assault. He later became Commander in Chief of the United States Army in Europe. President Eisenhower said of General Clark, "the Army has had two great trainers—von Steuben and Bruce Clarke."

The academic building is named for Brigadier General George A. Lincoln. Following graduation from the United States Military Academy, he was a Rhodes scholar. He served honorably and well during World War II and was promoted to the rank of brigadier general at the age of 38. His distinguished career included being special assistant to the Secretary of the Army and to the Secretary of Defense, later becoming a department head at the United States Military Academy.

The headquarters building is named in the memory of General William H. Hoge. Though born in Boonville, he spent most of his young life in my hometown of Lexington. He married his childhood sweetheart, Nettie Fredendell, whose family home was located next to the Skelton home. Growing up in Lexington, I heard a great deal about Colonel Hoge, and, as a matter of fact, as a teenager, his step mother-in-law gave me his sheep-lined leather flight jacket and metal canteen with the initials "WM" scratched thereon. After his army career, General Hoge returned to Lexington, living for a number of years in the old Fredendell home. I had the opportunity to know him as a neighbor and as a friend. General Hoge was decorated for heroism in World War I, being the recipient of the Distinguished Service Cross and Silver Star. Immediately prior to World War II, he commanded the troops that built the Alcan Highway, the road linking Alaska with our lower 48 States. During World War II, he distinguished himself with commands at the invasion of Omaha Beach and at Saint Vith during the battle of the Bulge. His unit captured the famous Remagen bridge. His World War II awards include the Distinguished Service Cross, two Distinguished Service medals, two Silver Stars, a Bronze Star, and a Purple Heart. General Hoge retired ten years after World War II, as commander in chief of the United States Army in Europe. Having known him, I can say that General Hoge was the epitome of an officer and a gentleman.

Military engineers date back to the days of the Roman Legions. Engineers have been an indispensable part of every major military endeavor through the ages. Engineers constructed breast works during the revolution, fortifications during the war between the States, and erected river crossings during four conflicts this century. Engineers also are an integral part of the great waterways and flood-control of our nation. The role of the United States Army Engineers has been, is, and will be critical to our national defense and to our well-being.

We Missourians are immensely proud that the future of United States Army Engineers is so intertwined to our State of Missouri.

This engineer school may be traced to the founding of the military academy at West Point, New York, in 1802. In 1901, the school was moved to Washington barracks, whose name was changed to Fort McNair where it became "The Engineer School" three year later. At the end of World War I, the school was moved to Camp Humphreys, Virginia, which was renamed Fort Belvoir in 1935. And finally, in June of 1988, the engineer school was moved to Fort Leonard Wood.

One of the finest engineering institutions in the world, the mission includes instructing engineer officers in tactics and techniques of engineer troops, principles of military engineering, river and flood-control work, development of engineer equipment, and preparation and revision of engineer-training publications.

Nearly 3,500 students will attend school annually and about 800 engineer officers and senior sergeants will be trained here at any one time. The school has attracted high-ranking officers from around the world: south and central America, Europe, Africa, and the middle east.

Today, we dedicate these engineering facilities to the future of the United States Army. But we do more than that. We assign names to buildings and to the facilities, and by so doing, we pay tribute to soldiers of yesteryear whose service and heroism helped preserve the liberties we enjoy today as Americans. We take several pages out of the past and remember. These were great men and great soliders.

May those who work and study within these walls ever remember the words of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow:

"Lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime, and, departing, leave behind us footprints on the sands of time:" Congratulations, thank you, and God bless you.

INTRODUCTION OF THE MORTGAGE SERVICING TRANSFER DISCLOSURE ACT

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, if homeownership is for most Americans the great American dream, then the problems they encounter when the servicing of their mortgage is transferred has to be the great American nightmare. It can cause homeowners great anxiety and aggravation. It can cost them hundreds of dollars and, in some cases, their homes.

The problem is mortgage-servicing abuse, and if the complaints I have received from citizens in 214 congressional districts are any indication, it is a widespread and serious one.

Mortgage servicing involves the collection of mortgage principal and interest, use of escrow accounts to pay property taxes and insurance premiums, and other mortgage-related activities. The loan originator may retain these mortgage servicing rights, or it may choose to transfer or sell them to another institution. The sale of mortgage servicing can be profitable for both the seller and the buyer—the seller increases its income and cash flow, while the buyer benefits from favorable tax treatment, access to funds in escrow accounts, and other advantages derived from economies of scale.

Missing from the equation, though, is the consumer.

Financial institutions are recognizing the benefits of servicing transfers. A recent General Accounting Office [GAO] report, entitled "Mortgage Servicing Transfers," which was done at my request, found that transfers of mortgage servicing have increased rapidly in recent years. Based on interviews with experts in the mortgage and servicing markets, including brokers, buyers, sellers, and regulators, and a review of professional and trade journals, the GAO estimates that servicing transfer volume increased from $80 to $90 billion in 1985 to $150 billion in 1988. While precise figures are difficult to obtain—the activity is not regulated or even overseen by Federal or most state authorities—the evidence that mortgage servicing transfers are growing is nontheless very compelling.

The volume of servicing transfers for Ginnie Mae-backed mortgages, for example, which the Federal Government does specifically count, exhibited a huge increase during this period. Transfer volume more than doubled, from $24.6 billion in 1985 to $62.1 billion in 1988. There is no reason to expect that privately-originated mortgages have not followed the same pattern; nothing in the nature of the servicing of Ginnie Mae mortgages would result in a different outcome than for private mortgages.

What does this growth mean for the borrower, the person who is bound for many years to a loan that affects his or her most important possession and investment? Unfortunately, the record is not very good. While there are institutions that handle mortgage servicing transfers in an efficient and responsible manner, I have found too many examples of those that do not.

The GAO study found strong evidence that servicing transfers are creating problems for borrowers. Consider the words of a New York City real estate attorney who follows mortgage and real estate issues closely:

I have yet to see a transfer of mortgages between two institutions be handled without an administrative snafu in connection therewith and in each occurrence such snafus have always been to the detriment of the borrower.

The most common complaint concerned sudden changes in escrow accounts after a transfer. Some borrowers faced unjustifiably large increases in their escrow requirements, others found shortfalls in their escrow reserves. Even in the cases where such changes were legal and justified, the consumer still did not receive adequate explanations or documentation.

Many borrowers complain that servicers do not provide timely notice of transfers, a failure which often leads to confusing and the assessment of late fees—on the borrower. Another common occurrence is for the old servicer to forward a payment to the new servicer late. The new servicer, of course, charges a late fee. The borrower, who mailed his check on time, refuses to pay the late charge. The new servicer simply deducts this amount from the borrower's escrow account. At some later date—it could be a year later—when the borrower's taxes are due, the new servicer finds that the escrow account is short. In the end, the borrower is assessed a tax penalty. Unravelling this type of complicated mistake, and getting the old servicer to make good on its obligation, is often next to impossible without some Federal law assigning responsibility and requiring corrective action.

Some servicers simply neglect to pay property taxes or insurance premiums from the borrowers' escrow accounts. The consequences can be catastrophic. One homeowner wrote that, after a servicing transfer, her insurance coverage lapsed without her knowledge because the new servicer failed to pay the premiums. The homeowner discovered this failure when she filed a $21,000 claim under the policy, which the insurance company refused to pay. Due to the servicer's mistake, the woman eventually filed for bankruptcy and lost the home through foreclosure.

Just communicating with the servicer can be an arduous and frustrating task—correspondence goes unanswered or generates unhelpful form letters in return, and, as an exasperated member of my own staff recently experienced, toll-free lines are often busy for hours. The lucky ones who get through typically reach telephone clerks who are uninformed and unable to address specific problems. I would urge those who doubt these findings to try one of these toll-free numbers themselves. But make sure you have something interesting to read—you are likely to have a lot of time to kill while you are put on hold.

While the GAO study revealed a litany of nightmarish problems that stem from servicing transfers, correspondence to my own office underscored what the difficulties actually mean to these poor people. A New Jersey woman told me how her monthly escrow payment increased by 50 percent after the transfer of servicing, an amount that appeared to be far greater than necessary for property tax payments. She wrote:

I am a single woman working to sustain myself and my family, and I feel if this mortgage company can get away with this "legally," I will be in default on my loan before the next year.

Her story, and hundreds of others from across the country, convinced me to introduce legislation that will stop this abuse of the homeowner. This legislation gives the borrower an opportunity, before the mortgage application is completed, to learn the likelihood of a mortgage servicing transfer.

The fundamental aim of the Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosure Act, which I am introducing today, is to inform and protect the consumer. The bill would require:

Disclosure by lenders, at time of application, of their transfer practices for the past three years and planned practice in the present year;

Timely notification of a transfer by both the old and new servicer;

A 60-day consumer exemption from late fees after a transfer if a payment is late because it was sent to the wrong servicer;

An annual escrow account statement; and Penalties for violations of this act.

Let me elaborate. When the borrower applies for a loan, the bill would require the lender to disclose whether servicing rights on loans originated by that company may be sold or transferred, and if present intent exists to do so. The mortgage lender would also furnish statistics that show the percentage of loans in the last 3 years in which servicing rights were sold or transferred, to the nearest 10 percent; the best indication of future policy is what has been done in the past.

Of course, some lenders will have decided that a significant change in direction is required to meet new capital standards or adjust to new market demands. Therefore, the bill would require lenders to give its best estimate reguarding the institution's transfer policy for the year in which the mortgage application is made.

Some firms are exclusively in the business of originating mortgages, immediately selling the loans and servicing. The Mortgage Servicing Disclosure Act would require these firms to disclose, again, at the time of application, that the servicing will be transferred. To strengthen the disclosure requirements, the borrowers must sign a separate form that affirms they have received the required servicing information.

The bill also addresses the confusion and cost that often results from the actual transfer. Lenders and servicers must provide timely advance notice of a change in servicing, and provide the borrower with the name, address, and toll-free or collect-call telephone number of the new servicer. For a 60-day period that begins on the date of the servicing transfer, a servicer may not charge a homeowner any late fees if, as is often the case, the payment was made on time, but sent to the wrong address.

We have included other provisions to correct the various problems which the GAO study identified. Lenders and servicers must respond in writing to consumer inquiries or complaints on servicing matters within 20 days of the receipt of the original correspondence. The response cannot just be a form letter. The institution must take corrective action within 60 days, or explain why the consumer is wrong.

To check the kind of escrow abuse which menaced the New Jersey homeowner I mentioned, lenders and servicers must provide an annual escrow statement. The statement, prepared at no cost to the consumer, would document how the institution has used the escrow money. Lenders and servicers in violation of the Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosure Act would pay for the damages caused by their violation, attorneys' fees, and other costs. If a particular company showed a continuing pattern of abuse to many of its servicing customers, it would be exposed to class-action suits by groups of borrowers. These and other provisions of the bill should give consumers the information and means necessary to protect themselves.

Unfortunately, one important change in the treatment of servicing assets that I advocated during the debate on the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act [FIRREA] of 1989 passed the House of Representatives but ultimately failed to be included in the law. This provision would have allowed thrifts to count, for the purposes of calculating capital ratios, servicing on the mortgage loans they originate in the same way they are allowed to count the servicing they purchase. The change would have removed a key incentive for these institutions to buy and sell their servicing assets.

Debate continues as to how onerous regulations restricting the counting of servicing rights as capital. I continue to urge the FDIC and other regulatory bodies not to take any actions that create undue incentives to increasing the amount and frequency of mortgage servicing transfers.

As new capital requirements are phased into law, we will see an increase in the turnover of servicing. This makes informed consumers and accurate records all the more crucial.

I want to emphasize that this legislation is not an attempt to restrict the transfer of mortgage-servicing, nor will it have this result. My legislation is designed to encourage the consumer's confidence and trust in the mortgage banking business through an honest, transparent, disclosure and notification process.

As I developed this legislation, I have attempted to incorporate the suggestions of the mortgage banking industry wherever possible. We recognize that the transfer of servicing frees capital for extra loans, which in turn leads to the construction of new homes and buildings. Servicers have a right to earn profits for the service they provide. But they simply cannot abuse that right, especially when that abuse can threaten something as vital as a person's home.

The GAO report had this to say about the Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosure Act:

The provisions of the [LaFalce] bill appear to be a step toward dealing with the problems associated with mortgage servicing transfers on a wider basis than currently provided by state laws, regulations, and policies of entities concerned with servicing.

I urge my colleagues to take this step with me and support the Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosure Act.

Mr. Speaker, I am including a copy of the bill, as follows:

H.R. 4594

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosure Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. MORTGAGE SERVICING TRANSFER DISCLOSURE.

The Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (12 U.S.C. 2601 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 5 the following new section:

"SERVICING OF MORTGAGE LOANS AND ADMINISTRATION OF ESCROW ACCOUNTS

"SEC. 6. (a) DISCLOSURE TO APPLICANT RELATING TO ASSIGNMENT, SALE, OR TRANSFER OF LOAN SERVICING.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each person who makes a federally related mortgage loan shall disclose to each person who applies for any such loan, at the time of application for the loan—

"(A) whether the servicing of any such loan may be assigned, sold, or transferred to any other person at any time while such loan is outstanding;

"(B) for each of the most recent 3 calendar years completed (at the time of such application), the percentage (rounded to the nearest 10 percent) of loans made by such person for which the servicing has been assigned, sold, or transferred as of the end of the most recent calendar year completed; except that for any loan application during the 12-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosure Act of 1990, the information disclosed under this subparagraph may be for only the most recent calendar year completed, and for any loan application during the 12-month period beginning 1 year after the date of the enactment of the Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosure Act of 1990, the information disclosed under this subparagraph may be for the most recent 2 calendar years completed;

"(C) that the person originating the loan has the capacity to service loans and the best available estimate of the percentage of all loans made by such person for which the servicing will be assigned, sold, or transferred during the 12-month period beginning upon the origination; the estimate shall be expressed as one of the following range of possibilities—between 0 and 25 percent, between 26 and 50 percent, between 51 and 75 percent, or between 76 and 100 percent; within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall develop a model disclosure statement that notifies the applicant that the best available estimate is a prediction, subject to change, and applies to all of the loan originations made by the lender and not the particular loan of the individual applicant; and

"(D) if the person who makes the loan does not engage in the servicing of any federally related mortgage loans, that there is a present intent on the part of such person (at the time of such application) to assign, sell, or transfer the servicing of such loan to another person.

"(2) SIGNATURE OF APPLICANT.—Any disclosure of the information required under paragraph (1) shall not be effective for purposes of this section unless the disclosure is accompanied by a written statement, in such form as the Secretary shall develop before the expiration of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, that the applicant has read and understood the disclosure and that is evidenced by the signature of the applicant at the place where such statement appears in the application.

"(b) NOTICE BY TRANSFEROR OF LOAN SERVICING AT TIME OF TRANSFER.—

"(1) NOTICE REQUIREMENT.—Each servicer of any federally related mortgage loan shall notify the borrower in writing of any assignment, sale, or transfer of the servicing of the loan to any other person.

"(2) TIME OF NOTICE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided under subparagraphs (B) and (C), the notice required under paragraph (1) shall be made to the borrower not less than 15 days before the effective date of transfer of the servicing of the mortgage loan (with respect to which such notice is made).

"(B) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN PROCEEDINGS.—The notice required under paragraph (1) shall be made to the borrower not more than 30 days after the effective date of transfer of the servicing of the mortgage loan (with respect to which such notice is made) in any case in which the assignment, sale, or transfer of the servicing of the mortgage loan is preceded by—

"(1) termination of the contract for servicing the loan for cause;

"(ii) commencement of proceedings for bankruptcy of the servicer; or

"(iii) commencement of proceedings by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Resolution Trust Corporation for conservatorship or receivership of the servicer (or an entity by which the servicer is owned or controlled).

"(C) EXCEPTION FOR NOTICE PROVIDED AT CLOSING.—The provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall not apply to any assignment, sale, or transfer of the servicing of any mortgage loan if the person who makes the loan provides to the borrower, at settlement (with respect to the property for which the mortgage loan is made), written notice under paragraph (3) of such transfer.

"(3) CONTENTS OF NOTICE.—The notice required under paragraph (1) shall include the following information:

"(A) The effective date of transfer of the servicing described in such paragraph.

"(B) The name, address, and toll-free or collect call telephone number of the transferee servicer.

"(C) A toll-free or collect call telephone number for (i) an individual employed by the transferor servicer, or (ii) the department of the transferor servicer, that can be contracted by the borrower to answer inquires relating to the transfer of servicing.

"(D) The name and toll-free or collect call telephone number for (i) an individual employed by the transferee servicer, or (ii) the department of the transferee servicer, that can be contacted by the borrower to answer inquires relating to the transfer of servicing.

"(E) The date on which the transferor servicer who is servicing the mortgage loan before the assignment, sale, or transfer will cease to accept payments relating to the loan and the date on which the transferee servicer will begin to accept such payments.

"(F) Any information concerning the effect the transfer may have, if any, on the terms of or the continued availability of mortgage life or disability insurance or any other type of optional insurance and what action, if any, the borrower must take to maintain coverage.

"(G) A statement that the assignment, sale, or transfer of the servicing of the mortgage loan does not affect any term or condition of the security instruments other than terms directly related to the servicing of such loan.

"(c) NOTICE BY TRANSFEREE OF LOAN SERVICING AT TIME OF TRANSFER.—

"(1) NOTICE REQUIREMENT.—Each transferee servicer to whom the servicing of any federally related mortgage loan is assigned, sold, or transferred shall notify the borrower of any such assignment, sale, or transfer.

"(2) TIME OF NOTICE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the notice required under paragraph (1) shall be made to the borrower not more than 15 days after the effective date of transfer of the servicing of the mortgage loan (with respect to which such notice is made).

"(B) EXCEPTION.—The notice required under paragraph (1) shall be made to the borrower not more than 30 days after the effective date of transfer of the servicing of the mortgage loan (with respect to which such notice is made) in any case in which the assignment, sale, or transfer of the servicing of the mortgage loan is preceded by—

"(i) termination of the contract for servicing the loan for cause;

"(ii) commencement of proceedings for bankruptcy of the servicer; or

"(iii) commencement of proceedings by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Resolution Trust Corporation for conservatorship or receivership of the servicer (or an entity by which the servicer is owned or controlled).

"(3) CONTENTS OF NOTICE.—Any notice required under paragraph (1) shall include the information described in subsection (b)(3).

"(d) TREATMENT OF LOAN PAYMENTS DURING TRANSFER PERIOD.—During the 60-day period beginning on the effective date of transfer of the servicing of any federally related mortgage loan, a late fee may not be imposed on the borrower with respect to any payment on such loan and no such payment may be treated as late for any other purposes, if the payment is made by the borrower on or before the due date applicable to such payment but is remitted to the wrong servicer.

"(e) DUTY OF LOAN SERVICER TO RESPOND TO BORROWER INQUIRIES.—

"(1) NOTICE OF RECEIPT OF INQUIRY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If any servicer of a federally related mortgage loan receives a qualified written request from the borrower (or an agent of the borrower) for information relating to the servicing of such loan, the servicer shall provide a written response acknowledging receipt of the correspondence within 20 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) unless the action requested is taken within such period.

"(B) QUALIFIED WRITTEN REQUEST.—For purposes of this subsection, a qualified written request shall be a written correspondence, other than notice on a payment coupon or other payment medium supplied by the servicer, that—

"(i) includes, or otherwise enables the servicer to identify, the name and account of the borrower; and

"(ii) includes a statement of the reasons for the belief of the borrower, to the extent applicable, that the account is in error or provides sufficient detail to the servicer regarding other information sought by the borrower.

"(2) ACTION WITH RESPECT TO INQUIRY.—Not later than 60 days after the receipt from any borrower of any qualified written request under paragraph (1) and, if applicable, before taking any action with respect to the inquiry of the borrower, the servicer shall—

"(A) make appropriate corrections in the account of the borrower, including the crediting of any late charges or penalties, and transmit to the borrower a written notification of such correction (which shall include the name and telephone number of a representative of the servicer who can provide assistance to the borrower);

"(B) after conducting an investigation, provide the borrower with a written explanation or clarification that includes—

"(i) to the extent applicable, a statement of the reasons for which the servicer believes the account of the borrower is correct as determined by the servicer; and

"(ii) the name and telephone number of a representative of the servicer who can provide assistance to the borrower; or

"(C) after conducting an investigation, provide the borrower with a written explanation or clarification that includes—

"(i) information requested by the borrower or an explanation of why the information requested is unavailable or cannot be obtained by the servicer; and

"(ii) the name and telephone number of a representative of the servicer who can provide assistance to the borrower.

"(f) DAMAGES AND COSTS.—Whoever fails to comply with any provision of this section shall be liable to the borrower for each such failure in the following amounts:

"(1) INDIVIDUALS.—In the case of any action by an individual, an amount equal to the sum of—

"(A) any actual damages to the borrower as a result of the failure; and

"(B) any additional damages, as the court may allow, for failure to use reasonable care in complying with the provisions of this section, in an amount not to exceed $500.

"(2) CLASS ACTIONS.—In the case of a class action, an amount equal to the sum of—

"(A) any actual damages to each of the borrowers in the class as a result of the failure; and

"(B) any additional damages, as the court may allow, for failure to use reasonable care in complying with the provisions of this section, in an amount not greater than the lesser of—

"(i) $1,000 for each member of the class; or

"(ii) $500,000 or 1 percent of the net worth of the violator, whichever is less.

"(3) COSTS.—In addition to the amounts under paragraph (1) or (2), in the case of any successful action under this section, the costs of the action, together with any attorneys fees incurred in connection with such action as the court may determine to be reasonable under the circumstances.

"(g) ADMINISTRATION OF ESCROW ACCOUNTS.—If the terms of any federally related mortgage loan require the borrower to make payments to the servicer of the loan for deposit into an escrow account for the purpose of assuring payment of taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges with respect to the property, the servicer shall make payments from the escrow account for such taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges in a timely manner as such payments become due.

"(h) Definitions.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) Effective date of transfer.—The term 'effective date of transfer' means the date on which the mortgage payment of a borrower is first due to the transferee servicer of a mortgage loan pursuant to the assignment, sale, or transfer of the servicing of the mortgage loan.

"(2) Servicer.—The term 'servicer' means the person responsible for servicing of a loan (including the person who makes or holds a loan if such person also services the loan). The term does not include the Government National Mortgage Association, the Federal National Mortgage Association, the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, the Resolution Trust Corporation, or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, in any case in which the assignment, sale, or transfer of the servicing of the mortgage loan is preceded by—

"(A) termination of the contract for servicing the loan for cause;

"(B) commencement of proceedings for bankruptcy of the servicer; or

"(C) commencement of proceedings by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Resolution Trust Corporation for conservatorship or receivership of the servicer (or an entity by which the servicer is owned or controlled).

"(3) Servicing.—The term 'servicing' means receiving any payments from a borrower pursuant to the terms of any loan, including amounts for escrow accounts described in section 10, and making the payments of principal and interest and such other payments with respect to the amounts received from the borrower as may be required pursuant to the terms of the loan.".

SEC. 3. ESCROW ACCOUNTS.

"(a) In General.—Section 10 of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (12 U.S.C. 2609) is amended—

"(1) by inserting "(a) IN GENERAL.—after the section designation; and

"(2) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(b) Notification of Shortage in Escrow Account.—If the terms of any federally related mortgage loan require the borrower to make payments to the lender or servicer (as the term is defined in section 6(h)) of the loan for deposit into an escrow account for the purpose of assuring payment of taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges with respect to the property, the lender or servicer shall notify the borrower not less than annually of any shortgage of funds in the escrow account.

"(c) ESCROW ACCOUNT STATEMENTS.—

"(1) INITIAL STATEMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any lender or servicer that has established an escrow account in connection with a federally related mortgage loan shall submit to the borrower for which the escrow account has been established a statement clearly itemizing the estimated taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges that are reasonably anticipated to be paid from the escrow account during the first 12 months after the establishment of the account and the anticipated dates of such payments.

"(B) TIME OF SUBMISSION.—The statement required under subparagraph (A) shall be submitted to the borrower at closing with respect to the property for which the mortgage loan is made or not later than the expiration of the 45-day period beginning on the date of the establishment of the escrow account.

"(2) ANNUAL STATEMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any lender or servicer that has established or continued an escrow account in connection with a federally related mortgage loan shall submit to the borrower for which the escrow account has been established or continued a statement clearly itemizing, for each period described in subparagraph (B) (during which the servicer services the escrow account), the payments made to the escrow account, the amount paid from the escrow account for taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges, and the balance in the escrow account at the end of the period.

"(B) TIME OF SUBMISSION.—The statement required under subparagraph (A) shall be submitted to the borrower not less than once for each 12-month period, the first such period beginning on the first January 1st that occurs after the date of the enactment of the Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosure Act of 1990, and shall be submitted not more than 30 days after the conclusion of each such 1-year period.".

"(b) PROHIBITION OF FEES FOR ESCROW ACCOUNT STATEMENTS.—Section 12 of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (12 U.S.C. 2610) is amended—

(1) by striking "lender" the first place it appears and inserting "lender or servicer (as the term is defined under section 6(h))";

(2) by striking "lender" the second place it appears and inserting "lender or servicer";

(3) by striking "6" and inserting "10(c)"; and

(4) by striking the section heading and inserting the following new section heading:

"PROHIBITION OF FEES FOR PREPARATION OF TRUTH-IN-LENDING, UNIFORM SETTLEMENT, AND ESCROW ACCOUNT STATEMENTS"

INTRODUCTION OF THE CONGREGATE HOUSING SERVICES ACT OF 1990

HON. MARILYN LLOYD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, as the new chairman of the Subcommittee on Housing and Consumer Interests of the Select Committee on Aging, it is my pleasure to introduce with my distinguished colleague from Minnesota, BRUCE VENTO, the Congregate Housing Services Act of 1990. This legislation provides vital supportive services to the frail elderly and persons with disabilities living in federally assisted housing. The bill will enable them to remain in their residences as they age and will prevent unnecessary or premature institutionalization.

My subcommittee has a long history as an advocate of housing for the elderly and disabled and of supportive service for adults residing in federally assisted housing. The subcommittee has played roles in the development of the Congregate Housing Services Program [CHSP] and in converting it from demonstration status to a permanent program in 1987. In addition, when faced with repeated attempts by the Reagan administration to eliminate and discredit this vital program, the subcommittee held hearings that clearly demonstrated the value of congregate services in preventing premature institutionalization. As many know, Mr. VENTO also has a long and superlative record in the area of congregate housing.

The Congregate Housing Services Program, which provides supportive services in public and section 202 housing, has allowed many persons to avoid premature institutionalization and to age in place with dignity. Program costs, including rent, are significantly lower than institutional care, resulting in substantial savings of Federal, State, and private funds. Whereas the cost of Medicaid nursing home care runs approximately $19,000 per year, funds for congregate services can help prevent such institutionalization for between $3,000 and $4,000 per year. If we include the rental costs of providing federally assisted housing in this comparison, the net savings of utilizing congregate services rather than institutionalization is on average, $6,000 per year per person in Medicare and Medicaid funds. As public policymakers, it would be imprudent and shortsighted to pass by the opportunity to utilize such a cost-effective, humane housing program.

Currently, 60 CHSP sites serve approximately 2,000 persons in 33 States, utilizing $5.9 million in appropriations for fiscal year 1990. Clearly, however, there are far more than 2,000 older and disabled persons in federally subsidized housing who need supportive services in order to remain in their residences and in their communities. There are 1.52 million older adults over the age of 65 in federally assisted housing. Of this population, 365,000 persons experience some form of frailty, and this number is expected to increase as the baby-boom generation ages. Additionally, it is estimated that 10 to 25 percent of persons in nursing homes are there prematurely and may be able to move into independent living situations if supportive services become available.

We have learned many significant lessons from the Congregate Housing Services Program. The CHSP has been successful in part because of its ability to target resources to those most at risk of institutionalization. Though the minimum age requirement for older adults in CHSP is 62 years—or disabled—the average age of participants is 78 years. The income requirements permit participation of residents who have up to 80 percent of area median income in some projects; however, the average income of participants is frequently in the $5,000 to $7,000 range. The majority of residents are frail, elderly women living alone who have little economic means. The CHSP serves those who often have no other appropriate housing options; our legislation, the "Congregate Services Act of 1990," would serve a similar, yet expanded population, reaching more of those in urgent need of supportive services, while at the same time saving Medicare and Medicaid dollars.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not just about housing. It recognizes the interrelationship between human services, housing, and long-term care. The bill presents a challenge to the Congress and the administration to look beyond tradtional boundaries and approaches in providing housing to older adults. As chair of the Subcommittee on Housing and Consumer Interests, I believe strongly that we must meet this challenge and integrate housing and services. The very successful CHSP provides a solid precedent for the Department of Housing and Urban Development [HUD] to be actively involved in the provision of services. Resident access to appropriate supportive services is as vital to a sound housing program as are the bricks and mortar that HUD has traditionally provided. I am confident that the successful integration of housing and services is possible, but it depends upon the coordination of efforts by HUD, HHS, State and local governments, project sponsors and staff, service providers, and residents. Fortunately, all of these necessary players will benefit from their involvement.

The "Congregate Housing Services Act of 1990," utilizes the knowledge and experience gained from the CHSP and borrows its most effective elements. I would like to highlight for you some of the key features of the legislation.

First, the bill creates a grant program through the Department of Housing and Urban Development [HUD] and the Department of Agriculture's Farmers Home Administration [FmHA] with a 50 percent matching requirement on the part of the States. States receive funding through a formula distribution based upon the number of federally assisted rental units occupied by elderly households in the State. The goal of this provision is to develop a commitment by States to provide supportive services and to foster partnerships between Federal and State governments. We also believe that States will benefit greatly from this legislation through substantial Medicaid savings. In States that choose not to participate, Federal funds will be set aside for local governments or housing project sponsors to be matched 50 percent by local dollars. Funds will also be available for Indian tribes to match.

Second, the bill provides a range of services targeted to those individuals most at risk of institutionalization. These services include nutritional meals, transportation, personal care, dressing, activities and group socialization, counseling, and case management. The targeting requirements, as perfected under the CHSP, ensure that only those truly at risk of institutionalization or those who are already unnecessarily institutionalized receive supportive services.

Third, our proposal will affect not only those in section 202 and public housing as under CHSP, but also older adults residing in housing assisted under sections 8, 221, 236, FmHA section 515 housing and sections 514–516 farm labor housing, and in Indian housing projects. By including projects under these sections, we are making all persons at risk of institutionalization who live in federally assisted housing eligible for services, regardless of the type of housing or whether or not they reside in urban or nonmetro areas. The bill also assists persons who are unnecessarily institutionalized to enter the program and to be housed more appropriately. As a condition of participation, owners of section 221, section 236, and section 515 projects that receive funds for services will not be permitted to prepay their mortgages. The Secretaries may give priority to applications that would serve prepayment eligible projects that are purchased by nonprofit organizations and to financially troubled projects that are run by nonprofit organizations.

Last, the bill incorporates existing CHSP sites by honoring the remaining time of their contracts and granting them one additional 5-year funding cycle under the CHSP law, and then giving them priority status under the new legislation. It is our intent to preserve and use as models the sites that have been operating successfully.

Mr. Speaker, eligibility for services is based upon meeting the requirement of impairment in two activities of daily living—adl—with a preference for those who have impairment in three activities of daily living. One of the deficiencies in activities of daily living must be in the nutrition area. In the bill, resources are focused on those most at risk of institutionalization as shown by impairment in three adls; we conservatively estimate that 43,000 persons fall into this category.

In order to give State and local governments time to raise matching funds and for projects to implement necessary steps to accommodate a program of supportive services, the bill is designed to serve one-fifth of these 43,000 persons per year. Each year, 9,200 frail elderly and disabled persons will be added to the program, until all 43,000 persons will be served at the end of 5 years. To be consistent with the 2-year authorization period of comprehensive housing legislation advancing in the House, the bill authorizes funds for the first 2 years of the program, though all contracts signed will be for 5 years.

The "Congregate Housing Services Act of 1990" authorizes $48 million over a 2-year period to provide funding for services through 5-year contracts. This amount funds the first two phases of the program, and represents a significant expansion of opportunity to save Federal and State Medicaid funds, and a very valuable opportunity for thousands of older and disabled adults.

The "Congregate Housing Services Act of 1990" should be an essential component of comprehensive housing legislation because it preserves and creates valuable housing options for older adults and persons with disabilities. We believe our approach is the best means to provide supportive services. There needs to be a firm and substantial commitment in terms of contract length and funding by the Federal Government in order to ensure State, local, and resident participation in a congregate program. A program where funding is available 1 year and eliminated the next may do more harm than good for residents who wish to age in place, and may present difficulties for State and local governments who attempt to implement programs to provide supportive services. My legislation provides budget authority for 5-year program cycles.

Let me take this opportunity to comment on two other proposals regarding housing and services for older adults. First, the distinguished chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, Mr. ROYBAL, has introduced the "Housing for the Frail Elderly Act," H.R. 2376, that I have cosponsored. This bill makes excellent changes in current housing law, and I believe that our bills mesh nicely to provide all federally-assisted housing managers with additional opportunities to assist their frail elderly and disabled residents.

Second, the administration has put forward a proposal, introduced as H.R. 4245, the Homeownership and Opportunity for People Everywhere Act of 1990" [HOPE]. To their credit, this bill acknowledges the need for supportive services for the frail elderly. It is designed as a demonstration program which couples vouchers with services. Frankly, there are some similarities between our bills, including a shared funding mechanism; however, there are also several noteworthy differences.

Using vouchers, HOPE addresses the needs of frail older persons who may or may not live in federally-assisted housing projects. Hence, the HOPE proposal and my bill serve different groups of frail older adults. In addition, my bill is not a demonstration program; it is conceived from the experiences of the excellent CHSP, which is now a permanent program. Also, the legislation I propose does not end after 5 years, shifting the cost burden to States and localities who critically need our ongoing assistance.

Finally, the administration's budget does not fund CHSP in fiscal year 1991. My legislation protects the current CHSP sites and phases them in to this program after 5 years. I believe that parts of the HOPE proposal for the elderly are compatible with our legislation, but on its own, it falls short of addressing the needs of older adults.

Mr. Speaker, our bill provides a model program for State and local governments and housing sponsors that offers among other benefits, economies of scale, coordination of services, the utilization of available surplus commodities from the Federal Government, professional assessment committees to ensure appropriate resident participation in the program, and case management to ensure the well-being of residents and the continuing appropriateness of the program for them.

We have worked closely with the American Association of Retired Persons [AARP], housing organizations, CHSP providers, and other groups representing federally assisted housing and older Americans in developing the legislation. I am fortunate to have the Orange Grove Center, a model CHSP site in my own district in Tennessee. This program is run by an extremely qualified administrator, Mr. Hal Baker. One of the oldest and largest CHSP sites, the Orange Grove Center serves approximately 80 older and mentally disabled adults in community-based section 202 housing. I am very proud to have this program in my district, and it is my intention and hope that congregate sites under this act will meet with similar success and community appreciation. Mr. VENTO's home State of Minnesota also provides some outstanding examples of successful congregate programs, and I was fortunate to draw on these examples in the development of the bill.

I am pleased that in the Senate, the distinguished chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, Mr. PRYOR of Arkansas, will be introducing the "Congregate Housing Services Act of 1990." Mr. PRYOR's leadership on aging issues has benefited many older Americans, especially those who are most vulnerable and in need of assistance. I am confident that his leadership will greatly enhance support for this bill in the Senate.

We would like to work with members of the Housing Subcommittee in the final development of the Congregate Housing Services Act in order to successfully incorporate it into the excellent housing package put together by Mr. GONZALEZ. Chairman GONZALEZ is to be commended for his tireless efforts to preserve and expand housing for those most in need of housing in this Nation, including older adults and persons with disabilities.

Our legislation ensures that older adults and persons with disabilities in federally assisted housing have option of living independently as they age, affirms their value as vital members of their communities, preserves their dignity, and saves the taxpayers money. I urge serious consideration of this legislation and urge my colleagues to cosponsor and support the bill.

YOUTH POLICY INSTITUTE'S ANNUAL 50-MILE CHALLENGE WALK

HON. JOSEPH P. KENNEDY II

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to alert my colleagues to the Youth Policy Institute's annual 50-mile challege walk, a trek along the C&O Canal that will take place on May 5, 1990.

For the 10th year in a row, this event will draw together Youth Policy Institute's staff, alumni, and supporters of all ages before dawn at Fletcher's Boathouse in Georgetown. During the day they will march 25 miles into southern Maryland before turning around for home. The annual walk is a re-creation of a challenge first issued more than half a century ago by President Theodore Roosevelt to his marines. Many years later President John F. Kennedy reissued the challenge to his administration, calling on them to demonstrate the energy and commitment of the New Frontier. The President's brother, Robert F. Kennedy, was the only aide that completed the walk.

Twenty years later, young people working at YPI were inspired to renew that challenge. Since then, the institute has sponsored the challenge walk as a fundraiser to support its programs.

Youth Policy Institute is a nonpartisan, interracial, and intergenerational research organization interested in America's children, youth, and families. The institute seeks to increase citizen participation in policy and program formulation on the Federal, State, and local levels. Convinced that sound decisions can only emerge from informed debate, the institute is committed to the study of options. Through its magazines, forums, and on-line service, YPI encourages public debate on policy and program options across the country.

Youth Policy Institute was established in 1979 as a program division of the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial, under the direction of David L. Hackett. In 1983, YPI became an independent organization.

In addition, YPI is specifically designed to accommodate the maximum participation of young people in its work. The institute places as much emphasis on its training component as on its efforts to influence policy formulation. Through its unique program, members of the YPI Corps in universities around the Nation conduct the research that constitutes the majority of the institute's work. YPI is providing a significant and viable means for young people to become involved in the decisionmaking processes that will shape their lives. More than 700 young people have benefited from their involvement with the institute over the past decade.

Mr. Speaker, the challenge walk is a fitting symbol for the energy and commitment of the people associated with YPI. Some people have walked hundreds of miles for the institute, while others come out for the first time every year and surprise themselves by going further than they ever thought they could. The walk represents a lesson in endeavor, commitment, high aspirations, and successes that surpass all expectation. That is a lesson from which we all can learn time and again.

I would like to urge those interested in taking this year's challenge to contact the Youth Policy Institute at (202) 638–2144.

TRIBUTE TO NEAL J. HARTE

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the House of Representatives the outstanding career of a citizen of my district, Neal J. Harte of Winchester, MA. Neal will take office as president of the Massachusetts Society of Certified Public Accountants on May 1, 1990.

Neal was born in Somerville, MA, and attended St. Clement's School in Somerville for 12 years. He is a graduate of Boston College Class of 1965. He is married to K. Patricia Harte who is also a graduate of BC's class of 1965. They have two children, Sean and Suzanne. After graduating from Boston College, Neal entered a career in public accounting and obtained a masters degree in taxation from Bentley College in 1977.

For the past 16 years Neal has had his own highly respected and successful public accounting firm, Harte & Carucci in Woburn, MA. In addition to his success in the business world, Neal has also been an active member of his community. He has been involved in his local church, in a myriad of Boston College alumni activities, in his local hosiptal, Winchester Hospital, as a corporator, at the Winchester Mount Vernon House as a corporator and has served as president of the Winchester Rotary Club, 1986–87.

I am delighted that Neal will shortly become president of the Massachusetts Society of Certified Public Accountants. His success on many levels, his active civic involvement, and his respect in the community is the essence of what binds together communities throughout America. I salute him.

VA HONORS OUTSTANDING NURSING EMPLOYEES

HON. G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, on May 4, the Department of Veterans Affairs [VA] will conduct a special ceremony here in Washington to honor three of its employees who have been selected from among VA's 172 hospitals to receive the 1990 Secretary's Award for Excellence in Nursing. Established in 1985, this award pays recognition to exceptional standards in VA nursing care.

I know my colleagues will join with me in congratulating these individuals for their dedication, compassion, and innovativeness and for the inspiration they provide for all who witness and experience their skillful work.

Chosen from among 60,000 VA nursing personnel, the 1990 recipients of the Secretary's Award for Excellence in Nursing are:

1990 EXCELLENCE IN NURSING AWARD WINNERS

ELAINE LLOYD

R.N., exemplifies excellence in nursing practice as clinical nurse specialist in the Spinal Cord Injury Center at the VA hospital in Palo Alto, CA. Through patient care and daily direction of the Center's staff, she has promoted an environment in which not only the health but also the values, customs and spiritual life of SCI patients are considered. Because of her leadership, compassion and expertise in the care of these patients, she is frequently consulted by VA staff across the country who work with SCI patients. Lloyd developed the standards of care in the SCI Center and chaired a task force which led to the development of a patient and family manual for hospital, outpatient and home-care use. Working with staff to aid in their understanding of spinal-cord injury, Lloyd helps to enhance their ability to assist patients in dealing with the impact of the injury on their lives. She assesses patient problems and helps the staff to expand their knowledge and experience. She also provides orientation to new staff, developed a continuing education program and is currently working on the establishment of a Spinal Cord Injury Learning Lab to provide an education center for SCI patients. Instrumental in establishing the American Association of Spinal Cord Injury Nurses, she served as vice-president for three years and is a member of a number of other professional organizations. Lloyd has made numerous presentations related to the care of the spinal-cord injured patient and holds a non-salaried faculty appointment at the University of California, San Francisco.

MARIA J. TIJERINA

A licensed vocational nurse at the VA Medical Center in Kerrville, TX, consistently provides highly skilled levels of care on each unit to which she is assigned. She assists during patient admissions, and monitors their needs. Sensitive to cultural and economic differences among patients, she wins the confidence and trust of both patients and family members, gaining information that is useful throughout the patients' hospitalization. Tijerina is considerate of patient needs and involves the patient and family in the patient's care. A natural leader, she encourages others and was chosen to work closely with other staff, providing extra training and support. Tijerina developed and implemented an extensive orientation program for staff in the Urgent Care Unit, and developed an audio patient teaching program on hypertension, which she also translated into Spanish.

DIANN MORRIS

A nursing assistant at the VA Medical Center in Augusta, GA, consistently demonstrates high standards of excellence in the care she provides to patients in a complex medical unit. Setting high standards for herself, she has become an inspiration to other staff. She often assists newly assigned employees and those who are having difficulty in certain areas of clinical practice. The attention and special care she provides to patients with Alzheimer's disease has been noted by their families. She monitors stroke patients, teaching them safety measures and encouraging them to continue working on their physical or occupational therapy skills. Morris also is actively involved in the community, including the Hurricane Hugo relief effort and working on behalf of needy families.

CONGRESSIONAL STUDENT FORUMS

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to have an opportunity last fall to meet with high school students from across Michigan's 17th Congressional District to talk about the environment. These meetings, called "Congressional Student Forums," are part of an ongoing series of discussions with students on issues of national importance.

As I indicated, this student forum's topic was the environment, specifically solid waste disposal, recycling and the greenhouse effect. More than 200 students met at Berkley High School last October, November, and December, listened to issue presentations from guest speakers, and later met in groups to discuss what could be done on the local level to reduce the volume of waste to be disposed of in landfills and incinerators.

A number of schools developed written recommendations on how to improve waste disposal techniques in their communities. Almost all the student groups commented that landfills are overused while recycling facilities are underutilized. The students' solutions included such concrete proposals as increasing public awareness of the current landfill crisis and recycling; asking school cafeterias to switch from styrofoam products to recyclable paper products, and planting trees to reduce residential energy consumption and clean the air.

I was impressed that the student's concern for the environment went beyond just talking about the problem. The students have volunteered to work with their schools and local governments to achieve actual pollution reduction. Some of the schools have already instituted recycling efforts and tree plantings.

I want to mention the names of schools which took part in last year's student forum: Berkley School, Cody, Crestwood, Devine Child, Ferndale, Oak Park, Marian, Redford, and Southfield/Lathrup. Along with the students, I want to thank the teachers who spent so much time working with the students on their projects.

Yesterday America observed the 20th anniversary of Earth Day. Citizens across the Nation marked this occasion by reaffirming support for our planet's fragile environment. I believe the students of Michigan's 17th District have also set an important example for the rest of us to follow.

A TRIBUTE TO VERDA FREEMAN WELCOME

HON. KWEISI MFUME

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to express my deep sense of personal sadness at the loss of a very dear friend and an outstanding citizen of Maryland and these United States, the Honorable Verda Freeman Welcome, who became the first African-American female in the United States to win a seat in a State senate. I extend my heartfelt sympathy to her daughter, Mary Sue; and grandson Gregory Welcome Mercer; and 12 brothers and sisters.

Mr. Speaker, not only have I risen today to pay tribute to this distinguished American, but I bring to the floor of this august body and to the attention of my colleagues a celebration of a truly exceptional life.

In 1907, she was born high up in the Blue Ridge Mountains in the small truck farm town of Uree, NC known commonly as Lake Lure. She was the third child of a family of 16 from John Freeman and Docia Freeman. Upon the death of her mother early in Verda's childhood, she often found herself taking care of her younger brothers and sisters while attending classes at night to pursue her education.

Growing up in a period of economic and social unrest in this country, she overcame mahy obstacles and pursued her aspirations to become one of Maryland's most respected and leading citizens, while serving in both the Maryland House of Delegates and the Maryland State Senate.

It was while growing up in Lake Lure that I believe Verda Welcome became committed to and began her journey on a life of public service. After witnessing her father repeatedly denied from the polls, she resolved at an early age that "when I grow up, I'm going to vote," but it was her deep compassion to help those less fortunate, as she had done as a child, that propelled her into public life.

Mr. Speaker, Verda Welcome came to Baltimore in 1929 and graduated 3 years later from the Coppin Normal School with a teaching certificate, and worked for 11 years as a teacher in the Baltimore City Schools. She went on to receive a bachelor's degree in history from my alma mater, Morgan State University in 1939 and in 1943 completed a masters degree in history from New York University.

The grandeur of Verda Welcome is that she lived her life by example and encouraged us all to stand up and fight for what is right. Prior to holding elected office, she was active with many local neighborhood organizations, and served as the president of the Northwest Improvement Association. As early as 1940's, she worked to register African-Americans to vote and encouraged participation in the political process. During the 1950's, she led the way in efforts to remove the racial barriers at the White Coffee Pot, a Baltimore eatery and other businesses in the area. Her efforts led her to become an active leader in the civil rights struggle during the 1960's.

It was her persuasive and forceful leadership that called for more than rhetoric from others in Government who prevented her from helping those in the community who sought her help. She decided to run for the Maryland House of Delegates and was elected in 1958. After serving in the House for 4 years, she went on to become the first African-American woman in the rich history of this Nation to hold a seat in a State senate. She quickly became a respected leader in the senate and continued the fight to remove racial barriers and social inequality for 20 years.

While serving in the Maryland General Assembly, she authored legislation entitled the "Public Accommodation Bill," which upheld the personal and public dignity of all people to rent a room or enjoy their meal in an appropriate environment without regard to race. As a State senator, she helped to eliminate the State's century old miscegenation law; and sponsored bills providing for equal pay for equal work, gun control, and voter registration by mail. Senator Verda Welcome also led the initiative when Morgan State received university status, which elevated this historically black institution of higher education and even greater level of prestige and recognition. These and other legislative initiatives that she pursued and achieved in ensuing years demonstrates the sincerity of her commitment to public service.

It was the courage and conviction of Verda Welcome that inspired me and many others to public service. She was a pioneering force which encouraged and led the way for many African-Americans to enter politics. The life of Verda Welcome has touched each and every one of our lives in some manner, and because she lived we are all that much better off. In death, as in life, she brings us together as a reminder to work for dignity and equality for everyone. What she strove for during her life, as in times of sorrow, she now brings to all our lives.

Verda Welcome was a very rare and special person whose compassion knew no boundaries, and her lagacy will remain with us for all eternity.

Mr. Speaker, my heart is heavy at this hour, but I come to this floor under the Capitol dome to celebrate a remarkable life—the life of Verda Freeman Welcome. In doing so may these words be long preserved and may her actions forever stand as a shinning example for all posterity.

CENTENNIAL OF THE GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS: 100 YEARS OF SERVICE TO AMERICA

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to draw my colleagues' attention to an important occasion being marked today: April 24 is the centennial of the General Federation of Women's Clubs [GFWC].

One hundred years ago today, a pioneering group of women founded an organization whose work to bring about community improvement and national progress has touched communities large and small throughout the United States and the world. In uniting a handful of local women's clubs which had sprung up independently in the last decades of the 19th century, the founders of the GFWC could hardly have imagined that their organization would 100 years later encompass 9,000 clubs and over 400,000 members in the United States. Many more members and affiliates operate today in over 40 countries worldwide.

Mr. Speaker, it has been my great pleasure to become more familiar with the work of the GFWC over the last several years, as we have worked together to sustain America's volunteers by addressing the problem of nonprofit and volunteer liability. GFWC's commitment to this effort, as with all projects they undertake, has been steadfast, helping to bring the problem to the attention of lawmakers at the State and national level. Many GFCW chapters have been instrumental in helping to pass State laws addressing the liability problem facing all nonprofits.

I am also proud of the many local projects in my State that would simply not have gotten done if there had not been GFWC women to do them. In Illinois, as in all 50 States, GFWC women are working to help families in crisis, to abolish illiteracy, to help prevent the tragedy of youth suicide and substance abuse, to aid people with disabilities, and to improve the environment.

The gallant women who preceded today's members have left an important legacy to this Nation. They established 75 percent of the public libraries across this country, played a significant role in the passage of the Pure Food and Drug Act, were instrumental in the enactment of the first child labor and protection laws and the first Worker's Compensation Act and worked for the establishment of the National Gallery of Art here in Washington.

Without question, GFWC members have transformed our Nation and are continuing to meet the challenges with their talents and resources. It is with this knowledge that I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing the GFWC a very happy 100th birthday and best wishes for another successful century of service.

NAMIBIA JOINS THE COMMUNITY OF DEMOCRATIC NATIONS

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to extend my welcome to a new nation that has joined the ranks of those countries that are committed to democracy and free enterprise. I am speaking, of course, of Namibia. Tomorrow, the Foreign Minister of this new country, Theo-Ben Gurirab, will be here for meetings with the Department of State and Members of Congress. His presence in this country is a testament to the tenacity of the Namibian people and a true test of their commitment to support democratic change in their country.

The birth of this Southwest African nation came after a long and difficult period of gestation. It was a period of time where the bullet, instead of the ballot, was the means utilized for political persuasion and influence. It was a period when time-honored concepts of freedom of speech, freedom of political expression, and the right to self-determination were replaced by historically despised practices of repression and disrespect for human dignity. Like the Phoenix, however, Namibia has risen from the ashes—resplendent in its new raiment of democracy, racial harmony and political pluralism.

The Tuesday, March 20 edition of the Christian Science Monitor contained on op-ed by Robert I. Rothberg of Tufts University. Mr. Rothberg's article is an ode to Namibia's efforts to reconstitute itself as a model for racial, ethnic, class and political harmony. He notes that the new constitution—a constitution that protects human rights, property rights and establishes checks and balances on the Government—is the most liberal in Africa. We must not underestimate the importance of what President Sam Nujoma and the Namibian people have accomplished in Namibia. It is nothing less than a 180-degree turn away from the factionalization, violence and intransigence, that characterized Namibia during the 40 years during which South Africa held sway over the country. It has been accomplished by creating an atmosphere of optimism and positivism despite a history that would suggest a sustained period of social fragmentation and economic dislocation.

As the House and Senate consider the levels of foreign aid that will be provided to the many deserving recipient countries, I hope that my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, and in both Chambers, will recognize the importance of providing substantial support to Namibia as it struggles to consolidate its democratic gains. The United States can ill-afford to allow Namibia to slip back into the past pattern of intolerance, extremism and violence. To allow this to happen through a lack of meaningful commitment to one of the few true democracies on the African continent has dire implications for our ability to promote continued democratization in other African countries and elsewhere. Mr. Speaker, I, therefore ask that my colleagues closely review Mr. Rothberg's Christian Science Monitor article which is hereby submitted for their consideration.

NAMIBIA'S NATIONHOOD

(By Robert L. Rotberg)

Namibia becomes Africa's 52nd nation tomorrow after more than a century of white rule. As it leaves South African control, it becomes a possible model for cross-color cooperation in southern Africa.

As large as two Californias, Namibia is nine-tenths desert and semidesert. Its comparatively small population of 1.3 million is overwhelmingly African or of mixed descent. But because of its location on South Africa's northwestern flank, because 75,000 of its people are white and predominantly of South African extraction, and because South Africa has effectively ruled Namibia from 1915 until today, whites and blacks in South Africa will be closely watching how the new Namibia relates to its neighbor, how it treats whites, and how democratically and tolerantly it rules itself.

The government that assumes power tomorrow is, moreover, derived from a guerrilla movement that opposed South Africa's control of Namibia from 1966. SWAPO (South West Africa People's Organization) fought bitterly against South Africa, largely without effect, until an American-brokered, cease-fire brought peace in 1989.

During its many years of exile SWAPO was backed by the Soviet Union and other East-bloc nations. It preached a heady revolutionary rhetoric, and promised to nationalize white-owned property and set up a one-party state once it attained power.

Now that power is at hand, every indication is that SWAPO will avoid alarming its major revenue producers and export earners, and will woo rather than attack foreign investors. Mining is the mainstay of its fragile economy. Consolidated Diamond Mines (CDM), a subsidiary of De Beers of South Africa, is the largest private employer of labor and the largest contributor of national export earnings (30 percent) and taxes (13 percent of the total). A subsidiary of RTZ, a British firm, exports uranium oxide from one of the world's largest deposits. Its share of exports and taxes is only slightly less than CDM.

Copper, lead, zinc, and tin have all been key to Namibia's economy. So have pilchards and sardines, and the pelts of karakul lambs. But markets and prospects have changed, and Namibia has recently been supported as much by South African assistance and wartime expenditures as by its minerals and agriculture.

Namibia also imports much of its food and other staples from South Africa and exports its uranium and other metals through the South African-controlled enclave of Walvis Bay. Its currency and tariffs are also South African. That neighbor has long run the railways, airways, harbors, and power facilities, and dominated Namibia's infrastucture.

For these reasons, as well as the sheer economic and political power of South Africa, SWAPO's government needs to move deliberately. Yet SWAPO is dominated by the Ovambo, people from Namibia's north, who constitute two-thirds of the population. There is demand for development in the north, and SWAPO will be pressured to make up for South African neglect.

Fortunately, the way in which Sam Nujoma, SWAPO's canny leader and Namibia's first president, has chosen to organize his government has been greeted with pleasant surprise.

He and his followers agreed to a new constitution that limits the powers of the president, guarantees human rights, mandates an independent judiciary, and enshrines, private ownership. A mixed economy is prescribed and foreign investment is encouraged. As written and ratified, Namibia's is the most liberal constitution in Africa.

Furthermore, Mr. Nujoma has not reserved his top posts for Ovambo or for Africans. His prime minister is expected to be Hage Geingob and his foreign minister Theo-Ben Gurirab. Both are Damara. Two Ovambo, Peter Mueshihange and Hidipo Hamutenya, will become minister of defense and minister of information, respectively.

Nujoma has given the critical responsibility for the economy to Dr. Otto Herrigel, a German-speaking businessman who is known for his realism. A white human-rights campaigner will be the attorney general.

If the new Namibia operates along the lines of Botswanna, where democracy and economic growth have been the rule since 1966, South Africans of all colors will notice. They will also observe how whites take part in the modernization of the country, and contemplate the extent to which Namibia functions as a harmonious multiracial entity.

WHY I AM PROUD OF AMERICA

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, each year the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States conducts the Voice of Democracy Broadcast Scriptwriting Contest. More than 137,000 secondary school students participated in the contest this year, although only one contestant was selected from each State to compete for 1 of the final 12 scholarships offered by the VFW.

I am pleased to announce that the winner for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for 1989–90 is a high school senior from my district, Mr. Robert J. Malionek, of Salem. Ranked first in his class at Salem High School, Mr. Malionek has won numerous academic awards, including the Xerox Social Sciences/Humanities Award, the Chancellor's Talent Award, and the Superintendent's Award. In addition, Mr. Malionek excels athletically, having earned the captainship of both the varsity soccer team and the varsity tennis team. He hopes to attend Harvard University.

The theme of this year's essay was "Why I Am Proud of America." In his essay, Mr. Malionek stimulates our imagination by evoking many images of America and captures the essence of our Nation vis-a-via his excellent writing skills. The following is Mr. Robert Malionek's award-winning script:

WHY I AM PROUD OF AMERICA

(By Robert John Malionek)

Why I am proud of America. America. How can one idea spark the emotions of so many people? How can one explain the endless characteristics of such a land? Hot dogs at a baseball game; a hike in the brisk air surrounding a mountain; the ability to go to the 100th floor of a skyscraper and still see other above; the peace of a tiny town surrounded by green and a deep blue sky; and another surrounded by smooth desert; the constant honking of taxi horns as smelly drivers yell out their windows until they realize it does no good. These visions make America the land that it is. These are what people see. But what is in the midst of these scenes? A feeling, an emotion, something that must be experienced, not seen. It can't be explained, and the only way to understand it is by opening our minds and taking a deep breath of fresh American air. Now the real America . . . the pride permeating through those scenes . . . is felt. We can only sense it . . . Democracy.

This single word is a perfect synonym for liberty, peace, opportunity, equality. It is the building block of a great nation: the idea that makes up the foundation. This feeling is the concrete which makes the United States . . . united. But Democracy does not end there. It is amplified to involve the smallest of things; it is the underlying factor which allows every little object the freedom to be where it is.

Democracy, on paper, is perhaps a quite complicated form of government. Statute and common laws, bylaws, court cases, amendments all make up the governing political system which makes the nation "work". But such specifics are not necessary to know in order to understand Democracy. The word has a simple meaning, and that is: "people". Each and every individual makes Democracy "work". It protects the people, struggles for the people, is comprised of people. It revolves around, and is revolved around, by people. They make it what it is; an emotion, an inexplicable inner feeling which drives men and women, young and old.

It is felt by the immigrant on a steamship, who through teary, smiling eyes can see a beautiful, crowned, awsome lady hold out a burning torch to guide him to a free shore, and then onward.

It is experienced by the family that strolls into the town by the waterfront, on a warm but fresh July evening, to be inspired by the colorful fireworks in the sky . . . lights which shine upon all people and unite them into one brotherhood, one family.

It is barely grasped by aspiring elementary students, who are just beginning to have great hopes and goals in life. They are learning that no matter how high they reach, Democracy will give them the opportunity to climb to the top.

All these people ask, "What is Democracy"? "What is it that makes America so special?" And yet, no person could offer a complete explanation. They simply thank God for our freedom. America is not perfection. It is only the stairway to Heaven, open to everyone who places no limitations on himself. Many choose to ascend the stairway as high as they can, arms outstretched. Many also smile and stay content on level ground. This is the liberty of the people. Our goal is to join hand-in-hand and as one, take steps upward. If we choose to participate, then Democracy is our means to success and happiness. Why am I proud of America? I am proud because we all sense these feelings deep inside our hearts. It is a great experience to hear America singing inside myself. We must all remember to take time aside, stop what we're doing, let in all that fresh, pure air and thank God for America.

CAPITAL PENALTIES FOR CAPITOL CRIMES

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced legislation which would make the death penalty applicable in the Federal District of Columbia. As we are all aware, the past few years have brought to the District of Columbia the indecorous monicker of the "murder capital" of the United States. Notwithstanding mayoral statements, it can be stated with certainty that the murder rate in the District continues at an alarming rate. In 1987 there were 223 murders in the District, or an average of over 18 per month. Two years later the number had almost doubled, reaching a total of 438 murders—roughly 60 per 100,000 inhabitants. This year so far the record is no better, averaging more than one homicide a day.

I believe it is time for the District of Columbia to be held to the same standards as the capital cities of other States. Currently 37 States provide for the possibility of the death penalty as a sentencing option, chiefly for the crime of murder or felony murder. The death penalty is supported by the majority of the American people. A Gallup poll conducted a little over a year ago found that 79 percent of Americans favor the death penalty. A CBS poll conducted a few months later found that 75 percent of respondents indicated there were circumstances in which they thought the death penalty was justified. Examples include: first degree murder, cop killing, and drug kingpins.

My bill makes it very clear that the jury is never required to impose a death sentence and it requires that the jury be so instructed. In fact, the jury is only allowed to consider the death penalty as an option in certain particularly heinous circumstances, and the jury must be unanimous in its decision. This is in line with constitutional requirements. Specifically:

In addition to the crime of murder, the jury must also find aggravating factors, such as previous convictions of homicide, commission of the crime for money, and torture of the victim.

A separate hearing must be held to determine sentence once a guilty verdict has been rendered for a capital crime. Also, the penalty of death is discretionary rather than mandatory.

It prohibits carrying out the death penalty on a person who was under the age of 18 at the time the crime was committed, or upon a person who is mentally retarded.

As the Supreme Court has stated:

Capital punishment is an expression of society's moral outrage at particularly offensive conduct . . . (i)t is essential in an ordered society that asks its citizens to rely on legal processes rather than self-help to vindicate their wrongs.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this timely legislation.

SALUTE TO PARKWAY SOUTH HIGH SCHOOL BAND WEEK

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in salute to the students and administrators of the Parkway South High School Bands. Their diligent hard work, conscientious attention to detail, and commitment to musical excellence has resulted in one of the finest, and most diverse musical companies of any high school in our Nation.

As a tribute to this company, St. Louis County has proclaimed April 29 thru May 5, 1990 as "Parkway South High School Patriot Bands Week." In celebration of this special week Parkway South has initiated an ambitious schedule of events to highlight the talents of their many different ensemble companies and individual members. I believe this is altogether fitting.

Music exists in that rarest of categories—that which must be experienced to be real. In its purest form it gives us a glimpse into the souls of another—a shared understanding of the uniqueness which is another human being. In its best form it gives us a look into ourselves, an awareness of who and what we are, but more importantly what we are capable of becoming. By the skills of a musician, notes on a page are transformed into something which may be poorly described but richly felt. And through the heart and soul of a musician—from nothing comes magic.

Mr. Speaker, the Parkway South High School band has developed an extremely ambitious schedule of events to celebrate during this week which I have listed below. Their activities reflect an extremely high level of dedication and the utmost commitment from students, teachers, administrators, and parents alike. I ask each of my colleagues to join with me in saluting these fine young people of Parkway South who have dedicated themselves to their music and, by so doing, bring magic into their community and into the world.

April 26–28, 1990 the Parkway South High School Concert Band will take their first solo performance trip to Columbia, MO and Kansas City, MO.

April 27–29, 1990 the Parkway High School Show Band comprised of Nazario Bell, Josh Maloney, Brian Page, John Siwinski, Mike Siwinski, and Jason Werner will travel to Chicago, Illinois to participate in the Music Festival hosted by Music Maestro Please.

April 28, 1990 Josh Maloney, Jena Pittman, Lisa Smith and Sarah Webster will participate as soloists at the Missouri State High School Solo/Ensemble Festival, and, Marsha Bartholomew, Kim Beazley, Karen Cradduck, Connie Huber, Katrina King, Michelle Martin, Brian Page, Angie Pierce, Jeni Pittman, Kim Robinson, and Sarah Webster will participate in ensembles at the Missouri State High School Solo/Ensemble Festival.

May 1, 1990 the Parkway South High School Symphonic Band will participate in the St. Louis Suburban Large Ensemble Festival.

May 2, 1990 the Parkway South High School Patriot Bands will present Maynard Ferguson and his Big Bop Nouveau Band in concert.

May 3, 1990 during the symphonic and concert band performance, the Parkway South High School Wind Ensemble will make its premiere performance and will conclude the evening accompanying Maynard Ferguson in a medley of his music.

May 4–5, 1990 the Parkway South High School Patriot Bands are hosting the Creative Arts Workshop.

A TRIBUTE TO JACKI McCARTY

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, last week my hometown of Santa Fe and my home State of New Mexico lost one of our most talented and colorful citizens. Jacki McCarty succumbed to lung cancer. Her death, marks the end of a lengthy career as a teacher, writer, singer, dancer, guitarist, songwriter, actress, and clothing designer. Jacki McCarty was one of a kind.

Born in Oklahoma, Jacki's family moved to northern New Mexico to escape the blistering Oklahoma heat. She spent most of her liftime in our Land of Enhancement enchanting us with her outstanding abilities. She sang and danced at every Taos Fiesta since 1936. She was a longtime performer at Rancho de Chimayo singing and playing her guitar to the delight of the thousands who came out to hear and see her.

While most of us will remember Jacki for her on stage abilities, she was more than just an entertainer. Some of her greatest accomplishments occurred in the field of minority education. Jacki was actually Dr. Jacki McCarty. She received her Ph.D in minority education in early childhood studies. She educated Indian children in Taos and taught college courses at several New Mexico schools.

In 1987, Jacki received the New Mexico Governor's Award for Outstanding New Mexico Women.

Jacki was a great New Mexican. She gave so much to our State, so much to her fans, so much to the betterment of mankind. She will be missed by all of us.

I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention several items which more clearly details Jacki's career. I call your attention to a list of her accomplishments and two newspaper articles which were published just last week.

Jacki McCarty is know primarily for her accomplishments in the field of minority education. She grew up in Taos "next door" to the Taos Indian pueblo and resolved early in life to be a teacher within the Indian and Spanish cultures.

She embarked on a study of Indian children at the Taos pueblo in 1969 and this became the subject of her dissertation. Upon receiving a Ph.D. in minority education, in early childhood studies in 1970, Dr. McCarty taught for the Eighth Northern Pueblos Organization and was on the teaching staff at the Taos Pueblo Head Start School for a period of 7 years. Realizing the need for a strong language skills program, she taught the pre-kindergarden Indian children English and their own Tiwa language.

Dr. McCarty also taught college courses sponsored by the University of New Mexico, Highlands University, and the College of Santa Fe to minority teachers working on their college degrees. She encouraged her Indian student-teachers to devise a bilingual program of Tiwa and English. Consequently, the first cirriculum in formally teaching young students in both languages was formulated under her guidance.

During this time, Dr. McCarty volunteered her time, in the afternoons, tutoring mothers of her Indian Head Start art students so that they could successfully pass their G.E.D. high school equivalency exam.

The multitalented Dr. McCarty pursued a journalistic career of writing about her fellow New Mexicans. She served as Woman's Page editor of the Albuquerque Journal and later wrote feature stories about the Taos Indians while teaching at the pueblo.

Dr. McCarty began dancing and singing as a child at the Taos fiestas of Santiago and Santanna. She is the first known entertainer to have introduced flamenco dancing to northern New Mexico audiences. She continued the tradition of entertaining at fiestas for 24 years.

Dr. McCarty began research in regional folk music during the early 1950's for her master's degree at the University of New Mexico. With the encouragement of Dr. John Robb, she has researched material for the past 35 years now having one of the largest private collections of New Mexico folk music in the State. She taught the first college course in southwestern folk music in New Mexico in 1975 for Highlands University, Taos branch.

As a folk singer and guitarist, she has sung many of the ballads she personally collected through the media of television, radio and stage. One of her first benefits, featuring folk music was on stage at the Kimo Theater in Albuquerque in 1953 with Glenn Campbell and Dick Bills.

Dr. McCarty has been named New Mexico's "First Lady of Television," having the first locally produced show of Spanish songs for KOB–NBC–TV in 1952 in Albuquerque.

She also produced southwestern folk music radio shows for the American Forces Network and Radio Free Europe while living in Europe in the mid-1950's.

Dr. McCarty is also known in New Mexico as the "Birthday Lady" having sung the traditional Spanish birthday song, "Las Mañanitas" to thousands of New Mexicans and tourists the world over during the past 14 years where she has performed at Restaurante Rancho de Chimays. She has graciously accepted the board's request of the International Folk Art Museum to sing "Las Mañanitas" for Alexander Girand's 80th birthday in May.

In 1983, Dr. McCarty was a member of the Santa Fe good will delegation to Santa Fe-Granada Spain. She sang the new song "A Love Song to Santa Fe," in Spanish to the foreign dignitaries. Mayor Louis Montaño presented a tape of her song to the sister city as an official good will remembrance.

Dr. McCarty recently released this record in Spanish and English, "A Love Song to Santa Fe" which is being distributed throughout the world. Profits from the record have been designated for the young children's singing group, "Juventud."

Dr. McCarty was a recipient of the Santa Fe Theater Guild's 1981 award for "The Best Musical Actress." She has had leading roles in the Broadway musical, "Side by Side by Sondheim," as well as Greer Garson Theater productions, "Pippin," and "Babes in Arms."

Through appearances on the NBC "Today Show;" "CBS Morning News," P.M. Magazine, German Television and at the American Advertising Federation conventions, Jacki has brought throughout the Nation much national publicity to New Mexico. She has been billed as the Songbird of New Mexico for such events.

Dr. McCarty especially enjoys singing the old Spanish folk songs, corridos and rancheras to the senior citizen groups in northern New Mexico. She has done hundreds of benefits during her singing career. In the past year she has sung for the Taos County Foster Parent's Christmas party; and Angel Fire-Taos Opera Guild's benefit at the Governor's mansion; the New Mexico Retired Teacher's Association; at La Residencia Nursing Home with the Fiesta Mariachi; the New Mexico Repertory Theater Benefit at Fenn Gallery; the Santa Fe chapter of the American Association of Retired People; the First Santa Fe Mayoral Bail at El Dorado Hotel; the Greer Garson dinner party benefit; the Santa Fe Chamber of Commerce's Secretary Day at La Fonda Hotel; and the Lincoln County Pageant and Festival in Lincoln, New Mexico.

"SO FINE, SO SENSITIVE" JACKI MCCARTY DIES OF LUNG CANCER

Jacki McCarty was sickly as a child.

As an adult, she once told an interviewer: "Being sick gives you a special perspective on living. When I've been well, I've learned to live every day as if it were my last, but this seems to result in my overprogramming myself."

McCarty, who overprogrammed herself for decades, died Monday morning at her Santa Fe home of lung cancer, which was diagnosed Aug. 1.

During her lifetime, much of which was spent in northern New Mexico, she was a writer, singer, teacher, dancer, guitarist, songwriter, actress and clothing designer.

She taught American Indian children, wrote social columns for The New Mexican and is credited for producing the State's first television show of Spanish songs.

She was a longtime performer at Rancho de Chimayo and other area nightclubs and referred to herself as a "barroom singer."

McCarty made a lasting, colorful first impression with her red hair and sequined costumes, much of it hand-designed.

She once told an editor at The New Mexican: "Everybody wears a costume. This is my costume."

She was best-known for her singing and knowledge of folk music.

"She was very much a performer in every sense of the word," Loretta Adelo, a friend, said. "She wasn't the ordinary."

In an interview several years ago, McCarty talked about her own transformation as a singer in northern New Mexico.

When KOB-TV first went on the air in the early 1950s, she wore a black wig and appeared under the stage name "Juanita" on the station's first locally produced program.

Lalo Guerrero, a popular Santa Fe Fiesta entertainer for many years, convinced her to be true to herself and adopt Jacki "La Gringa" McCarty as her stage name, she said.

McCarty began playing the guitar and singing as a young girl in Taos. Even then, she caught smiles from Taos residents, who enjoyed watching her sing and dance at Fiesta, she said. She sang and danced at every Taos Fiesta beginning in 1936.

"I always have loved music and I love to sing," she said.

In the mid-1970s, she began singing and playing a guitar at Rancho de Chimayo.

Florence Jaramillo, owner of Rancho de Chimayo, said McCarty and her mother used to dine at the restaurant regularly. One afternoon, McCarty asked Jaramillo if she could sing a song. That began a singing engagement that lasted 15 years.

McCarty sang every weekend throughout the year and four nights a week during the summer. The last three years, she didn't sing quite as frequently.

Jaramillo said McCarty could sing in seven languages. "She had a wonderful ear for music," she said.

Jaramillo said McCarty had a wonderful rapport with her audience, especially children, "who adored her," she said. "She was the pied piper. People loved her. She made everybody happy."

She made friends easily. Adelo described her as a "wonderful, warm-hearted friend. She was never too busy to be a good friend."

She was 61, her husband, John, said. Friends would not discuss her age. Adelo said she was "sworn to secrecy about that. No way will I tell Jacki's age."

Jacki McCarty was one of four children born in Oklahoma to Joseph and Isabelle Quinn. Joseph Quinn was a first-generation Irishman and a journalist who worked on the Baltimore Sun with H.L. Mencken and on a paper in Oklahoma.

The family spent summers in Taos to avoid the oppressive Oklahoma heat, which Isabelle Quinn could not tolerate, finally moving to Taos permanently in the 1940s.

The Quinn family relationship with Taos was an accidental one. Joseph Quinn was hunting for mountain lions in the Tes Piedras area when he and the hunting party got lost. They came upon sheepherders who directed them to Taos, where they stayed at the old Columbia Hotel, a magnet for artists and writers.

The clean, mountain air was good for Jacki, whose lungs were poor from birth, brother-in-law Dan Kozak said.

She attended Barry College, a Catholic girls school in Miami, and she taught music at Hockaday School, a girls' prep school in Dallas.

McCarty was woman's page editor in the 1950s for the Albuquerque Journal.

She taught at the Taos Pueblo for several years toward her doctorate in education.

The Rev. Jose Maria Blanch, former pastor of Holy Family Church in Chimayo and who met McCarty in 1975 during one of her singing engagements at Rancho de Chimayo, described her as a very special, sensitive person.

"She loved very much the music," said Blanch, a native of Spain. "She was so fine, so sensitive, she hurt in many ways. She had very deep religious feelings in her own way."

Although she frequently sang solo, accompanying herself on the guitar, she also performed with others.

Northern New Mexico musician Ruben Romero said he and McCarty provided the musical entertainment for a group from the city of Santa Fe that went to Spain in 1983 to establish a sister city relationship with Santa Fe, Spain.

One evening, when the city of Santa Fe, NM, hosted a party for Santa Fe, Spain, Romero accompanied McCarty when she sang Santa Fe Love Song, a composition by Antonio Avila.

"She sang beautifully that night," he remembered. "She touched a lot of people." They later recorded the song and performed together at engagements.

One of McCarty's most recent performances was July 9 for the The Pink Adobe's 45th birthday.

Avila, with whom she sang for two years, said McCarty "always loved music. She made people feel good because she was always joyful. She liked to please people with her music."

A fund in her name is being established at the Santa Fe Community Foundation, 300 Galisteo St., Santa Fe, NM 87501.

A rosary will be recited at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at McGee Memorial Chapel Mortuary and Crematory. A funeral Mass will be said at 3 p.m. Thursday at St. Francis Cathedral. Her remains will be cremated, and no burial is scheduled.

McCarty is survived by her husband, John McCarty; a son, Mark Quinn McCarty of Santa Fe; two stepsons, Christopher McCarty of Los Angeles and Stephen McCarty of Woodacre, Calif.; a sister, Marjorie Quinn Kozak; two brothers, Jerry Quinn of Oklahoma City and Wendell Quinn of Capistrano Beach, Calif.; and a step-grandson.

ENTERTAINER, TEACHER JACKI MCCARTY, 61, DIES OF CANCER AT HOME IN SANTA FE

(By Anne Hillerman)

Well-known Santa Fe entertainer, teacher and writer Jacki Quinn McCarty died of cancer Monday morning at her Santa Fe home. She was 61.

"She died peacefully," her husband John McCarty said. "She had been in a coma and we had had no communication for several days, but she squeezed my hand just before she died."

McCarty, an energetic redhead who spoke Spanish fluently, performed at Restaurante Rancho de Chimayo on weekends and during the summer for about 15 years.

"She was an established performer—she'd worked for Radio Free Europe—and a skilled entertainer when she talked to us," Florence Jaramillo, owner of the restaurant, said. "You can't imagine how many people—people from all over the world—come in the restaurant and ask for her. She made everyone she sang for feel bubbly, feel happy, feel special. . . . She loved to sing and she loved people."

Known for her generosity, McCarty performed hundreds of benefits during her singing career, with events to benefit children and senior citizens among her favorites.

"I think she truly loved this city," Mayor Sam Pick said Monday. "She offered her talent whenever she could, and she helped us with the Sister City program. Her death is great loss for Santa Fe."

She was a recipient of the Santa Fe Theater Guild's 1981 award for "The Best Musical Actress," and had many leading roles in Santa Fe productions.

McCarty was born Aug. 26, 1928, the daughter of journalist Joseph Jerome Quinn and Isabelle Moffat. The family lived in Oklahoma City, where Quinn pioneered the first Catholic newspaper in that state.

The family began spending summers in Taos in 1933. Jacki danced in the Taos Fiestas and learned Spanish and folk songs. She became a Taos resident in 1949 and, after some time out of state, became a full-time Santa Fe resident with her husband in 1978.

Initially a self-taught singer, dancer and guitarist, McCarty began research into New Mexico's regional folk music during the early 1950s for her master's degree at the University of New Mexico. She amassed one of the largest private collections of traditional New Mexican folk music in the state. She also taught the first college course in Southwestern folk music in New Mexico in 1975 for Highlands University, Taos Branch.

McCarty produced Spanish songs for television and radio in Albuquerque and for the Armed Forces Network and Radio Free Europe when living in Europe in the mid-1950s. She also was editor of the Women's Page for the Albuquerque Journal.

She began a study of Indian children at the Taos Pueblo in 1965, work which became the subject of her dissertation. After receiving a doctorate in Minority Education in 1970, she taught for the Eight Northern Pueblos and Taos Pueblo Head Start for seven years. She worked with preschool children to strengthen their skills in English and their native Tiwa, and worked as a volunteer tutor, helping the mothers of her Head Start students prepare for their General Educational Development certificates.

McCarty also taught courses sponsored by the University of New Mexico, Highlands University and the College of Santa Fe.

Her first husband, Wayne Maki, died in 1958. In 1964, she married John McCarty, a founder of the Dallas Theatre Center and a recently retired director of Frito-Lay Inc.

In addition to her husband, she is survived by her son, Mark Quinn of Hawaii; two stepsons, Christopher McCarty of Los Angeles and Stephen McCarty of Woodacre, Calif.; sister Marjorie Kozak of Midland, Texas; brothers Jerry Quinn of Oklahoma City and Wendell Quinn of Capistrano Beach, Calif. and grandson John Dylan McCarty of Woodacre, Calif.

Funeral services will be Thursday at 3 p.m. at St Francis Cathedral. A rosary will be said Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. at McGee Memorial Chapel, 1320 Luisa.

A memorial fund, the Jacki McCarty Love Fund, has been established through the Santa Fe Community Foundation, 300 Galisteo.

CREDIT WHERE CREDIT IS DUE

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, last week the Washington Post printed an article on the efforts of my brother Stewart Udall to gain benefits for victims of nuclear tests and uranium mining. For conflict of interest reasons, I have not been involved with legislative efforts to provide Government benefits for these folks. However, many House Members have been active in this worthwhile cause. Unfortunately, the Post neglected to give credit to these individuals. JACK BROOKS, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, BARNEY FRANK, chairman of the Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations, and WAYNE OWENS, sponsor of the Radiation Exposure Compensation Act, are all to be commended for the work they have done on this important legislation. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to give credit where credit is due. Thanks to the hard work and dedication of Messrs. BROOKS, FRANK, and OWENS, our Government will begin efforts to correct its egregious actions.

THE EXPORT ADMINISTRATION ACT

HON. AMO HOUGHTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, Washington is a city where lots of speeches are made. Words tend to draw out the message. Yet there are moments when words must be spoken, voices must be heard in causes that have a profound impact on our Nation.

As background, let me say that business and trade have been not a small part of my life. I have sensed the impact these forces have had on our national independence and our national health. I have had a bit of first hand experience in understanding the hurdles that businesses face in trying to position themselves competitively. This is why I must speak out today in behalf of fundamental reform of our export laws.

Commercial and national security interests today are probably more closely entwined than they have been at any other time since the end of World War II. Economic health and one's ability to trade competitively in the world market may be the single most important component of anyone's national security. The new war internationally—at least for the present—is economic. Guns may come later—God forbid—but at the moment the weapons are products, and services, and finance.

This is why I feel so strongly about the rules and regulations under which we operate. They must work for us—not against us. If we do not insist, nothing will happen. The Export Administration Act should not be an impediment to American competitiveness in the 1990's. It should help remove barriers, not place more in the path of industry.

On the surface there are fewer complaints about the day to day licensing. The deeper problem is in the systems inability to function effectively when dealing with the policy issues or specific issues of the new economic order—particularly in Europe. Let me explain.

There are a number of agencies, the Department of Commerce, the Department of Defense and the Department of State, responsible for one job. There is delay, there is endless debate on almost any issue that deviates from the norm. A norm, incidentally set a generation ago. Industry can accept trade restrictions based on clear and convincing security considerations. That is a given, but nothing is more irritating than a lost sale caused by in-house conflict, grounded more on turf battles than substance. The sale is lost because the insiders cannot get their act together.

Everything in business depends on timing—so clearly this needs to change. For my money it means clear Commerce Department authority over the control system. And why not. This is Commerce. It also means a minimum of second-guessing and redundancy, and one-stop shopping. The Department of Commerce's Bureau of Export Administration if given the punch can do the regulatory job assigned to it. Period. No multibureaucratic interference. You see we hurt no one else but American industry. Absent this, whatever reforms are adopted for Export Administration will inevitably be undermined by bureaucratic uncertainty and interagency warfare. History says this is so.

The present law clearly spells out the basic authority of the Secretary of Commerce. It is, in brief, to administer the export control system—"in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, and such other departments and agencies as the Secretary considers appropriate." It is clear, precise, direct language. Beneath the surface however it is well known that Commerce's wings have been clipped though interference by other agencies. Of course there is a place for input from State and the Department of Defense. It should be specific and to the point where these agencies and others impact and can add to the process.

This means quite simply that it is time to streamline the export control decisionmaking. It is time to clarify the role of the Department of Defense and the Department of State. There must be a "point man"—a Quarterback Department. Others are there to advise and assist—not to make independent binding decisions on license or policy matters as they wish.

I would like to see the ambiguity of section 10(g) clearly defined which grants the Secretary of Defense the right to review exports to controlled countries. I suggest restricting DOD's review to licenses for end uses other than civil end uses to the Soviet Union and East European countries which do not qualify for favorable consideration by our export control standards and Cocom's.

We have witnessed Defense exercising a veto over any policy or licensing matter under the huge umbrella of national security. The result—disagreements between Commerce and Defense—too many of which have been bumped to the President for a resolution. A time consuming and often politically embarassing process.

What would happen if these changes were adopted? First we would see a streamlined process in keeping with our competitors. Commerce would have the final say. State and Defense would be there to advise and to recommend. This means they would not have statutory veto over Commerce decisions to add or delete items from the control list. DOD would retain authority to develop and maintain the list of militarily critical technologies. Commerce would use this to create the control list in consultation with other departments.

To take this argument a step further, DOD's review would primarily focus on determining and ranking strategic items. The chances that DOD would prolong the license review process would be reduced once the administration and Cocom have established an overall policy on how to handle exports to the Eastern bloc. DOD's resources would be focused on the most sensitive parts of East-West trade. The point here is to allow us to accelerate East-West license processing by focusing DOD's involvement on a smaller number of more critical cases. In practice it would eliminate the statutory DOD veto over East-West transactions, although we would expect that well researched and reasonable concerns would be taken account of.

Commerce would accept full responsibility for export control decisions, while consulting internally with Defense and State. There would be no statutory conflict among agencies.

I would also like to add that I would like to see the Commerce Department be the one point of entry for export licenses, whether they are munitions licenses or dual-use. This requires a clear definition of responsibility. Policy direction would continue to remain at State, but there would be one point of entry for all licenses so that decisions would be made within days of a license submission.The presumption is that a product is considered dual-use unless it has clear military value. Dispute mechanism among the agencies would be clarified and codified into the law. Also the control lists would be streamlined, indexed every 6 months and harmonized with Cocom's list.

So in conclusion—I feel that the time is now—not tomorrow to make it easier for American companies who provide our foreign exchange to compete effectively in the new world. I would like to feel that we can assure ourselves that the ground rules are fair. To do that we must become considerably more active in promoting our exports. One other thought, for too long we have let economic interests play second fiddle to geopolitics. That era—I believe—has passed. Let us amend the Export Administration Act to advance America's industrial opportunities beyond its own shores.

THE 35TH ANNIVERSARY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA PRESBYTERIAN HOMES

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize Southern California Prebyterian Homes on their 35th anniversary. Their efforts have helped to improve the standard of living for low-income and handicapped elderly persons throughout southern California.

Founded in 1955 as a nonprofit corporation by the former Presbytery of Los Angeles, Presbyterian Homes recognized the dire need for subsidized housing for these disadvantaged elderly persons. Through their organization they hoped to establish, maintain and operate homes for the reception and care of the individuals.

Since that time, Southern California Presbyterian Homes has developed 12 retirement communities, capable of providing three different levels of living; ranging from independent residence, through personal care, to specialized nursing. Four of these homes were recently honored for excellence by the Continuing Care Accreditation Commission, an independent agency sponsored by the American Association of Homes.

Committed to the belief that the later years of a person's life ought to be their most enjoyable, the organization strives to provide comfort and security that enhances their peace of mind. I applaud Southern California Presbyterian Homes for their contributions to our community, and encourage them to continue their positive role.

REV. JAMES M. DEMSKE, S.J., MAN OF THE YEAR

HON. BILL PAXON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. PAXON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to salute Rev. James M. Demske, S.J., as the Boys Towns of Italy "Man of the Year."

It is truly a personal pleasure for me to pay tribute to a man that I have known since I was a student at Canisius College in Buffalo, NY.

Father Demske has served as the president of Canisius College since 1966, nearly 25 years. He has overseen tremendous changes during his tenure at Canisius.

Many of them have been visible: Canisius has added eight buildings to its lovely campus on Main Street in Buffalo.

Some changes are of even more importance. Under Father Demske's stewardship, Canisius College has added new academic programs and strengthened existing curriculum in order to accommodate a growing student enrollment and keep up with an ever-changing world.

Father Demske has continued the tradition of excellence at Canisius College. His stewardship has extended well beyond Canisius as well.

In 1987, he oversaw the establishment of the Western New York Heritage Program, which draws on the resources of the college to help area teachers improve the instruction of the geography, history, and cultural heritage of our region.

Not only is Father Demske a native of Buffalo and a graduate of Canisius College, as I am, but he is also a graduate of St. Joseph's Collegiate Institute, also my alma mater.

As Father Demske approaches his 25th anniversary as President of Canisius College, Boys Town could have picked no better candidate as Man of the Year.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my warmest congratulations to Father Demske—a man of commitment, dedication, and excellence.

CYPRUS CONFLICT

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, too frequently the information which pervades the United States Congress regarding the Cyprus conflict suggests that: (1) no problems existed between the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot communities prior to 1974; and, (2) removal of Turkish troops from Cyprus will resolve the Cyprus problem.

Once again I rise to clarify the origin of this conflict, specifically the period of 1963–74. Without a thorough comprehension of the political events that took place during this time period, it is impossible to understand the security concerns of the Turkish Cypriot people. It is vital that Members of Congress clearly understand this multifaceted issue in order to effectively weigh both sides of the conflict.

In 1960, when Britain relinquished control of the island, a bicommunal government with shared leadership by Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot communities was created by treaty. This compromise recognized the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot peoples of the island as political equals, with shared responsibilities and authority.

The Treaty of Guarantee, signed by the Turkish Cypriots, Turkey, Britain, Greece, and the Greek Cypriots, clearly stated that any of its guarantors had the right to intervene should the sovereignty of the island be threatened.

Although Archbishop Makarios was one of the signers of the 1960 Constitution, as President of Cyprus he immediately began to carry out his plan for Enosis, Union with Greece. By December 1963, the Greek Cypriots had destroyed the bicommunal character of the Republic ousting Turkish Cypriot leaders from their elected positions and destroying over 100 Turkish Cypriot villages, territorially the equivalent of approximately 16 of our States.

For the next 11 years—1963–74—Turkish Cypriots, heavily outnumbered by the Greek Cypriots suffered great losses—human and material—in clashes initiated by Greek Cypriots and fully supported by the Greek Army. Approximately 1 out of 120 Turkish Cypriots, including women, children, and the elderly, was killed during this period even with U.N. peacekeeping troops present on the island.

Thousands of Turkish Cypriots were forced to flee from their homes to live in enclaves throughout the island and were, in effect, held hostage in their own land without the representation in government which was provided them in the 1960 constitution.

United States Secretary of State George Ball visited Cyprus in February 1964 and accused Archbishop Makarios of turning Cyprus into his "private Abattoir," and concluded that the Greek Cypriots "just wanted to be left alone to kill Turkish Cypriots."

Accordingly, Turkey was within its right as early as 1963 when the Cypriot Constitution was destroyed by the Greek Cypriots, to intervene on the island in order to prevent the annexation of Cyprus to Greece and to prevent the annihilation of the Turkish Cypriot population.

On March 21, 1979, the Greek Cypriot of Appeals in Athens declared that the Turkish military intervention in Cyprus was a legal intervention and carried out in accordance with the Zurich and London Accords.

Since 1974, Turkish Cypriots no longer fear for their lives. There are no more incidents of intercommunal violence on the island.

To his credit, President Rauf Denktas, who has been involved in the Cyprus conflict for over 35 years, has demonstrated his steadfast willingness throughout this period to negotiate a peace settlement with the various Greek Cypriot leaders—Makarios to Vassiliou.

His efforts focus on reaching an agreement ensuring the Turkish Cypriots of security and political equality so that intercommunal strife will never again plague the Island.

On two occasions, in 1985 and 1986, President Denktas, supported by the Turkish Cypriot population, accepted U.N. Secretary General Perez de Cuellar's draft compromise agreement. Greek Cypriots rejected these proposals.

Today, President Denktas is still willing to negotiate directly with the Greek Cypriots. However, President Denktas has not received assurances of security and political equality from the Greek Cypriots. Instead, he has been confronted time and time again with a simplistic solution to the Cyprus problem—the removal of all non-Cypriot troops—a solution which would again render the Turkish Cypriot population vulnerable.

Last year, at a sensitive period during the intercommunal negotiations, the Greek Cypriots launched a significant rearmament campaign, and this month, the Greek Cypriot Minister of Defense announced that 600 Greek Cypriot officers will augment the permanent Greek Cypriot armed forces in South Cyprus.

Mr. Speaker, the Turkish Cypriot people clearly remember what happened to them only a few years ago. Security of their population is foremost in their minds. An effective guarantee from Turkey was essential and still is essential for this small population.

Solutions for Cyprus which ignore the history between the Turkish Cypriots and Greek Cypriots and legislative measures imposing punitive action toward our great NATO ally, Turkey, are impractical and counterproductive to achieving a just and lasting solution to the Cyprus problem.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

HON. BRUCE A. MORRISON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, today, we mark in history the brutal massacre of over a million Armenian men, women, and children under Ottoman Turkish rule. We mark April 24, 1990, as a day of remembrance of the Armenian genocide so that we may never forget this painful episode in history which took place between 1915 and 1923.

On April 24, 1915, over 200 Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders were arrested in Constantinople and in Armenian centers throughout the Ottoman empire by its rulers. These pillars of the Armenian community were then either deported or murdered, leaving the Armenian people leaderless.

In May 1915, the deportation of all Armenians was ordered. The resulting death march, consisting mostly of women, children, and the elderly, wound its way across Asia Minor and Turkish Armenia into the Syrian desert. Countless gruesome atrocities were inflicted upon the defenseless Armenians, including rapes, drownings, and torture. The road was strewn with Armenian bodies. Able bodied Armenian men serving in the Ottoman empire's armed forces were segregated into labor battalions, disarmed, and either killed outright or worked to death.

Henry Morgenthau, the United States Ambassador to Turkey during 1913–16, had no question that the treatment of the Armenians was part of a calculated plan to exterminate them. In 1918, he wrote: "When the authorities gave the orders for these deportations, they were merely giving the death warrant to a whole race. They understood this well, and, in their conversations with me, they made no particular attempt to conceal the fact." Morgenthau, who tried desperately to stop the horrible slaughter, asserted that these events "surpass the most beastly and diabolical cruelties ever before perpetrated or imagined in the history of the world."

During the years between 1915 and 1923, 1½ million Armenians were systematically massacred, and another 500,000 deported by the Ottoman empire. Successive Turkish governments, in an attempt to rewrite history, have tried to cover up these events by denying their very occurrence. Where this has failed, they have warned of damage to Turkish-American relations should the United States persist in reminding the world of this terrible tragedy.

When Hitler embarked on his final solution, he claimed that people's memories are short, that no one remembers the Armenian genocide. We must prove him wrong. We have a responsibility to remember such events as examples of the cruelty that humans are capable of inflicting on each other.

Mr. Speaker, today we remember the genocide of Armenians to ensure that such cruelty never recurs.

RECOGNIZING DR. T. EDWARD HOLLANDER

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to congratulate Dr. T. Edward Hollander on being the recipient of this year's New Jersey Pride Award for Education. Dr. Hollander, the chancellor of the New Jersey Department of Higher Education, has made important contributions to our State.

The New Jersey Pride Award honors those individuals who have made significant contributions to their field and to the State of New Jersey. His vision guided the Governor's excellence initiatives program for New Jersey's colleges and universities. He has been a preeminent leader in designing programs to keep New Jersey competitive in the world market by addressing rapidly changing technologies and sciences. At the same time, he has been a powerful force stimulating statewide interest in and concentration on the arts and humanities.

On this occasion of his award, I extend my congratulations to Dr. Hollander and wish him continued success and best wishes for the future.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. Y.C. JAMES YEN

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sadness that I rise today to bring to my colleagues' attention the death of one of my constituents, Dr. Y.C. James Yen, at the age of 96. Dr. Yen pioneered the cause of improving the quality of life for impoverished rural people around the world, and his tireless efforts to combat illiteracy, poverty, and hunger in Third World nations will provide an example for generations to come.

Dr. Yen was born in China in 1893. After he completed a classical Chinese education in his native Province of Sichuan, he was sent to Yale University, where he graduated in 1918. His lifelong philanthropic career began immediately following graduation, when he volunteered to help supervise 20,000 Chinese laborers sent to France to build roads for the Allies during World War I. Dr. Yen taught many of these workers how to read and write through a simple system of characters taken from the workers' everyday speech.

From this modest beginning, Dr. Yen slowly developed a system of education that has and will continue to help a wide range of poor and underprivileged people around the world. The basic tenet of his philosophy is the importance of self-reliance. Dr. Yen developed innovative methods to bolster self-confidence and to teach impoverished people about modern technologies in agriculture, public health, and family planning, and he trained indigenous leaders who were then able to take this new knowledge back to their own communities.

Dr. Yen realized that the spirit of self-reliance and the need to build the confidence of poor people throughout the world is a far greater task than merely supplying clothing and food. As he once said, the primary objective is "not the invention of processes or equipment, but rather the finding of a solution to the problem of making improved techniques available to the people through organization and training."

Mr. Speaker, the determination and will of one man really can make a difference in the world, and Dr. Y.C. James Yen made a lasting impression on the lives of millions. I would like to extend my sympathy to Dr. Yen's entire family, both his immediate relatives and the millions of people he considered his extended family. The passing of Dr. Yen is a great loss; but he has left us with a very important and positive legacy.

ALWAYS FAITHFUL

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to a Pennsylvanian whose service to his State and country has been unwavering.

Frederick W. Wagner is department commander of the Pennsylvania American Legion. But his career started long ago. He joined the U.S. Marine Corps at the age of 17 and remained a marine until he retired in 1961. He served in the Pacific, the Far East, Middle East, and in the Caribbean. He also served with the 6th Fleet in Europe, as well as at a number of stations in the continental United States.

After his retirement from the Marine Corps, Frederick worked at the Olmstead Air Force Base and subsequently, for the U.S. Postal Service.

In 1945, while still on active duty, he joined the St. Clair Legion Post 694, Pittsburgh. He also was a member of several legion posts where he was stationed, and has been a member of Hummelstown Post 265 since his military retirement. He served on many committees at post, county, district, and department levels, a number of times as chairman. He served four terms as post commander, and a term as Dauphin County commander. After serving 5 years as a district deputy commander, he was elected to serve as 19th district commander. He served as department vice commander and was elected department commander at the 71st Department Convention. He served as vice chairman of several department committees and served two terms as department Americanism chairman. In addition, he has been a member of several national committees.

Mr. Speaker, the Marine Corps code is "Semper Fidelis—Always Faithful." Those words summarize the dedication of Frederick Wagner.

BAN THE STEEL-JAW LEGHOLD TRAP

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, in 1985 I joined with colleagues in introducing H.R. 1809, to end the use of the cruel and inhumane steel-jaw leghold trap. This bill was introduced in response to hearings held on August 3, 1984, before the Health and Environment Subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Today, with 22 of my colleagues, I once again am introducing a bill to end the use of the steel-jaw leg-hold trap, by restricting interstate and international sales of the trap. The bill also would restrict commerce in furs from animals trapped by this excruciatingly painful device.

This bill is long overdue. The steel-jaw leghold trap continues after three decades to inflict unnecessary pain and injury on targeted and nontargeted animals.

And there are less cruel but effective ways to catch animals. Cage and box traps, and cable coated legsnares provide viable alternatives to this trap and cause far less pain to the animal. Furthermore, animals trapped mistakenly by these alternatives can be released with little or no injury. These traps also can be used by our Park Service to relocate animals such as the lynx, which is now being reintroduced in my own State of New York. The Bionic and Gabry spring-powered killing traps, by killing instantly avoid the terrible suffering caused by the steel-jaw trap.

By contrast, steel-jaw leghold traps often result in so much pain to the animal that it gnaws its own leg off to escape. Animals have been known to suffer a prolonged and painful death, by freezing and/or starving in the few days time that it takes for the trapper to return and check his traps. The trap does not discriminate in its carnage. Hawks, owls, bald eagles, swans, deer, dogs, and cats all are attracted to the lures and scents used in these traps and have been severely maimed or killed. In fact, many fox hunters are allied with me on this issue because they lose their valuable hunting dogs to the steel-jaw trap.

I am reintroducing this bill now, because there has been a watershed change in the major market for U.S.-produced furs and fur products, the European Community. The European Commission last year recommended a ban on furs from countries that have not banned the steel-jaw trap, and, the Environment Committee of the European Parliament now is considering a vote on this regulation. The U.S. fur industry, in an average production year, has a $200 million market in Europe. We risk serious erosion of this market unless we put an immediate end to the use of these traps, which already have been banned by 66 countries.

Mr. Speaker, we need to take strong, preemptive action now to remove this threat to our exports. Banning the steel-jaw leghold trap not only is the compassionate and humane thing to do, but also is the correct thing to do on economic grounds. U.S. action now would remove the looming threat of the U.S. fur industry.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that my colleagues will join me in helping to move this legislation through Congress. It is high time that we end this cruel and unnecessary threat to our wildlife, our beloved pets, and our economy.

IN TRIBUTE TO AN OUTSTANDING AFRICAN-AMERICAN BUSINESSMAN

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Bert Mitchell, a New York City-based accountant who is the cofounder and managing partner of Mitchell/Titus & Co. This January, Mitchell/Titus merged with the Philadelphia-based Leevy, Redcross & Co. accounting firm, which is that city's largest minority-owned accounting firm. As a result, the firm, which is still called Mitchell/Titus & Co. is now the largest minority-owned accounting firm in the country and one of the Nation's top 50 accounting firms, with Bert Mitchell serving as its managing partner and chief executive officer.

As an entrepreneur and an accountant, Mitchell is a positive role model for African-Americans in New York as well as nationally, particularly for young African-American males who aspire to attain a higher education and an eventual career in accounting. Mitchell came to this country from Jamaica when he was 20 years old and penniless. He was the first person in his family to go to high school, work his way through college and complete graduate school. He made his way from a background full of hardship and poverty to not only become a prominent minority businessman but an ardent spokesperson and advocate for bringing more minorities into the accounting field, a profession which generally has not been very open to African-Americans and other peoples of color.

Two years ago, he became the first African-American president of the New York State Society of Certified Public Accountants. After he assumed office, a plan which he had lobbied for was passed by a professional organization. The plan to restructure professional standards, outlined by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, specifies measures for improving professional conduct and extending professional education.

As part of his effort to encourage and recruit more minorities for the accounting field, he conducted a landmark study in 1968, which revealed that there were fewer than 150 African-American CPA's practicing in the United States. Since the study, he has traveled the Nation encouraging minority students to enter into the profession. In his capacity as president of the New York State Society of Certified Public Accountants, he has created an advisory task force to study the condition of African-Americans in the field. As of 1988, when he became the organization's president, there were still less than 1 percent, or close to 3,000 minorities, in accounting in this country.

Since becoming the chief executive officer and managing partner of the new Mitchell-Titus and Co., Mitchell employs more than 200 people in his New York and Washington, DC offices, and his new Philadelphia office. His 1990 revenues should top $10 million, twice the size of his mid-1980's revenues of $5 million. In the wake of the merger, Mitchell plans to focus on broadening his firm's portfolio. Leevy, Redcross' concentration is in the commercial business sector, emphasizing tax planning and business consulting services. The old Mitchell/Titus firm had solid experience with government and nonprofit organizations and with auditing major pension plans. A profile of Mitchell in the April 1990 Black Enterprise magazine says Mitchell wants to develop a strong regional firm in the Northeast, particularly in the Washington, DC-Boston corridor. The merged firms' clients will include the NAACP and the employees' pension funds of Pepsico Inc., Time Warner Inc., Bristol-Myers Co., the State of New York, and the District of Columbia.

In New York, Mitchell has long been recognized as an outstanding businessman/entrepreneur. In 1988, then New York City Mayor Edward Koch awarded Mitchell the Black History Month Business Award.

I congratulate Bert Mitchell, not only for the expansion of his accounting firm, but for consciously, and conscientiously, paving the way for other African-Americans attempting to become a part of the accounting profession, and for beating incredible odds to achieve his career goals. I, along with other New Yorkers, am immensely proud of Bert Mitchell, and I wish him continued success.

A TRIBUTE TO SUZANNE RANSLEBEN, JANET BERRIDGE, AND THE STUDENTS OF KAFFIE MIDDLE SCHOOL, AND TO GLENDA KANE AND TO SAM AND ARANKA KANE IN RECOGNITION OF THEIR EFFORTS TO PROMOTE INCREASED AWARENESS OF THE HOLOCAUST

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to recognize and honor the people associated with a very special project by the ninth-grade class of the Kaffie Middle School located in Corpus Christi, TX. With the dedicated help of their teachers, Ms. Suzanne Ransleben and Ms. Janet Berridge, the 58 students have produced a stirring video documentary entitled "Eyewitness to the Holocaust."

The documentary came about because of Ms. Berridge's and Ms. Ransleben's efforts to increase awareness of the Holocaust by the students. The video is a compilation of interviews with 20 Holocaust survivors and liberators. Since its conception last September, the students have selflessly contributed hundreds of hours during their weekends and vacations producing this tribute.

The video should serve not only as a memorial to the events of the past, but should also help us to recognize their relevance today. The students' production reminds us of the horror and tragedy brought on by bigotry and racism. These types of prejudicial attitudes and racial aggressions continue to infect our world, and we must actively work to eliminate them. The students themselves, spurred on by their increased awareness of these issues, have started a community group to combat bigotry and racism. They are helping to teach classes to younger students reading works relevant to the Holocaust, and have been guest lecturers at the National Council of Christians and Jews youth group.

On April 25, the students will be coming to Washington, DC, to present their documentary to the National Holocaust Museum. I am sure that the museum is as proud of their effort as I am. In regard to their trip, I would also like to pay recognition to Sam and Aranka Kane, and their daughter-in-law, Glenda Kane, for the efforts and contributions they made which allowed this trip to happen. Glenda Kane started a fundraising project at the school to pay for the students' trip and her many hours of dedicated work are to be recognized and praised. Sam and Aranka Kane, themselves survivors of the Holocaust, have selflessly contributed over $30,000 to cover the expenses of the trip.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the names of the students: Clark Adams, Kara Anderson, Albert Balderas, Michelle Barker, Melanie Bartel, Chanda Buncick, Christi Carson, Cecilie Acrter, Amy Coffeen, Jennifer Crider, Kelly Davis, Anne Dreskin, Melanie Durst, Martha Epperson, Tammy Estes, Danielle Falcon, Shannon Ferguson, Paul Frost, Lisa Fulton, Melissa Generaux, Chris Gohlke, David Gomez, Geoff Griffin, Gaynette Groom, Jenifer Guerra, Raul Guerrero, Emily Haas, Michelle Hayes, Dan Klippert, Carl Krogness, Richard Maldonado, Chris Miner, Laurie Mokry, Rita Morales, Cynthia Moreno, Melanie Murray, Cynthia Neira, Erin Orr, Jim Palmer, Nick Patel, Joseph Patrick, Mike Perugini, Angela Prado, Jennifer Sanchez, Richardo Sanchez, Monica Sanderson, Mark Stolp, Shannon Thiltgen, Nikki Verma, Erin Vetters, Cecily Walker, Brandon Wall, Blaine Weaver, Alicia Wilton, Claudia Wong, and Angie Zaragosa.

I wish to honor all those involved—the students, their teachers, and the Kanes—for their hard work and dedication, and for their invaluable contribution to our society's awareness of the horrors of the Holocaust.

TRIBUTE TO DR. ROBERT E. DUNN

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding Connecticut educator, Dr. Robert E. Dunn of West Hartford, who is retiring this June. During his 38-year tenure, Dr. Dunn distinguished himself as a instructor, department chairman, guidance counselor, vice principal, and principal of the William H. Hall High School in West Hartford, CT, a position he held for the past 28 years.

Throughout his tenure, Dr. Dunn strived to attain excellence in education by advancing an administrative philosophy that professed direct involvement in curriculum development, professional standards for faculty, community awareness and participation, and an ability to adapt to societal change. This formula has spawned a wealth of personal and professonal achievements.

Dr. Dunn was named Connecticut's "Principal of The Year" in 1989; chaired the National Student Council's Advisory Committee; and was the only high school principal to serve on a national commission reviewing the training of education administrators, which was chaired by former U.S. Education Secretary Terrel H. Bell. And in 1985, the William H. Hall High School was recognized nationally by the U.S. Department of Education as one of the exemplary secondary schools in the country.

As the steward of the Hall High community for three decades, Bob Dunn reached and molded the lives of thousands of young people. He is indeed the epitome of the dedicated educator whose legacy in Connecticut education is unparalleled.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to recognize the outstanding record of Dr. Robert E. Dunn, and ask that my colleagues join me in heralding his distinguished career.

IN MEMORY OF JOHN HENRY FAULK

HON. J.J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I pay tribute and respect today to Texas humorist and civil libertarian, John Henry Faulk, who died April 9 after a long fight against cancer.

Called the best American storyteller since Mark Twain, Faulk hosted his own national radio show on CBS during the early 1950's. But his promising career was abruptly interrupted after Faulk's name appeared in an anti-Communist pamphlet that had been circulated within the industry. At the height of the red scare, with his show canceled, the blacklisted entertainer decided to fight back.

In a landmark trial that finally came to court in 1962, Faulk sued AWARE, Inc. for libel, and was awarded an unprecedented $3.5 million settlement. He collected only a fraction of the settlement, but gained the respect and admiration of many across the country. His victory was one in which all could share: a legal decision that ended the repression of free speech.

The Constitution became a common theme in Faulk's public and private life. His ordeal of being blacklisted brought Faulk a deep appreciation for the many rights granted by the Founding Fathers. He often gave lectures on the first amendment. And at Fourth of July celebrations with his friends and family, it was not uncommon for Faulk to recite the Preamble to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

Faulk carried out the tradition of Texas storytelling through lectures and appearances on television shows. More recently he wrote and starred in one-man plays that featured vintage-Faulk assortments of Texas characters.

Throughout his life Faulk served as a catalyst among groups of opposite opinions, maintaining that all people, regardless of race, religion, or creed, are interconnected. For his heroic stance against those who blacklisted him during the notorious McCarthy era, Faulk has a place in history.

Mr. Speaker, on a more personal basis, John Henry Faulk—and his family—have been close personal friends of mine. I literally grew up with John Henry throughout our University of Texas days and the years that followed. His was always a strong voice for fairness, progress, civil rights, and equal opportunity. He was an outspoken fighter for human rights and human dignity. Though he was often depicted as a humorist or a clown, in calmer moments he was a fierce advocate for the rights of the individual—and he spoke out strongly and clearly. He was a Democrat and he wore that label with pride and conviction because he came from a family with generations of supporters who believe in human dignity.

John Henry Faulk was a champion and spokesman for the underprivileged and overlooked. His encouragement and challenges will last for generations to come.

TRIBUTE TO THE MEXICAN-AMERICAN COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to MACE, the Mexican-American Committee on Education, of San Benito County, on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of the founding of the organization.

MACE was founded by Mr. Al Gutierrez, who saw the need for an organization to encourage and financially support students aspiring to higher education. Mr. Gutierrez sought other members of the community who also recognized these needs and shared his concerns, and the first MACE committee was formed in 1970.

After two years, MACE had garnered enough public support and contributions to award their first scholarship to a deserving graduating high school senior, Sergio Martinez, now a math teacher at Rancho San Justo School. This was the first of what would be 243 scholarships and $103,500 awarded to students of San Benito County in need of financial aid to continue their education.

The MACE committee has grown and developed networks with several other scholarship organizations. It now consists of 17 planning committees and is funded by three corporations, in addition to local companies and individual community supporters.

The Mexican-American Committee on Education has supported and encouraged academic success for Mexican-American students while promoting and recognizing accomplishments of all students. MACE has taken a leadership role in involving the entire community in the education of the young.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me now in congratulating the Mexican-American Committee on Education for its continued contributions to the people, and especially the youth, of San Benito County and the surrounding area. It is with great pride and respect that I pay tribute to all those involved in this fine institution.

VICTIMS AND SURVIVORS OF ARMENIAN GENOCIDE HONORED

HON. THOMAS J. BLILEY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, the last 2 years have brought much suffering to the Armenian people. The desecration and burning of St. Gregory the Illuminator Armenian Church in Baku. A series of organized pogroms and violent attacks on unarmed and peaceful Armenian inhabitants. 300,000 Armenian refugees driven by violence from their homes. Armenians ask: "How could this all be happening again?". Those who ignore history are condemned to repeat it.

In the shadow of World War I, the Ottoman Turk Government embarked on a plan to systematically eliminate the Armenian people from their ancestral homeland.

The Armenian men who had answered the call to join their country's armed forces were isolated and shot. On orders from the central government, Turkish soldiers rampaged from town to town, brutalizing and butchering the remaining Armenian population. Women and children were then forced on a death-march into the Syrian desert. By the end of the war, the Ottoman Turks had been successful in exterminating 2 out of every 3 Armenians. A million and a half Armenians had perished at the hands of the Ottoman Turks.

Henry Morgenthau, Sr., then U.S. Ambassador to Turkey, wrote: "I am confident that the whole history of the human race contains no such horrible episode as this. The great massacres and persecutions of the past seem almost insignificant when compared to the sufferings of the Armenian race in 1915."

Only 20 years later, Adolph Hitler asked rhetorically, "Who remembers the Armenians?" as he began his master plan to annihilate the Jews. Those who fail to remember history are condemned to repeat it.

I have had the privilege of serving in Congress for the past 10 years and each year I have risen on the floor of the House to urge my colleagues to recognize the atrocities suffered by the Armenians at the hands of the Ottoman Turks. Each year, those efforts have failed. I ask my colleagues, "How many more Bakus; how many more Sumgaits must we witness before we tell the truth?"

The years cannot mute the voice of those Armenian survivors whose individual accounts of savagery combine to form a bedrock of irrefutable evidence. Despite the attempts to hide the records and to distort the facts; despite the world's preoccupation with politics and strategy, the truth of the Armenian Genocide remains.

We commemorate April 24 as the National Day of Remembrance of the Armenian Genocide of 1915–23, and pledge that their deaths were not in vain, that their suffering will not be forgotten. We must use the truth of the Armenian Genocide to help prevent such a tragic event from ever occurring again.

But we also use this day to rejoice in the continued survival of the Armenian people, for while the Turks crushed the fruit, the seed remained. I am reminded of a passage that William Saroyan wrote:

I should like to see any power in this world destroy this race, this small tribe of unimportant people whose history had ended, whose wars have been fought and lost, whose structures have crumbled, whose literature is unread, and whose prayers are no more answered. Go ahead, destroy this race! Destroy Armenia! See if you can do it. Send them from their homes into the desert. Let them have neither bread nor water. Burn their homes and churches. Then, see if they will not laugh again, see if they will not sing and pray again. For, when two of them meet anywhere in the world, see if they will not create a New Armenia.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me the opportunity to honor both the victims and the survivors of the Armenian Genocide.

THE BAHAMAS AND THE WAR ON DRUGS

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to comment on the important efforts of the Bahamas over the past year in working with the United States to fight international drug trafficking. These efforts have made a very real difference, and are a hopeful development in a time of frustration on many fronts.

The Bahamas is, in many ways, a victim of geography. It lies directly between the major drug producing countries of South America and the major consumer of drugs—the United States. Police efforts to stop trafficking are made more difficult by the fact that this country of barely 250,000 people is spread across 700 islands and 100,000 square miles of waterways.

Despite these natural advantages for drug smugglers, The Bahamas is succeeding in cutting off this important route to the United States. United States officials believe that the cooperative efforts of the Bahamas are forcing drug smugglers to rely increasingly on more difficult routes—overland and via tbe Pacific. The numbers tell the story: cocaine seizures for 1989 are down 42 percent and marijuana seizures are down 95 percent. This is occurring at a time when other routes are showing increasing traffic.

Bahamian programs have been a model for other countries. Operation BAT, for example, has demonstrated the effectiveness of airborne radar balloons in intercepting drug-smuggling planes. The Bahamas' new anti-money-laundering laws are striking at the lifeblood of the drug lords—their profits.

All of this does not mean there is not a great deal left to be accomplished. Like any country that guarantees due process, the Bahamas is continuing its struggle against criminals who use technicalities in the law to escape justice. The enormous sums of money generated by the drug trade means the Bahamas must continue to guard against its corrupting effects.

Even on these difficult fronts, though, there are steady signs of progress. The Bahamas has closed loopholes in the law, actively prosecuted drug offenders, and made penalties tougher. Of the 1,277 arrested and charged in 1988, for example, 586 have been convicted and 495 await trial, as of 30 June, 1989.

Two new treaties with the United States also will help our joint efforts to fight drug trafficking. In the last 6 months, the United States and the Bahamas have entered a new Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty and a new Extradition Treaty. Both agreements will help cooperative efforts to prosecute drug crimes.

The efforts of the Bahamas led the President to certify on March 1 that it has "cooperated fully" in the fight against drugs. The recent testimony of operations-level United States officials from the DEA and Customs confirms that the Bahamas' cooperation is excellent.

In sum, we in Congress are realizing increasingly that international cooperation is the linchpin to winning the war on drugs. Much remains to be done in all countries. But the Bahamas should be commended for doing its part.

TRIBUTE TO HAROLD P. FURTH, RETIRING DIRECTOR OF PRINCETON PLASMA PHYSICS LABORATORY

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest admiration that I rise today to pay tribute to a truly outstanding scientist, teacher, and administrator whose efforts have led our Nation to the leading edge of our efforts to harness magnetic fusion as a source of energy.

I am speaking of Dr. Harold P. Furth, who is retiring at the end of 1990, after a decade of distinguished service as the director of the Princeton University Plasma Physics Laboratory. Mr. Speaker, I know that Dr. Furth will be truly missed, for he has earned a reputation worldwide as a leader in the field of magnetic fusion, and has been a guiding force that has made our Nation a leader in this critical emerging field.

I believe that Princeton University President Harold T. Shapiro put Dr. Furth's efforts in true perspective recently when he said,

It is with great regret that I accept Dr. Furth's decision not to entertain the possibility of another term. He has served us with distinction. The laboratory, indeed the U.S. magnetic fusion energy effort, has made spectacular strides under Dr. Furth's dynamic leadership * * * the dream of harnessing on Earth the process of burning plasmas as a "clean," environmentally safe and practically inexhaustible source of energy * * * seems clearly within our grasp.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Furth possesses a most distinguished background that has seen him scale both the academic and scientific ladder. He received his A.B. and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard in 1951 and 1960, respectively. From 1956 until 1967, he worked on controlled fusion research at the Lawrence Radiation Laboratory in Livermore, CA, becoming head of the toroidal confinement group.

Dr. Furth came to Princeton in 1967, as professor of astrophysical sciences. From 1967 until 1978, he served as cohead of the experimental division of the Princeton Plasma Physics Laboratory, eventually earning an appointment as associate director and head of the research department. Dr. Furth became program director in 1980, and director of the laboratory a year later.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Harold P. Furth's tireless and dedicated efforts have earned him numerous honors. He received the E.O. Lawrence Memorial Award from the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission in 1974, the James Klerk Maxwell Prize in Plasma Physics from the American Physical Society in 1983 and the Joseph Priestley Award from Dickinson College in 1985. He was elected to the National Academy of Sciences in 1976, and he is a fellow of the American Physical Society, the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

In addition to his numerous honors and achievements, Dr. Furth has served his country through his efforts on behalf of numerous Government agencies. He has been a member of the U.S. Department of Energy's Magnetic Fusion Advisory Committee and the Fusion Advisory of the House Subcommittee on Energy Research and Production. Further, he has served on numerous committees and panels for the Department of Energy, NASA, the Department of Defense, and the National Academy of Sciences, among others.

Dr. Furth, who has published more than 130 technical papers and holds 20 patents in the areas of controlled fusion technology, has also been a member of the laboratory advisory committees of the Plasma Fusion Center at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the Max Planck Institut für Plasmaphysik in Garching, West Germany. In addition, because of his global reputation in the field of fusion technology, Dr. Furth has been invited to speak often at national and international meetings and symposia, as well as at research laboratories, universities, and community associations.

Mr. Speaker, Princeton University and the State of New Jersey have been fortunate, indeed, to be home to a man of Dr. Harold P. Furth's worldwide renown, innovation, and expertise. We marvel at all that he has accomplished, and we know that our Nation is on the cutting edge of this critical energy technology—fusion—because of his dedicated efforts.

It is with great pride, then, Mr. Speaker, that I invite you and our colleagues to join me in paying tribute to a truly outstanding scientist, teacher, and administrator, Dr. Harold P. Furth, retiring director of the Princeton University Plasma Physics Laboratory.

FUNDS FOR SETTLING OF SOVIET JEWS IN ISRAEL

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, on April 3, 1990, I voted for the supplemental appropriation, which provided $4 million in loans to Israel for housing newly arriving immigrants, almost all of them Soviet Jews.

I have long been active in the effort to secure the right to emmigrate for Soviet Jews. I am personally very pleased to have played a role in the release of several families, which have members in my district. I believe we all have a moral obligation to provide them all the assistance we can.

At the time I firmly believe that it would be unacceptable for the emigres to settle in disputed territories as a means of prejudicing future negotiations.

I had voted for the loan for housing with the assurance that none of the funds would be used in the settlement in the disputed territories.

I am therefore very concerned to learn that elements of the Israeli Government have surreptitiously funded a takeover of a church property in the Christian quarter of Jerusalem.

It is imperative that Soviet Jews be allowed to leave the Soviet Union, if they choose to do so. It follows that they must be allowed to emmigrate to wherever they choose, including the United States or Israel.

The status of the disputed territories in Jerusalem, the West Bank and Gaza will be decided by negotiation. Those negotiations and the establishment of peace are important to the entire world. This vital process must not be hampered or derailed by efforts to establish sovereignty or rights before the negotiation.

It is imperative that the Israeli Government assure the United States Government that none of the moneys from the loan will assist or fund settlements in the disputed territories.

WIN BETTINSON AND HERB FONTAINE, SIGN-OFF FROM WJDA RADIO IN QUINCY

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, the city of Quincy, MA has lost two of its finest community servants: Win Bettinson and Herb Fontaine, who retired after a combined 72 years of informing the Quincy citizens through radio station WJDA.

Both Win and Herb, have been masters of the airwaves—38 and 35 years, respectively—reporting the news of the area, calling the shots on talk shows, and providing necessary and important information to the public during emergency situations.

During the great blizzard of 1978, which socked in the entire New England area with snowfalls over 3 feet, the only way to communicate during the crisis was through the air waves. Win and Herb stayed on the air for the 2-day stretch. Their performances were stellar. Through WJDA, they were the only means of communication between local officials and the public.

Over the years, their continued coverage of local news and sports made WJDA the giant among South Shore radio stations despite the expanding signals from the much larger Boston stations. Because of the local tilt, you would be hard pressed to find anyone in the area that did not depend on WJDA for weather forecasts, traffic reports, and local news updates.

Because of their immense knowledge of the area and dedication of time to the local issues, Mr. Speaker, their voices will be sorely missed and difficult to replace.

MEN OF MARIAN CELEBRATE 25TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to the Men of Marian on the occasion of the culmination of their 25th anniversary celebrations. On April 29, 1990 the Men of Marian will close a year of festivities at a Men of Marian family communion breakfast. I would like to take a moment to recognize this truly exceptional organization which has contributed enormously to Marian Catholic High School of Tamaqua, PA.

The Men of Marian have much to celebrate. During the past 25 years, this organization has steadfastly stood by Marian Catholic High School. Since 1964, the Men of Marian have selflessly dedicated themselves to strengthening the academic and cocurricular well-being of the institution. This civic-minded club has been able to raise over $1.5 million for the school. These moneys have enabled Marian Catholic High School to meet its transportation needs, improve its facilities, and increase the percentage of graduates who attend institutions of higher education. The Men of Marian have contributed countless hours of volunteer work toward building the financial and human support needed to further enrich the educational experience of Marian students, reflecting the organization's concern for the future of our children.

Mr. Speaker, the education of our children should be one of our most important priorities. Clearly, the Men of Marian have demonstrated their commitment to this very significant cause. It is an honor and a privilege to recognize the Men of Marian, and to say congratulations and thank you for their 25 years of outstanding service.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM J. CORBETT

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a constituent and longtime personal friend, William J. Corbett, who was recently installed as the president of the International Public Relations Association [IPRA].

IPRA is a well-established group of public relations professionals from over 70 countries. The organization is dedicated to improving communication and understanding among all members of the international community. The ongoing consolidation of the European Community, rapid changes in Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union, and in other regions of the world demand the highest standards of professionalism in the field of public relations.

As new governments endure the growing pains of infant democracies, their efforts to convert to market economies and to reap the benefits of international trade will depend on successful public relations. IPRA is rising to this challenge by reaching out to government and business leaders in Eastern Europe and sharing the vast expertise of their membership. The organization is also educating its members on E.C. '92, and the opportunities in the integrated European marketplace. In another area of great concern, IPRA has actively supported an international antidrug campaign in conjunction with the United Nations.

Beyond these significant issues, IPRA also enforces a code of ethics and promotes quality education and standards in the field of public relations.

Under Bill Corbett's leadership, I am confident that these IPRA initiatives will contribute to greater understanding and comity among nations in this period of great change and challenge. Bill is a dynamic person with a tremendous résumé of professional accomplishments and civic activities. He is presently vice president of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants and he serves as a village justice in Floral Park, NY.

I know that every Member of this body joins me in congratulating Bill and wishing him great success in his tenure as IPRA president.

AMERICA IS ABOUT MEN LIKE JOHN S. WOLFE

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, let me give you an idea of what I think America is all about.

America is about men like John S. Wolfe of Stottville, NY.

One day John Wolfe and a few friends decided there was a need for a fire company. The result was the Hargraves Volunteer Fire Company.

That was 65 years ago. But if there's a fire in Stottsville, you can still be sure John Wolfe will be there.

Those of you who represent somewhat rural districts don't need to be told how important volunteer fire companies are. In New York State alone, they are the only fire protection many people have, and they save countless lives and millions of dollars worth of property every year. Many of you supported me when I authored legislation to exempt volunteer fire companies from operator license requirements that would have threatened their existence.

And those of you who have been to my office know that the most prominent feature is my collection of fire hats, as much a reminder that I was a volunteer fireman myself for 20 years, as a mark of my respect for the brave men and women who give so much to their communities. And few have given as much as John Wolfe. He is 86 years young, but still serves as a fire police officer. He has been a line and executive officer, and for many years was a fire commissioner. Most of the people he serves weren't even born when John Wolfe began his career.

There will be a dinner in his honor on May 5. Mr. Speaker, let us all rise to honor John S. Wolfe today, and let him know that he has made a difference.

RICHMOND CELEBRATES PORT DAY '90

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in celebrating Port Day '90 in honor of the Port of Richmond, CA.

Like much of the San Francisco Bay Area, the Port of Richmond had its birth at the height of the Gold Rush. Built by George Ellis, a miner who found it easier and possibly more lucrative to ferry people and produce between Richmond and San Francisco than to work in the gold fields, Ellis Landing was founded in 1860 at the foot of what is today Harbour Way South.

Almost as important as the Gold Rush in the development of the bay area was the arrival of the transcontinental railroads, and again, Richmond was no exception. The completion of the Santa Fe Railroad in 1900, with its western terminus just a stone's throw from Richmond's growing port, bolstered the port's standing as a prominent link in the San Francisco Bay transportation network.

Not to be limited by its previous commercial successes, the port illustrated its versatility and importance during the years of World War II as the location of the Kaiser shipyards. The 90,000 Richmond shipyard workers epitomized civilian war efforts by providing 747 naval vessels to United States and allied forces. This contribution helped to ensure the allied victory in both the Eurpean and Pacific theaters.

With its rich history, the Port of Richmond has much to celebrate, and we in the U.S. Congress share in the commemoration of this proud maritime heritage.

H.R. 3961

HON. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, today, I ask my colleagues to join Congressman ERDREICH, myself, and many of our colleagues in honoring Judge Vance, by supporting H.R. 3961. H.R. 3961 redesignates the Federal building in Birmingham, AL, the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building."

On December 16, 1989, the life of Judge Robert S. Vance was abruptly cut short by a bomb mailed to his home in Birmingham, AL. This brutal act marked the end to Judge Vance's dedicated service to the State of Alabama and to the United States.

Judge Vance's life of service began with active duty as a judge advocate during the Korean war. At the end of the conflict, he returned to Alabama to pursue a legal career. Acknowledged by both his friends and adversaries as a brilliant lawyer, he held the chairmanship of the State Democratic Executive Committee from 1966 through 1977.

In 1977, President Carter appointed him to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. In 1981 he became a member of the 11th circuit where he continued to serve until last December. Judge Vance will be warmly remembered as a skilled public servant, an impartial judge, and a compassionate man. Remaning the Federal Building in Birmingham the "Robert S. Vance Federal Building" is an appropriate way for us to honor his memory.

NEED TO REDUCE SERVICE OBLIGATION OF SERVICE ACADEMY GRADUATES

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to introduce legislation to restore the 5-year service obligation for graduates of our service academies and the 7-year service obligation for graduates of the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences.

During the final days of the first session of the 101st Congress, a provision was added to fiscal year 1990 Defense Authorization Act that would raise the active duty obligation of service academy graduates from 5 to 6 years, starting with the class entering 1992.

This provision was signed into law without deliberation in the House of Representatives at any level, neither in the Committee on Armed Services nor on the floor of this body. Furthermore, the proposal to increase the service obligation was not endorsed by any of the academies and was actively opposed by the Department of Defense. It seems, as if often the case with misguided legislation, that this provision was only added last minute as a means of keeping a larger, more important bill from being gridlocked.

I believe the increase in the active duty obligation will have a negative impact on the service academies' ability to recruit outstanding young men and women. At a time when we are making a substantial commitment to increase the number of women and minorities in our officer ranks, I believe the increased service obligation will actively undermine those efforts.

Minorities currently compose a little over 21 percent of enlisted personnel and only 7 percent of the officers. Highly qualified minorities are widely recruited by all colleges and universities. The 6-year active duty commitment would put the academies at a severe disadvantage. Interviews with black and Hispanic candidates who were accepted by the academies, but decided not to attend, revealed that the active-duty obligation was a major factor in their decision.

Furthermore, the view that the Government has to increase the length of the obligation of its academy graduates in order to "get its money's worth" overlooks the needs of the junior officer corps. Owing to the pyramidal structure of the military officer corps, the services need only to retain 55 percent of service academy graduates beyond the 5-year point, a percentage which the academies already meet. Increasing obligatory service risks reducing the quality and morale of our officers by forcing the armed services to recruit people who they do not feel are qualified.

I hope my colleagues will carefully review this legislation and I would welcome your support.

HUGO BARTH CITIZEN OF THE YEAR

HON. MATTHEW J. RINALDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join with me in recognizing the contributions of an outstanding citizen, Hugo Barth, who is receiving the Union Hospital Foundation's 1990 Citizen of the Year Award.

This honor is well deserved. Hugo Barth has been a dedicated member of the community of Union, NJ, for more than two decades. Virtually every charity, civic association, recreation program, and institution that serves the public and the needy have benefited from Hugo Barth's generosity and involvement.

As James J. Masterson, Foundation president, has remarked:

His devotion to the community for 22 years demonstrated by his service to civic groups and projects has helped to improve and enhance the quality of life in the Township of Union.

Hugo Barth's community service includes past president of the 200 Club of Union County; past president of the Union Rotary Club; the Union Township Board of Education; the Georgetown University Alumni Association of Northern New Jersey, and the Morris Union County Association for Retarded Citizens.

He is a partner in Haeberle and Barth and a member of the National and State Funeral Directors Associations. He also serves on the board of directors of the Union Center National Bank and the building committee of the Midland School of North Branch, NJ.

I congratulate Hugo Barth and his wife, Karen, on this award and express my sincere appreciation for his many contributions to the community.

SUPPORT FOR THE NEW GOVERNMENT OF LITHUANIA

HON. DAN SCHAEFER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. SCHAEFER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to add my support for the people and the new government of Lithuania. Despite the overwhelming threat posed by the Soviet Union against their desire for self-determination, Lithuanians have stood resolute for the values of democracy and independence. It is important for the United States to recognize independent Lithuania, and to use what influence we have to dissuade further Soviet intervention.

For 50 years the United States has refused to acknowledge Soviet authority over Lithuania, and has long considered it one of the captive nations of the Baltic. The Soviets annexed this nation as a result of the Hitler-Stalin pact, an alliance of supreme brutality.

With the recent spread of democratic values, it would be a major step backward if Lithuania's freedom is crushed. I am pleased to have joined in approving House Concurring Resolution 289, which expresses support for Lithuanian independence, and also calls on the President to recognize the new Government. However, this can be of little comfort as Lithuania faces a trade embargo and the threat of additional action.

Congress and the President must act in concert to ensure the continuing advance of the rights we hold so dearly. Again, I wish to express my deep respect for the people of Lithuania, as well as my deep concern for their future.

THE HUBBLE SPACE TELESCOPE

HON. JOHN G. ROWLAND

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on the occasion of the launching of the Hubble space telescope. As I watched the shuttle Discovery lift off from the launch pad, I stopped to think of the men and women across the country who worked to write this important page in history. I am extremely proud to know that much of the revolutionary work for this telescope took place in my own district at Hughes Danbury Optical Systems in Danbury, CT.

Today, Mr. Speaker, a new day dawns for the science of astronomy with the launching of the Hubble telescope. In the past, astronomers have been limited in their ability to see into space duel to the hindrance of the Earth's atmosphere or the smallness of our earlier space vehicles. Now, 14 billion light years of space becomes available to us to examine and explore. For the next 15 years, we will have the unobstructed view of the heavens which scientists could only have dreamed about until today.

The technological wonder of the Hubble telescope was made possible through the international consortium of NASA, the European Space Agency, and various scientific investigators around the world, including the team at Hughes Danbury Optical Systems. Hughes Danbury Optical was responsible for the essential optical telescope assembly and guidance system for the telescope. Essentially, this mission hinges on the integrity and accuracy of the telescope's optical components, and Hughes Danbury Optical did not stop short of perfection in their efforts.

The pioneers at Hughes Danbury Optical were assigned the near impossible task of fabricating the mirrors for the Hubble telescope. In order for an astronomical telescope mirror to serve its purpose, it must be perfectly smooth to within seven one-billionths of a meter. Because this number is too small for the average person to comprehend, imagine, if this mirror was the size of the United States, the highest mountain and the lowest valley would be less that two inches from the surface. If you put an ordinary mirror on the same scale, the surface variations would be as large as the Empire State Building. Through the development of special computers by Hughes Danbury Opitcal, these mirrors were painstakingly smoothed to perfection in order to maximize the telescope's performance and our view of the universe.

I am pleased to have this opportunity to commend the many dedicated employees at Hughes Danbury Optical Systems and their colleagues around the world for making the Hubble space telescope possible. Although much of space remains a mystery to us, today we took a grand step toward understanding our vast universe.

A TRIBUTE TO THE KING OF PIEROGIES

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to a distinguished gentleman from Shenandoah, PA, which is located in northern Schuylkill County. I am speaking of Theodore F. "Ted" Twardzik, who has been selected as the Greater Shenandoah Area Chamber of Commerce's 1990 honoree.

Mr. Twardzik is the founder and chairman of Ateeco Inc., which is the single largest employer in the Shenandoah area. Ateeco Inc. markets pierogies, which was traditionally an ethnic food, but has become a family dinner favorite over the past 5 to 8 years. Indeed, Ateeco produces some 4½ million pierogies a week.

Ted was born in Shenandoah, graduated from Mahanoy Township High School and then went to the University of Notre Dame. His college years were interrupted by service in the Army, but he returned to Notre Dame to graduate in 1951. Ted's sharp business intuition was honed at home in his parent's kitchen. In 1952, from their kitchen, Ted laid the groundwork for a true business and community success story. Ateeco has grown to a point where it now employs over 240 people, reinvigorating the community's economy. Moreover, Shenandoah is now the pierogi capital of the world and Ted is known as the King of Pierogies.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to recognize Ted Twardzik before you and the rest of my colleagues in the House of Representatives. It is only fitting that Ted's efforts to serve and better his community be recognized by the Greater Shenandoah Chamber of Commerce. Ted is the epitome of the Chamber's theme—Community Service is an Honorable Service—and his service has truly enriched the life of his community.

CASEY, IL TO CELEBRATE P.H. ROBEY DAY APRIL 28

HON. TERRY L. BRUCE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 24, 1990

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today and honor an esteemed gentleman who provides the small, farm town of Casey, IL with a valuable example of leadership. On April 28, I will join the Casey community in celebrating Gen. P.H. Robey Day.

Born on April 27, 1906, Pearl Harvey Robey attended Casey Grade School, and to this day, he claims that his mathematics teacher, Irene Dixon, was the primary influence that led to his graduating second in his engineering class at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, NY.

Young P.H. Robey graduated from West Point as a second lieutenant in the infantry in June 1929, and immediately started flight training at March Field. Upon graduating with a pilot's rating in 1930, he was transferred to the Air Corps where he flew jet fighters, bombers, and earned a "green" card rating with the AAF.

In 1935, when the Air Corps was concentrating on research and development, Robey entered the Wright Field Air Corps Engineering School. Following his studies, Lieutenant Robey worked in powerplant flight testing and flew at high altitudes in the days before the oxygenmask, pressurized cabins and heated flight suits. With this background, he began working with General Electric Co. officials to design the turbo-supercharger which improved high altitude flight and launched the Air Force's strategic, long-range mission.

After the supercharger's completion, P.H. Robey and his copilot, Captain Irving, flew a B–17 bomber to break the world's speed and altitude records. In looking back upon his 25 years of successful flight experience, General Robey humbly declares, "God has been good to me."

As the number of this superior officer's challenging experiences proceeded, so did his well-earned promotions. Following the supercharger program, Colonel Robey became involved in the Air Force's planning of the B–29. In 1950, he was appointed brigadier general in the Air Force and became a special assistant to the Deputy Chief of Staff in charge of guided missile development at the Pentagon. In 1953, he was promoted to major general and became the commanding general of the Western Air Command, including the new State of Alaska.

The son of Artie and Sylvia Jane Robey, P.H. Robey married the late Mary Louise Warner of Wilmington, OH in 1938. They had two children, Mary Catherine and John Robey.

General Robey is now retired, and despite his cosmopolitan experiences, such as attending a reception for Queen Elizabeth in Buckingham Palace and conferring with President Harry S. Truman in the Oval Office, in his heart, he remains a small town farm boy from the 19th Congressional District of Illinois.

I am delighted to take this opportunity to congratulate this fine gentleman upon his 84th birthday, and I look forward to celebrating his extraordinary accomplishments on P.H. Robey Day.

SENATE—Wednesday, April 25, 1990

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 18, 1990)

The Senate met at 11 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable JOSEPH I. LIEBERMAN, a Senator from the State of Connecticut.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness.—Matthew 6:22, 23.

Eternal God who gives life and light to the world, forgive us for shallow optimism which refuses to see reality. May the wisdom of Jesus, "The light of the body is the eye * * *," and the familiar word, "There is no one so blind as he who will not see," cause us to acknowledge the critical condition so manifest around us. It is almost as if our pragmatic solutions feed the problems. Increasing poverty despite the war on poverty; alarming increase in crime with courts and prisons utterly inadequate; divorce, homelessness, hunger, alcoholism, drugs, suicide increasing epidemically, refusing to yield to political remedies.

Help us to see, Lord, that the heart of the dilemma is spiritual. Help us to think vertically as well as horizontally. Lord God, help our unbelief. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, April 25, 1990.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JOSEPH I. LIEBERMAN, a Senator from the State of Connecticut, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. LIEBERMAN thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the distinguished majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this morning, following the time reserved for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

From 12 noon until 2 p.m. today, the Senate will be recessed for a Democratic Conference luncheon.

I hope to obtain consent prior to noon to proceed to the supplemental appropriations bill at 2 p.m. when the Senate reconvenes following the recess. That bill was reported yesterday by the Appropriations Committee.

Once we have begun consideration of the bill, should any amendments be offered today which will require rollcall votes, those votes will be stacked to occur tomorrow to accommodate the nine Senators who are part of the official United States delegation to the inauguration of Mrs. Chamorro as President of Nicaragua today.

Senator DOLE consulted with the White House yesterday and they indicated their approval of that participation, and therefore we will not be able to complete action on the supplemental appropriations bill today. But it is my hope that we will be able to complete action on that bill on tomorrow.

So, Mr. President, there will be no rollcall votes today. But I hope we will be able to consider and debate the supplemental appropriations bill beginning at 2 p.m.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time, and I reserve all of the leader time of the distinguished Republican leader.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

Mr. ROTH addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH].

LIGHTER, LEANER, AND MORE MOBILE: MATCHING THE DEFENSE BUDGET AND THE REAL WORLD

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, for the past 40 years the citizens of the United States have been taxed to provide for the common defense. By consensus, during this period, we have tied our military strategy to the doctrine of containment, regarding the Soviet military and its allies, the Warsaw Pact, as a strong, homogeneous, aggressive enemy poised to strike the defensive forces of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. It was assumed that the next world war, if it ever came, would begin with an attack by the Warsaw Pact's armored columns into West Germany, causing a face-to-face meeting of the most sophisticated weapons in the arsenals of the two super powers. This scenario drove our strategy, dictated our force structure and defined the design of almost every new weapon system acquired by the Department of Defense during the last 40 years.

Our strategy has proved both effective and expensive. The Warsaw Pact, in reality, no longer exists. In light of such dramatic political and military change, our strategy should now change. Even though we are faced by other threats, throughout the world, the changes we can now make in our defense forces will result in a lighter, leaner and more mobile defense force. This means that we can cut divisions, carrier battlegroups, and air wings. Such restructuring will produce substantial savings over the next decade.

We in the Senate have a duty and a responsibility to help define the new doctrines and strategies. We also have a duty and responsibility to assure that all possible savings are achieved. This is going to be a painful process but if we can complete this exercise properly, we will have earned our keep. Putting off the debate is not going to make it any easier and every day we delay, costs increase and positions harden. So let us begin to prioritize, not parochialize, the defense strategy, budget, and programs.

The Soviet Union seems to be contracting rather than expanding and, according to the Director of Central Intelligence, "* * * will be preoccupied with domestic problems for years to come." He also said that "* * * [W]e can expect a continued diminution—but not elimination—of Soviet threats to United States interest [from conventional forces]." With respect to strategic forces, the Director of Central Intelligence asserted that while numbers seemed to be decreasing, quality of the strategic forces was being increased.

THE PROBLEM DEFINED

Mr. President, on March 22 the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] outlined for the Senate what his Armed Services Committee had learned since the first of the year concerning the Defense Department's fiscal year 1991 budget request. He pointed to what he called "blanks" in the administration's request. These blanks are the "unknowns" with respect to the threat, the strategy, force structure, the overall budget, and individual programs which arise from the changed world. Since that date, Senator NUNN has made a series of speeches which provide his views of the blanks in the administration's proposals.

I want to congratulate the Senator on his scholorship and oratory. He has provided for all of us a much better understanding of the changing world and what that means in terms of threat. I have studied his statements with care and find very much with which I agree. While I agree with his basic facts, I do come to some different conclusions as to where reductions and economies should be made.

The budget for the Department of Defense must consider the world as it is today. We must make the Department of Defense budget, our defense strategy and our defense procurements match the real world. Just as the world has changed dramatically, the DOD budget must change dramatically. The Congress must seize this opportunity.

APPROPRIATE GOALS FOR THE CONGRESS

Adjusting to the major changes in the threat to our interest requires time. We are a great ship of state and we need to allow sufficient time to make a change in direction. Failure to allow sufficient time results in high expectations that cannot be met, forces unwise decisions, decreases the morale of those who defend us, and could commit us to changes that would be difficult to reverse if the world situation were to change. However, as I stated earlier, we must not put off decisions which must be made today.

With these objectives and limitations in mind, I propose the following goal:

As soon as possible the United States should begin to restructure its military forces to reflect the decreased likelihood of direct confrontation between the super powers and the decreased likelihood of involvement in a high intensity conflict in Europe.

Our current military strategy, which played an important role in our doctrine of containment, was adopted in the early 1950's but it was not easy to reach consensus and did not occur overnight. Looking back now, we can say that the right doctrine and strategy were reached and that they were effective.

Now we need a new definition of the threat in order to determine our new strategy and the equipment we will need to procure in order to carry out that strategy. Even though the tasks of laying out the new threat definition and new strategy have not been completed, I think we have enough information to agree that the major threat we must prepare to face probably will not be a mass attack by Soviet Union and Warsaw Pact armored columns against NATO positions in Eastern Europe. It is much more likely that the scenario of concern will involve low-intensity combat or naval confrontations with a variety of potential agressors rather than this high-intensity threat. Because the nature of the past high-intensity threat determined the size and structure of our forces, I believe that this change permits a large reduction in active forces and the luxury of a partial dependence on Reserves and National Guard particularly for heavy land warfare.

Cutting active divisions, air wings and carrier groups will provide the greatest payoff in reduced obligational authority and outlays. Along with this change comes savings from base closures and reduced operation and maintenance costs. I truly believe that when we are able to reach agreement on a new strategy we will be able to reduce new budget authority for the Department of Defense substantially more than 2.6 percent. Additionally, I believe that we can do best by examining the threat, strategy, and weapons programs on a case-by-case basis, eliminating those programs and costs that are based on the European battlefield and shifting our resources to meet the threat of the 1990's and beyond.

SUGGESTED PROGRAM CHANGES

As I pointed out, while we do not have complete information, we have enough information to begin to identify programs that were designed to overcome a threat that has been greatly diminished. While the information on new programs that may be needed is not as clear, I do not think for 1 minute that the only thing we need to do to meet the changed threat is simply cut out unneeded programs. There will be unmet needs that will require new programs or redirection of existing programs.

Despite the absence of some information—or, in the words of Senator NUNN, the presence of "blanks" in the administration budget proposal, I would now like to suggest some changes as a starting place for debate and for meeting the goals I propose.

STRATEGIC FORCES

Director of Central Intelligence Webster stated that "the bulk of the evidence about Soviet strategic forces and programs show a vigorous, broad-based modernization effort that is improving their overall strategic capabilities." He added that "the Soviets continue to modernize all elements of their strategic defense forces. Because of this assessment I think that our strategic programs should move at a pace roughly equivalent to the Soviet program.

CONVENTIONAL FORCES

The changed threat provides us with two great opportunities.

An opportunity to reduce the size of our conventional forces.

An opportunity to slow down or even to skip one generation of modernization while we wait to discover the true nature and depth of the change.

The Army's plans contained in the administration's defense proposal do not reflect substantial change in force structure. The Army currently has 18 active duty divisions. I see no reason why the Army cannot cut 4 active duty divisions during the next 5 years with an ultimate goal of 10 active duty divisions by the year 2000. In cutting divisions, the Army should consider the decreased need for heavy land warfare and protect the lighter more mobile divisions. Additionally, Army's Heavy Forward Air Defense Systems, which are designed for the European theater of operations, should not progress beyond research and development. There are a number of other unnecessary Army weapons designed to attack the second echelon of Soviet forces in Europe even though that threat is disappearing.

The Navy asserts that its force structure was not based in Europe and, therefore, it sees no reason to change based on a change in Eastern Europe. However, much of the Navy mission was directed at protecting and insuring the resupply of United States forces during a lengthy war in Europe while simultaneously preparing to penetrate Soviet waters with carrier task forces. While the possible need for transoceanic resupply remains, reductions are possible in the 14 carrier groups now authorized. I believe that a reduction to 10 carrier groups within a reasonable period of time is possible. However, it should be noted that skipping a generation of modernization will, in its turn require the updating and upgrading of existing aircraft.

The Air Force has many ambitious plans based on the European scenarios. These include the follow-on to the F-15 air superiority fighter, the C-17 and various missiles and electronic gear. All of these systems should be reevaluated with an eye toward elimination. Additionally, the number of air wings during the next 10 years could be reduced from 24.

OVERSEAS FORCES

The suggested force structure changes could be accomplished both at home and overseas. I would like to see us begin to negotiate a reduction of troops in Europe. I believe that these negotiations could lead to an agreement to keep about 100,000 troops in Europe.

CONCLUSION

This is the beginning of the debate about the 1991 Defense authorization bill and the even longer process of deciding what the U.S. Defense Establishment will look like in the year 2000. The goal I have proposed and the suggestions I have made are a good place to start.

While I believe that there are programs that should be cut, I am most interested in cutting the production programs rather than the research and development efforts which contribute to our industrial base. In this regard, there are programs such as the B-2 and such as fiber optics missile systems, where research and development should continue through operational testing to determine the full range of the capabilities and performances of the platform.

The world has changed dramatically. What I am suggesting is a change in our defense structure that is equally as dramatic and is truly responsive to the change in the world. At the same time, I recognize that as new threats are defined and strategy developed to protect our interests from these threats, new weapons systems may be required. Responding to the changes in the world is not just cutting defense programs but rather, it is defining the changed threat, adopting a strategy to meet the threat and then selecting the force structure and weapons necessary to protect our worldwide interest. Hopefully we will thereby receive, over time, the much desired peace dividend.

Mr. President, it is important that the debate begin to lead to a consensus about our defense strategy and the men and equipment needed to carry out that strategy. Undoubtedly, with world events in such a period of rapid change, there should be a continuing need for reevaluating the world threat and U.S. strategy. Hopefully, world events will enable the United States as well as other nations to continue to reduce significantly the resources allocated to defense needs. In the meantime, I believe the program I have outlined establishes a sound starting point.

I yield back the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY].

DEFENSE EXPENDITURES

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, the Senate Budget Committee, of which I am a member, is presently debating the level of defense expenditures for the coming fiscal year. I would like to discuss some of the issues that pertain to that debate.

Irrespective of the number decided on by Congress for the defense budget, we must be aware of the pitfalls associated with a build-down of our national defense. No matter how much we spend, if we do not spend it effectively, we still risk a return to the hollow army syndrome of the 1970's. The points I raise in this discussion and in the days ahead are intended to address how we avoid a hollow army in the face of the build-down, and how we maximize our capability despite shrinking resources.

The two central questions are: First, how do we determine the defense budget; and second, how do we spend the money. These are the two fundamental questions—planning and execution—that will ultimately determine whether or not we get the biggest bang for the buck as we build-down our national defense. Indeed, it was the disconnect between plans and execution that characterized the defense management failures of the 1980's, when we got marginal capability gains at much greater cost.

What is important to realize is that the disconnect between plans and execution still exists within DOD because the management reforms encouraged by the Secretary of Defense are slow to take hold. If reforms fail to take hold and the disconnect were to remain, then the cuts we will make in the Budget Committee or on the floor of this body will most assuredly keep us on the path toward a hollow army, especially if the cuts are deep.

Allow me, Mr. President, to characterize this disconnect between plans and execution. I have likened it to a paradox. At the planning level, there is too little money to buy everything we have in the 5-year defense plan. This is known as underfunding. At the execution level, there is too much money available to manage programs efficiently. The excess money contributes to cost, schedule, and performance problems such as we have seen recently with AMRAAM, the FOG-M, and the C-17.

The disconnect comes into play when the planners fail to take into account the impact of cost, schedule, and performance problems. Instead, we plan for the most optimistic cost, schedule, and performance. That way we can squeeze everything into the budget, even though there is no room. I have often called this phenomenon a "blivet," which is 5 pounds of manure in a 4-pound sack. Over time, the impact of "bliveting" is to hollow out the army at great expense.

To avoid expensive weakness in the 1990's, we have to reform the process by which objectives are established, plans are made, programs receive resources, and the budget is executed. This requires linkage between the various organizational elements under a new defense management structure. Secretary Cheney has laid out a framework for accomplishing this. It is contained in the Defense Management Review which was published last summer. It is not complete, but it is indeed a solid first step. It is not being implemented fast enough, but perhaps it will be if we in Congress provide encouragement and support, and, of course, if we light the proverbial fire under the feet of recalcitrant bureaucrats.

Tomorrow, I will outline a strategy for effectively managing the build-down, and an organizational structure that provides the necessary linkage between the various elements.

In closing, Mr. President, I would like to make one comment. There are some who mistakenly believe there is no connection between the Secretary's Defense Management Review and the budget process itself. They would divorce the issues of strategy, planning, programming, and resource allocation from the so-called management reforms of the DMR. Let me just correct that misconception. Management reform of DOD begins with reform of the defense budget process. It is what drives the other reforms, it is what provides the opportunity for accomplishing the reforms, and without it reforms will not work. If that were not the case, why would planning reform be so prominent in the DMR? It is the very first activity addressed in the DMR as needing reform. I refer my colleagues to pages 5 and 6 of the DMR. It is addressed before acquisition, before Government-industry relationship, before congressional actions, and before the acquisition work force. This year, reform of the defense planning, programming, and budgeting process fell apart. And with it, successful implementation of badly needed reforms has been put in abeyance. That means, management of our defense resources is still governed by the same process that gave us marginal gains in capability at much greater cost during the last decade. During a defense build-down, that can have a devastating impact on our national security. So while business as ususal prevails at the Pentagon, an expensive meter continues to run.

I will have more to say on these matters tomorrow and in the weeks ahead, Mr. President.

In the meantime, I hope that my colleagues would take a look at something I have disseminated to all of my colleagues, my critique of the DMR called The Defense Management Challenge, Recommendations for Managing the Defense Resources in 1990, because there are some recommendations in there, and some shortcomings of the present DMR, that people have to take into consideration.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, it is my understanding that we are in morning business and that Senators may speak for up to 5 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to speak beyond 5 minutes, if I need to do so.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Colorado is now recognized.

SITUATION IN LITHUANIA

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, there is a disturbing report in today's paper that the President has declined to take any actions with respect to the situation in Lithuania. The headline is, "Bush Declines to Set Lithuanian Sanctions."

The President is reported to believe that to do so would be a mistake and that in some way, by indicating in a concrete way the concerns of the American people, by levying some kind of sanctions or in some way putting pressure on Mr. Gorbachev and on the Soviet Union, that we would endanger the freedom of other Baltic nations or the nations of Eastern Europe.

There is also on the front page of this morning's paper a picture and report from the President of Lithuania, Mr. Landsbergis: "This is Munich."

Mr. President, I believe Mr. Landsbergis is right. I say so reluctantly, but I believe it will be the conclusion of thoughtful people around this country and the world that we are selling out the Lithuanians.

I hope every Senator will take the time to read this article in detail because it is disturbing not only for its conclusions but for the reasons that are cited for the failure of the United States to take some kind of specific concrete actions, something that would be more than just words to say that we stand solidly behind the efforts of the Lithuanian people to achieve the independence which they have been wrongfully denied for more than 40 years—50 years, in fact. One of the reasons cited is that Lithuania is a small country; it is a country that has little strategic value.

Mr. President, if we are going to start measuring our commitment to freedom by somebody's conception of strategic value or somebody's idea, an unnamed somebody in today's account of this in the Washington Post, that a country is too small for us to care about the freedom of the people involved, then something very precious is being lost in the process.

Mr. Eisenhower once said that freedom is—I cannot quote it exactly, but he made the point that freedom is more than something that is written in the dusty pages of history. It is an ideal that lives in the hearts of human beings and must be refreshed in their lives everyday; that it is like a cut flower; that if it is not refreshed everyday, it dies a little everyday.

What is happening here is that the freedom of Lithuania is dying a little today, and I regret to say the freedom of our own country as well. If we turn our back on what is happening in that troubled nation, we are not being faithful to our own ideals.

Mr. President, I want to read briefly the comments of the President of Lithuania who, I think, has standing to speak to us with great eloquence, as have others who have suffered under the yoke of oppression.

Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis said today that President Bush's decision to defer any sanctions against Moscow in the Soviet secession crisis amounts to a political "Munich," a reference to the attempt by Britain and France to appease Nazi Germany in 1938 at the expense of Czechoslovakia.

"We feared that America might sell us. Let people decide whether that has happened," Landsbergis said. "I don't understand whether it is possible to sell the freedom of one group of people for the freedom of another. If that is so, then of what value is the idea of freedom itself? . . . This is Munich."

Ever since Lithuania declared independence from the Soviet Union on March 11, Landsbergis has been searching for stronger backing from the United States and other Western nations. Lithuanian leaders had expected the United States to take some economic measures against Moscow today, but the Bush administration has been reluctant even to sharpen its rhetoric in support of the breakaway republic, much less impose sanctions, for fear of harming relations with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of the article and an article which appears on the same page outlining the point of view of the administration, be printed in the RECORD.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 25, 1990]

BUSH DECLINES TO SET LITHUANIA SANCTIONS: "THIS IS MUNICH," LANDSBERGIS SAYS

(By David Remnick)

Moscow, April 24.—Lithuanian President Vytautas Landbergis said today that President Bush's decision to defer any sanctions against Moscow in the Soviet secession crisis amounts to a political "Munich," a reference to the attempt by Britain and France to appease Nazi Germany in 1938 at the expense of Czechoslovakia.

"We feared that America might sell us. Let people decide whether that has happened," Landsbergis said. "I don't understand whether it is possible to sell the freedom of one group of people for the freedom of another. If that is so, then of what value is the idea of freedom itself? . . . This is Munich."

Ever since Lithuania declared independence from the Soviet Union on March 11, Landsbergis has been searching for stronger backing from the United States and other Western nations. Lithuanian leaders had expected the United States to take some economic measures against Moscow today, but the Bush administration has been reluctant even to sharpen its rhetoric in support of the breakaway republic, much less impose sanctions, for fear of harming relations with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

The Kremlin, for its part, will continue to exert economic and political pressure on Lithuania whether or not Washington or other Western governments decide to levy any sanctions, a high-ranking Soviet official said today.

The level of tension between Moscow and Vilnius, the Lithuanian capital, shows no signs of abating. KGB Lt. Anatoli Parakhin said in an official statement that border patrols around Lithuania have been increased and surveillance has been stepped up to watch over "possible contacts between Soviet vessels and foreign boats in territorial waters and within the Soviet economic zone to avert the transfer of weapons and ammunition to Lithuania."

Lithuanian officials have denied trying to get weapons from abroad and have said that the only use of force in its confrontation with Moscow has been by the Soviet army.

Tonight, the Soviet news agency Tass reported that a shot was fired Monday night at an open window of a Soviet army barracks in Vilnius. The report said that no one was injured but that ballistics experts believe a combat weapon was used.

Asked in an interview how the Soviet Union would react if the United States were to rescind promises of trade agreements or other future economic benefits, Gorbachev's spokesman, Arkady Maslennikov, said: "We'd be sorry, but only sorry. It wouldn't change our course in relation to Lithuania. This is a matter of the Soviet Constitution."

A Foreign Ministry spokesman, Vadim Perfilyev, said that any U.S. sanctions would provide Lithuania with "false hopes and have negative consequences" on the international scene.

Maslennikov added that so far he did not think the secession crisis—and Moscow and Washington's disagreement on how to resolve it—would endanger the Bush-Gorbachev summit scheduled to begin May 30 in Washington. He said the Kremlin understands that Bush is under pressure from some members of Congress to take firmer action against Moscow but added, "We hope sober counsel will continue in the U.S. administration."

Maslennikov said that the Lithuanians had "brought the crisis on themselves" and that their leaders, especially Landsbergis and Prime Minister Kazimiera Prunskiene, were "acting like children who want their candy right away."

"We are not denying Lithuania the right to independence," Maslennikov said, "If they want to be independent, fine. But they have to go through the procedures of the Soviet Constitution." He added that the Kremlin was not demanding, as a starting point for negotiations, that Vilnius rescind its March 11 declaration of indpendence, but that it must "at least" declare a freeze on all laws passed by its parliament since then.

The Lithuanians have not agreed to such a freeze, and a five-member delegation from Vilnius led by Vice President Bronius Kuzmickas continued today to search without success for an audience in Moscow with high-ranking Kremlin officials.

Like many other Soviet officials in recent weeks, Maslennikov repeatedly referred to hypothetical American analogies. "What if Alaska decided it wanted to be on its own?" he said, "Could it just walk away, or would it have to follow the procedures of the U.S. Constitution?"

Since the Soviets imposed an embargo on shipments of crude oil and other materials to Lithuania last week, most people in Vilnius have cut down on the use of private cars and are taking public transport. At the same time, more than 6,000 bus routes have been cut from normal schedules for lack of fuel.

The republic also has begun a strict gasoline rationing program, and the government has urged a minimal use of energy supplies, but electricity and heat in private homes and public buildings are still working normally, sources in Vilnius said.

More than 7,500 workers have been put out of their jobs since the embargo began, a Lithuanian spokesman said. Lithuania's legislature set up an "anti-blockade commission" led by Prunskiene today to plan measures to ease the effects of Moscow's cutoff of oil, most natural gas, medicines and other goods.

Prunskiene is considering selling some of Lithuania's gold reserves in an attempt to buy oil abroad. The republic has about $25 million in gold that it transferred to France before World War II as a precaution, and the Bank of France said last month that it would return the gold to Lithuania if the French government recognizes the republic's independence. Lithuania, however, needs about $55 million worth of oil a month to run the republic.

BUSH REJECTS SANCTIONS OVER LITHUANIA: PUNISHING MOSCOW WOULD BE "MISTAKE"

(By Ann Devroy and Don Oberdorfer)

President Bush yesterday decided not to retaliate against the Soviet Union or risk crackdown against Lithuania, saying that sanctions against Moscow could undermine "freedom around the world."

Bush emerged from an hour-long discussion with congressional leaders to offer a lengthy, emotional explanation for his reluctance to penalize the Soviets, at least for now. Quoting baseball philosopher Yogi Berra, Bush said, "I don't want to make the wrong mistake."

Saying he had put off a decision on whether to impose any sanctions, the president said: "I'm concerned about the evolution of freedom in the other Baltic states whose incorporation we haven't recognized and I'm concerned that we not inadvertently do something that compels the Soviet Union to take action that would set back the whole case of freedom around the world."

With the Soviet political and economic systems under great strain and President Mikhail Gorbachev scheduled to arrive in this country for a summit meeting just five weeks from today, Bush said this is "a very complex time" in which to make a decision about the U.S. sanctions he had promised to consider. Last Tuesday, Bush said he would consider "appropriate responses" if the Soviets cut oil and gas supplies to Lithuania, which they subsequently did. Last Wednesday, Secretary of State James A. Baker III said the Soviets were putting bilateral economic contacts "at risk" by pressuring Lithuania. On Friday, the White House said sanctions against Moscow would be announced after consultations with the allies and Congress.

But yesterday Bush and other administration officials indicated that they were not prepared to put Lithuanina independence ahead of other policy objectives they consider more important, nor to create false hopes in Lithuania that U.S. backing can win concessions from Moscow. "You have got to look at the real options," Bush said, adding: "I am old enough to remember Hungary in 1956, where we exhorted people to go to the barricades and a lot of people are left out there all alone" when the Soviet tanks suppressed the Hungarian revolution.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said that after consulting its allies, the administration concluded that it had no support for retaliatory moves, even the relatively mild bilateral economic options that were on the table. Over the weekend, European foreign ministers expressed concern about events in Lithuania, but declined to take any action.

In his public remarks yesterday Bush indicated that he saw the Lithuanian problem in a long-term context. "I'd like to see the progress in the Soviet Union go forward without having some elements that are opposing Gorbachev on all of this crack down and set the clock back to a day we all remember of Cold War mentality and confrontation," he said.

One official said Bush had spoken privately of the Lithuanian crisis in terms of the way it might look decades from now. "He said 'I don't want people to look back 20 or 40 years from now and say, that's where everything went off track. That's when progress stopped,' " the official quoted Bush as saying.

Another senior official noted that there was "virtually no pressure" to impose sanctions from Congress, the American public or the press. Yesterday, Democratic leaders of both houses issued statements supporting Bush, and what criticism there was in Congress was mild.

The reluctance to penalize the Soviets reflects a widespread though mostly unspoken sense in the administration that the Lithuanians have pressed their case for independence too quickly and too radically and been too unwilling to compromise, officials said. Bush alluded to that perception yesterday when he called for "both sides" to begin negotiations. Gorbachev, he said, "has indicated a willingness to do this. The Lithuanians have indicated some willingness to do this."

A senior official at the White House and another at the State Department yesterday noted Lithuania's small population, relative unimportance strategically and the fact that the economic sanctions Moscow has imposed in an effort to pressure the Lithuanians has been less than devastating. Said one official, "No one is starving. The Soviets made a point of that."

When the administration's senior officials met Monday night without aides present to discuss the situation, a number of lower-ranking officials predicted that some form of sanctions against Moscow were imminent. The National Security Council did consider postponing talks on a series of economic concessions that Moscow ardently seeks. Negotiations on several of those matters resumed yesterday in Paris.

Bush and his senior aides left the impression that if conditions worsen in Lithuania, sanctions might still be imposed. That door was left open, an official said, "so the Soviets understand that no sanctions today doesn't mean no sanctions ever."

Bush expressed hope that a Lithuanian delegation now in Moscow for talks with Soviet officials could produce an end to the stalemate over the process and pace of Lithuania's drive for independence. Such talks, Bush said, have "a great deal of potential for the freedom that we seek for the Lithuanians, and yet have it done in a way that is not egregious to the Soviet Union. . . . Therein lies the answer."

Bush himself ruled out major retaliatory moves, saying any steps he might take "are apt to be on the economic side." Fitzwater said the administration had ruled out any military response, any slowdown in the arms control negotiation process and any effect on U.S.-Soviet grain agreements.

Administration officials denied that conversations between Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze on Lithuania over the past week had produced any specific pledges on Soviet actions or an affirmative decision to grant the Soviets a reprieve. Baker is expected to see Shevardnadze again in Berlin Friday of next week as the two ministers prepare for big-power discussions on the future of Germany. Officials did not rule out a new series of direct contacts between the two ministers on the Lithuanian situation even before then.

Over objections from Baker, the Senate Appropriations Committee yesterday included in an emergency omnibus spending bill $10 million to buy and staff an embassy in Lithuania if the United States formally recognizes the country as an independent state.

Fitzwater said Bush had not answered a letter from Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis not had he or other members of the government had any direct contact with Lithuanian officials. Fitzwater said contacts have remained through "private parties."

Fitzwater said in the session Bush had with congressional leaders, only two of them, Rep. Dante B. Fascell (D-Fla.) and Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.), suggested the president take new steps in the crisis. Fascell said he has suggested delaying the summit until the Lithuanian situation became clearer "perhaps in the fall," and Helms suggested Bush formally recognize Lithuania and exchange ambassadors.

Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell (D-Maine) said he agreed with the president's position "so far" but urged some immediate steps toward trade sanctions against the Soviets. House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) also issued a statement of general support.

Both Mitchell and Senate Minority Leader Robert J. Dole (R-Kan.) said Bush emphasized when he met with them yesterday that he had not made any decisions. Dole said he told the senators that he "wanted to weigh ideas that were suggested" at the meeting for possible future action. "I think he just wants to be very careful," Dole told reporters after the meeting.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd (D-W.Va.), chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said in a speech yesterday that he would "oppose extending new economic benefits and rewards to the Soviet leadership at the same time it is starving Lithuanians of food and fuel." Specifically, he said, it would be wrong to extend most-favored-nation trade status to the Soviets or "endorse any new trade agreement with the Soviets while Lithuania is denied its rightful status."

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I thank the Chair. Without elaborating too much on the detail of it, I have a brief chronology of the events of the last several weeks. This has been prepared by, I believe, the Los Angeles Times. It is not an attempt to be exhaustive but just to put in perspective what is going on, because day by day the pressure and the intensity of the force being used by the Soviet Union against the people of Lithuania has escalated.

It is not as if they sent in all the tanks and paratroopers the first day. They have not done that. They have been much more subtle. As a consequence, day by day, people in this country and elsewhere said, if they even cross a certain threshold of violence and oppression, then we will act.

It is more like the salami tactic of taking another slice, and another slice, and slicing it thinner and thinner, but the ultimate effect is the same.

March 11: Lithuania declares independence. Parliament elects Vytauta Landsbergis president, the first non-Communist leader in Soviet history.

March 15: Soviet Parliament dismisses secession move as "illegal and invalid."

March 21: Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev orders Lithuanians to surrender weapons, toughens visa controls and border checks.

March 22: The Kremlin sends a squad of prosecutors to Lithuania to enforce Soviet law in the restive republic.

March 23: Soviet order diplomats out of Lithuania and bar journalists from entering.

March 27: Soviet paratroopers raid psychiatric hospital to capture Lithuanian deserters from Red army.

March 29: Lithuanian leaders attempt to appease Soviets by urging citizens to turn over weapons and suspending plan to establish own border controls. Kremlin, meanwhile, offers amnesty to Lithuanian deserters.

April 1: Soviet tanks roll through Vilnius in show of military force.

April 3: Soviet legislature adopts tough new secession rules and grants Gorbachev sweeping powers to declare states of emergency.

April 13: Gorbachev gives Lithuania 2 days to rescind independence declaration or face cutoff of energy supplies.

April 16: Lithuania defies Soviet ultimatum. Legislature meets in special session to draft survival plan.

April 17: Lithuanian leaders report beginning of Soviet oil and natural gas cutbacks.

I have no idea of what the report will be tomorrow, but today all over the world people will be asking, where does the United States stand? Do we stand with the people of Lithuania, whom we have assured over and over again we support—the people of Lithuania who have read or heard about the resolutions adopted by this Congress on dozens of occasions where we have condemned the illegal and violent annexation of Lithuania, Estonia, and Latvia into the Soviet Union.

I do understand that this is a complicated matter, and that is the first thing that I fully expect would be said if anybody were to raise these issues with the State Department or somebody at the White House. They would say, well, this is all very complicated.

Of course it is. It is not enough just to have your heart full of concern for people who are struggling for freedom. This is a matter on which we must use our head, and Mr. Bush, I think quite properly, is weighing the alternatives. I respect that he has unique and special responsibilities, as well as unique and special insights into the situation. But in my opinion we are being far too cautious. In trying to balance this between what our hearts tell us and what our heads tell us, we are making a mistake, we are giving the impression to Mr. Gorbachev and the world that we really do not care, that our relationship with Mr. Gorbachev is so important that there is no outrage to which we will respond.

Mr. President, this is not an unfamiliar argument. Every time we face a crisis of some sort somewhere in the world, these same kinds of questions arise. Whenever Senators suggest a course of action which is along the lines of what I am about to suggest, somebody says, well, no, leave it to the professionals down at the State Department. They say, well, no, this is not something that should be conducted in public after all; behind the scenes we are working very diligently on this matter. They say, well, no, it is better left to those who devote their attention to such matters every day of the week, 7 days a week. In short, it is better left to the execuitve branch than to the legislative branch; it is better left to us rather than to you. That is what they tell Senators.

That is what they told us about China. Remember? I invite Senators to look at how that has worked out. I don't think that policy has proven out very well. It proves to me that Senators were right and the professionals down at the State Department and elsewhere have been proven wrong about China.

That was pretty much the tone of the argument when we argued the forced labor issue a number of years ago. The Congress repeatedly asked the administration to enforce those laws that prohibit the importation of goods produced with forced labor in the Soviet Union. Over and over again, despite the clear provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930, and despite the repeated requests and the expressions of official concern by the Senate and by the House of Representatives, the administration declined to do so. My view is that a lot of people suffered needlessly and the reputation of the United States suffered needlessly.

That was pretty much the same situation we went through in Romania when some of us in this Chamber argued and argued over a period of years that we should not grant MFN status to Romania because of their abuses of human rights. I think history has proven that we were correct.

Mr. President, I think I would claim too much if I were to say a cautious policy of behind the scenes diplomacy is or always has been wrong, and on a number of ocassions it has been, but in this particular instance it seems to me we are just conveying the impression we really do not much care about what is going on in Lithuania. I do not think that is true, nor, Mr. President, do I adhere to the belief that there is not anything we can do without absolutely creating a final and total, catastrophic rupture between the Soviet Union and the United States, or between the Bush administration and the Gorbachev administration.

I am not saying jump off a cliff. I am saying there are a series of graduated, responsible measures that we could take to give concrete expression to the concerns we feel. I do not know what all of those are but at least six things occur to me immediately. First is we could extend diplomatic recognition and send an Ambassador to Lithuania and invite the Lithuania Government to send one here. In my view, we should have done that within about the first 6 or 8 or 10 or 12 hours. It is not too late to do so now.

That is not a measure which is unduly confrontational. It is the kind of recognition which simply says we recognize the legitimacy of the Government of Lithuania, that Lithuania is and always has been, for this is the policy of the United States and has been for decades, an independent and free country.

Second, we could raise this matter with the World Court. Now, I am not one who has a great admiration for the success of the World Court, but I do not think it is a useless agency of international relations either. It seems to me that that would not be too confrontational, that would not be something which would take us to the brink of disaster if we, either on our own or in support of some effort by Lithuania, raised this matter at the World Court.

Mr. President, the third thing that occurs to me as a potential action for us to take would be to raise this matter in the United Nations. Again, I do not think the United Nations is the ultimate answer in human affairs, but it is a place where the issue could be raised, where public opinion could be focused, where we could give the nations of Eastern Europe: Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and others a chance to vote on this matter. Would that not be a worthy and interesting debate and vote.

Fourth, Mr. President, we can grant or withhold economic assistance. My judgment is that the most crucial imperative for the Gorbachev administration is to do something to straighten out their economy, which is coming apart at the seams. It appears to me the only hope they have for doing that in the short run is to get some help from the United States. The power to grant or withhold such aid is a very, very significant incentive which we ought to use and so far as I am aware we are not now using.

The fifth thing that occurs to me as a possible option to bring pressure on the situation is technology transfer. There is a lot of talk about how we are going to send various items of United States technology, and I must say that I for one would be quite cautious about doing so prior to the resolution of this Lithuanian situation.

Mr. President, we had a big debate in this Chamber not too long ago, a few years ago, about sending the technology for gas turbines to the Soviet Union. The question was whether or not it was really in the interest of United States and Western policy to help the Soviet Union build a massive natural gas pipeline to send gas to Western Europe.

The concern that many of us expressed was, what would happen when the nations of Western Europe, particularly West Germany, became dependent on the Soviet Union for natural gas. Could it happen in a crunch of some kind that the Soviet Union would bring inordinate pressure on Germany by simply turning off the valve for natural gas. I guess if I were a West German this morning, I would take very seriously what has happened to the people of Lithuania, where that is exactly what the Soviet Union has done. They just turned off the gas.

Finally, Mr. President, if other measures are not successful, we could reconsider the timing and content of the summit talks.

Mr. President, I do not know what the answer to all of this is. I certainly do not hold myself out as an authority on political developments in that region of the world—but I just did not want to let the day go by without letting somebody know, anybody who reads this RECORD or anybody who may know of proceedings in the Senate on Lithuania—that some of us think this country can and should and ultimately will go much further in the defense of freedom, much further in registering our support for the people of Lithuania, not because we wish to be confrontational to Mr. Gorbachev, not because we wish to set back or injure or downgrade the relations between this country and the Soviet Union but because our priorities are freedom first and other considerations after we think about human freedom.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator THURMOND be recognized for 10 minutes, and that after Senator THURMOND and the majority leader speak, the Senate stand in recess until 2 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHELBY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, we are still attempting to gain approval to move to the supplemental appropriations bill at 2 p.m. I am advised that Senator DOLE is working on gaining that clearance.

As soon as Senator THURMOND completes his remarks, the Senate will then be in recess, and I will, when we resume the session at 2 p.m, seek to obtain consent to proceed to the supplemental appropriations bill at that time.

I am grateful to Senator DOLE for his cooperation in seeking to obtain that approval, and look forward to being able to proceed to that bill at 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE BELL FAMILY, 1990 BLACK FAMILY OF THE YEAR

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Bell, South Carolinians and the parents of eight fine children, who were recently named the 1990 Black Family of the Year. Their story is one of love, commitment, sacrifice, hard work and immeasurable rewards. It is my privilege to pay tribute to them today. I welcome them, along with their family members, to the Chamber of the U.S. Senate.

Leroy Bell was born on February 23, 1932, in Hopkins, SC. He is the adopted son of Tom and Sarah Bell. Marie Carter Bell, is the daughter of Lewis and Hattie Carter and was born almost 4 years later in the same community. Both Leroy and Marie Bell attended local secondary schools and Leroy went on to serve for 2 years in the U.S. Army.

Marie and Leroy were married on September 11, 1952. They soon moved to Columbia, SC and started their family. Limited in both educational and vocational skills, Mr. Bell found work as a meat packer and Mrs. Bell accepted employment as a domestic worker. Their strong Christian faith and high moral principles served as the foundation for their lives, and their family enjoyed a closeness which was envied by many.

The Bells are keenly aware of the importance of education and greatly encouraged their children's academic success. Leroy Bell, who is described as a reserved and private man, stressed hard work, enforced strict discipline, and embraced traditional family values. His children learned the importance of teamwork in their early teens by working side-by-side with their mother in a college cafeteria or cleaning offices at night with their father.

In the early 1970's the family was brought even closer together when it was discovered that one of the Bell children suffered from sickle cell anemia. With the support of this strong family unit, this young man has been able to overcome the potentially devastating effects of this tragic disease and has experienced both personal and professional success.

I believe that our success as parents is often reflected in the achievements of our children. In this case, Mr. and Mrs. Bell's success is truly overwhelming. Despite the limited finances and additional responsibilities incurred by each of the children, all eight children completed their educations—several with honors. Seven went on to obtain college degrees; five have postgraduate degrees; one obtained a doctor of medicine degree; and another is currently a second-year medical student.

I believe that each of the children deserves to be recognized for his or her accomplishments.

Michael Leroy Bell is the Bell's oldest son. He has been employed by Anchor Continental as a machinist for over 18 years and is married to the former Sadie Johnson. The couple has two children.

Alonzo Bell earned his bachelor of arts degree in history from the University of South Carolina. He is a sergeant at the Richland County Detention Center and is married to the former Ruth Brockman. They have three children.

Gary Bernard Bell earned his bachelor of science degree in pharmacy from the University of South Carolina and a doctor of medicine degree from the Medical University of South Carolina. He is a physician in private practice, and is married to the former Benetta Gadebeku. His wife is a dentist.

Janice Bell McDowell is the Bell's oldest daughter. She received her bachelor's and master's degrees in health education from the University of South Carolina. She is a public school health instructor and is married to Raymond McDowell.

Tom Jeffery Bell earned his bachelor of arts degree in art education from Benedict College, one of our Nation's historically black colleges. He is a public school art teacher and is married to the former Jacqueline Stewart.

Joyce Bell Washington earned a degree in science and commercial education from the University of South Carolina. She is employed as an insurance underwriter and is married to Dr. Eric Washington, a physician.

Janette Bell Damon earned her bachelor of arts from the University of South Carolina. She is a public school elementary teacher and is married to Bruce Damon.

Finally, Woodrow Anthony Bell, the Bells' youngest child, is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of the University of South Carolina's College of Pharmacy. He is currently a second-year medical student at the University of South Carolina's School of Medicine.

It is clear that the Bells have been successful—as parents, as husband and wife—and as black Americans. They have instilled in their children a work ethic and an appreciation of the importance of education which is invaluable and from which our Nation reaps tremendous benefits. I am proud that the National Black Family Summit, headed by Dr. Augustus Rodgers, recognized this exceptional family in such an outstanding manner; and I hope that others will follow their blueprint for success.

I would like to invite my colleagues to join me in honoring the entire Bell family by attending a small reception which will be held in my Capitol Office, room S. 238, this afternoon from 2 to 3 p.m. There are those who would say that the American family is an endangered species. The Bell family, however, proves that the American family is alive and well; and in this case living in the great State of South Carolina. I pray that God will continue to bless them all and I pray that God will bless America.

Mr. President, I ask that the names of the individuals, who served as members of the 1990 National Black Family Summit Program planning committee and have accompanied the Bells to our Nation's Capitol today, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the names were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Benny F. Clark, S.C. Health and Human Services Finance Commission.

Dr. Anthony Gore, Deputy Commissioner, S.C. Department of Mental Health.

Mr. James Hopkins, president, United Black Fund.

Dr. Jacob Jennings, vice president, University of South Carolina.

Ms. Ruth Martin, S.C. Department of Health and Environmental Control.

Mr. J.T. McLawhorn, president and ceo, Columbia Urban League.

Ms. Cynthia Pryor, Columbia Urban League.

Mr. Myron R. Robinson, president and ceo, Greenville Urban League.

Dr. Augustus Rodgers, executive director, National Black Family Summit.

Mr. James L. Solomon, Jr., commissioner, S.C. Department of Social Services.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senate now stands in recess until 2 p.m. today.

Thereupon, at 12:12 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2:03 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. KOHL].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for not more than 5 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TOM DUNAGAN

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, today I call my colleagues' attention to a man in my own home State who was recently spotlighted in the Idaho Press-Tribune for a lifetime of service. Tom Dunagan has been my friend for many years. He has managed the Marsing Labor Camp since 1961 and the Marsing Housing Authority since 1973. Tom's tenure in these offices was an era of growth and change for migrant housing with innovations and standards he set as camp manager.

The labor camp serves as the lodging for seasonal and year-round agricultural and migrant workers. Before Tom took over, the tenants had to haul their water from a hydrant and use common bathrooms. Largely because of Tom, the tenants today have private housing accommodations including toilets, showers, hot water, ranges, refrigerators, and air-conditioning. Tom's creed has been to "preserve the dignity of the individual and the family." He has earned the respect of everyone in the agricultural community in southwestern Idaho.

On October 15, 1989, Tom retired to enjoy life with his new wife, Florence, on their new farm. I wish both of them well in their retirement. I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I have referred to be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Idaho Press-Tribune, Feb. 28, 1990]

RETIREMENT HARD FOR LABOR CAMP CHIEF

(By Sandy Roberts)

The sign on the door reads Marsing Agricultural Labor Sponsoring Committee office. In simpler terms, the Marsing Labor Camp.

It is a man's office—a working man's office. No frills, nothing fancy. The walls are adorned with photos, certificates, mementos; the desk and cabinet tops covered with papers, books, more mementos.

A straggly looking plant hangs in one corner—a survivor of several near death experiences. Nursed back because it was a gift from a friend.

Two certificates of commendation to firefighting units from the labor camp hang there, left by the men who earned them. Given to their friend.

A statuette stands on the file cabinet bearing the words "To a helluva swelluva guy."

A U.S. Calvary bit and a pair of spurs hang on another wall—reminders of the days before he took this job. Days when he was cowboying.

The man matches the office. Tall, lean, white hair. Denim shirt, jeans. An old battered felt hat. No frills, nothing fancy.

Tom Dunagan, manager of the Marsing Labor Camp since 1961 and the Housing Authority for the city of Marsing since 1973, has been at home in the office for 28 years. Officially he retired Oct. 15, 1989, and unofficially, three months later.

It is the end of an era—one of change and growth—for Dunagan and the labor camp. Not much remains the same as when he took over.

Dunagan described the labor camp as an association-operated, private, non-profit organization. The Housing Authority is a quasi-political subdivision of the city of Marsing. There are 46 units in the "old labor camp" and 40 in the "new."

In explanation, Dunagan said what is called the old labor camp is for seasonal migrant field workers, whereas the new complex is for year-round agricultural and migrant workers. Units in the old camp are the pumice-block style. In the new camp there are 25 two-bedroom and 15 three-bedroom brick homes. They were the first of their kind in the nation and allowed migrant workers to live year-round in Marsing. In both camps there are toilets, showers, hot water, ranges, refrigerators, and refrigerated air conditioning.

"We were the earliest to have cold water sinks," Dunagan said with pride. "When I first took over, the tenants had to haul their water from a hydrant and there were common bathrooms."

In 1965 they installed private toilets and cold water sinks; the next year they put in showers and hot and cold water sinks; and in 1968 "we went all out," Dunagan said, "and designed the three-room apartments."

It is a source of pride to Dunagan to be able to say that the Marsing labor camps were innovators, that they initiated a number of "firsts" in the area of migrant housing.

Dunagan's creed has been to preserve the dignity of the individual and the family.

That creed led the phenomenon known as the "Dunagan Door." He calls it the privacy door. When the bathrooms were being built in the new camp, Dunagan fought for and got permission to install a door separating the bathing facility from the rest of the room.

Dunagan had a very active part in the design of the homes and the layout of the new complex. Each home is set on the lot in such a way as to give the most privacy. Windows don't face each other, no one lives looking into the house next to it.

"Don't wonder what we do all winter. There's always something," Dunagan said. Those months are used by Dunagan and his maintenance crew to paint, renovate, repair and make improvements in preparation for the coming influx of tenants. Heavy winds in a January storm damaged a number of roofs on some of the units in the old camp, making another chore for the crew.

In 28 years there have been a lot of changes, as would be expected. Gravel roads are now paved, open trenches have been covered over. Play areas with teeter-totters and swings and large grassy areas are there for the children's enjoyment. In a progress report early in Dunagan's tenure it said, "This camp is as good as can be expected because it is located in a rocky area."

Today, the rocks have been replaced by beautiful grassy areas. But all the changes are not ones seen as you look around the camp.

"Wages have tripled," said Dunagan. "In my first year $63,000 worth of business went through here. In 1989 that figure was in excess of $2 million."

Dunagan and his office staff pay each worker each week. The office is equipped with one of the most advanced payroll systems available. Local farmers and fruit ranchers can contract with the labor camp to have them handle the payroll of their work crews—many of whom do not live at the labor camp. The farmers are charged a bookkeeping fee for the service.

Advances in farming technology have also had a big impact on wages.

"When I first took over here," recalled Dunagan, "a man could work half an acre of sugar beets a day and we thought that was pretty good. Now a man can average an acre to an acre and a half.

"Long handled hoes have replaced the short hoes, mechanical thinners have taken over, and segmented seed and approved herbicide usage—all agriculture has come a long way.

"It's a lot easier now for farm workers. But it's still very hard work, demanding work. They are professional workers. Everyone thinks just anyone can do it, but that is wrong. The workers should receive a lot of credit for what's happened in Marsing," Dunagan said.

When tenants move into one of the camps, they will find the rent (along with the conveniences) about tripled since 1961—early rates were $5 and $8. Management takes care of maintaining the grounds, appliances and trash removal.

"We take care of these people," Dunagan acknowledged, "because they take care of us."

"They all like to come to Marsing," said Dunagan. "It fills up first. When anyone rents a house anywhere there are certain responsibilities that go with it. Here the tenants are required to pay a deposit. They know I expect to find things left in good condition.

"If they ruin a mattress, they've bought it."

Looking over the camps, Dunagan knows every blade of grass, every patch ever made, every improvement. He knows each tenant by name. He waves, steps out of his pickup to exchange a few words with people he sees. Some tenants in the new section have lived there many years. He's watched families come back each year, seen their children grow up and their grandchildren arrive.

Dunagan always tried to encourage the kids to stay in school, he said.

"I would browbeat them, praise them, scold them, whatever I thought would work," to get them to stay in school. One of the young girls he encouraged now holds a management position in a Health and Welfare office in Texas. She's just one of the real success stories he can relate.

He has kept in contact with many of the families. It is more than a tenant-manager relationship, they become friends.

"Always I have urged these people to upgrade their lifestyle and help broaden their lives," Dunagan said.

Often Dunagan has taken a tenant aside and encouraged him to "go into town and buy a little house."

"I can take your money each month and in 10 years you will have nothing. But if you get a little house of your own, your FHA payment won't be much more than here and at the end of 10 years you'll have something," he'd explain.

Through the years Dunagan has lent money to families so they could come to Idaho and work. A call to Dunagan telling of a car broken down somewhere on the road between Texas and Idaho would set him into action on the phone arranging details with a garage to fix it and get the workers back on the road. On occasion he set up credit at local stores for those who arrived without food or money.

"In every case," Dunagan said with emotion, "I was paid back."

To illustrate the bond between Dunagan and his tenants, he was invited to attend a party for his crew chief's granddaughter when she turned 15. He flew to McAllen, Texas, where 1,700 people celebrated in the rented McAllen Civic Center. He and his wife were two of only three non-Hispanics there.

Dunagan, who will be 74 next Flag Day, is a native son, born in Caldwell. He graduated from Wilder High School and attended University of Idaho for one and a half years—learning that teaching was not the life he wanted.

He is a 50-year member of the Masonic Lodge and a past exalted ruler of the Elks in Ontario, Ore., where he still serves on the state committee. He is past president of Treasure Valley Chambers of Commerce and was deeply involved with the realignment of Highway 95.

The Chamber battled long and hard to get the worst part of that roadway—that stretch from the Marsing "Y" over the hill to the Oregon state line moved and improved, Dunagan said. His files contain personal letters from Sens. Steve Symms, James McClure and Frank Church thanking him for his involvement in this project.

Dunagan is also director of the National Agricultural Employers whose office is in Washington, D.C. He has been on the board of directors for 14 years and on the executive committee for eight years.

The Idaho Statesman named Dunagan its "Distinguished Citizen" on Oct. 27, 1985, an honor that particularly pleased him as the same award had been accorded his sister some years before.

"My success, any accomplishments, are due to the cooperation of the farm employees, farm employers and members of the Labor Association and the board of directors," said Dunagan. "Without them we could have done nothing.

"It's traumatic for me. It's real difficult leaving."

What will he be doing when retirement really hits him?

"I don't know," he said honestly. "Friends want me to go fishing but they want me to use a hook! That's work."

Whatever path he takes in retirement, when Dunagan leaves the labor camp, something will be missing from his life.

When the workers return to Marsing this spring, something will be missing for them, too.

CAPITALISM AND APARTHEID

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, many foes of apartheid look to socialism as the answer to black oppression and discrimination in South Africa. However, Walter E. Williams, in his article entitled, "Triumph Over Capitalism" from the April 1990 edition of Reason magazine, suggests that "market forces actually undermine racial privilege." The racist goals of the white minority have been achieved only through heavy government regulation; such achievements could never have been the result of capitalism alone.

In this article, Williams compares the current labor situation of black South Africans to black Americans not long ago. From here, it becomes easier to understand just how and why the rules of apartheid are contrary to those governing our own free market system. The discrimination prevalent in the South African economy prevents efficiency.

Williams presents a unique opinion on an issue troubling many. Here is the economic answer to those who insist that socialism is the sole alternative to South African oppression. Mr. President, capitalism, when allowed to thrive independently, leaves no room for discrimination. The problem facing South Africans today is the abuse of power of an overly centralized government.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article, "Triumph Over Capitalism" from the April 1990 edition of Reason magazine, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, to summarize the conclusions of Walter E. Williams in his book, "South Africa's War Against Capitalism," apartheid is the antithesis of capitalism. Apartheid was founded on discrimination, and this discrimination, which is prevalent in the work force and labor laws, operates against the free market system.

National Review magazine has come to the same conclusion as I, Mr. President, when they say that apartheid may very well be the bain of an entrepeneur's existence. For this reason, approximately half of South Africa's businesses actually step around the rules of apartheid so as to operate efficiently—within the rules of a free market system.

In South Africa there persists a system of protectionism by and for the Afrikaners. Well now they are realizing how they are hurting themselves. According to Williams, "The whole ugly history of apartheid has been an attack on free markets and the rights of individuals and a glorification of centralized government power." The market, Mr. President, is the vehicle through which South Africa's people must fight their war against their centralized government."

I encourage my colleagues to survey Williams' book, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the review of "South Africa's War Against Capitalism" from the January 22, 1990, issue of National Review, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, immediately following that in the RECORD I ask pages 5 and 6 of this month's International Harry Schultz newsletter with respect to South Africa be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SOUTH AFRICA: TRIUMPH OVER CAPITALISM

(By Walter E. Williams)

Racism and capitalism have long been viewed as the twin pillars of apartheid, reinforcing each other while supporting a system of social, political, and economic repression. As a result of this mistaken view, black South Africans and their white benefactors have something in common with apartheid's architects; a hatred of the free market. But unlike the white supremacists, critics of apartheid who oppose capitalism fail to recognize that market forces actually undermine racial privilege. Instead, they conclude that a more just society can be achieved only through socialism. This view is all the more alarming given the changes sweeping South Africa.

The indictment of capitalism and market forces is reflected in statements by Archbishop Desmond Tutu, who, after winning the Nobel Peace Prize in 1984, told London's Sunday Telegraph, "I myself hate capitalism." Similarly, Chris Dliami, vice president of COSATU, a black labor union, has said, "The unholy alliance of apartheid and capitalism has become obvious and concrete. One cannot expect to eradicate it simply by removing apartheid. . . . What we are talking about is the total change of the present system."

Some South African whites, wanting a better life for blacks, share this view of capitalism. Raymond Sutter, an anti-apartheid activist, wrote in Business Day in 1985: "The struggle for the Charter is therefore an anti-capitalist programme, because any programme to end racial oppression in South Africa must be anticapitalist." Contributing to the connection between apartheid and capitalism in the minds of many South Africans are statements by government officials who refer to their economy as "our free-market system."

Contrary to these mutually reinforcing sets of beliefs, South Africa's apartheid is not a corollary of capitalism. On the contrary, apartheid is the result of socialistic efforts to subvert the operation of market forces. Indeed, it is the free play of market forces—with no intervention by political forces—that has always been seen as the enemy of white privilege and that apartheid ideology has always sought to defeat.

South Africa's history is riddled with white contempt for market forces, from the highest levels of government on down. In A Century of Wrongs (1900), Prime Minister Jan Christiaan Smuts wrote: "It is ordained that we [Afrikaners], insignificant as we are, should be amongst the first people to begin the struggle against the new world tyranny of capitalism."

In 1941, Volkshandel, an Afrikaner business publication, declared: "Every soberminded, thinking Afrikaner is fed up to the top of his throat with so-called laissez faire—let-it-be—capitalism, with its soul destroying materialism and the spirit of 'every man for himself and the devil for us all.' We are sick of it because of its legacy of Afrikaner poor whiteism and the condition which makes the Afrikaner a spectator in the business of his own country."

This fundamental hostility toward capitalism is not surprising when we consider that white hegemony in South Africa needs to be enforced by law. Indeed, the whole legal structure of apartheid is prima facie evidence that market forces, left unimpeded, would not achieve the results desired by the white supremacists. The history of economic regulation in South Africa reveals that racist goals have been served by heavy-handed government intervention, not by the operation of capitalism.

Such intervention occurred well before the establishment of the modern apartheid system, and it was often resisted by business people because it raised their labor costs and hurt their profits. Various laws passed around the turn of the century restricted the number of blacks that could be employed in mines and the kinds of jobs they could fill.

When mine owners broke agreed-upon employment quotas in 1922, white workers, led by socialists and communists, responded with the most violent strike in South African history. They paraded around Johannesburg chanting, "Workers of the World Unite to Keep South Africa White." The government used troops, artillery, and aerial bombardment to restore order. The incident led to the downfall of Prime Minister Smuts and the rise of James Hertzog, who campaigned on a promise to protect white workers.

Under Hertzog, the Industrial Conciliation Act (ICA) restricted the employment of blacks, excluded them from collective bargaining, and outlawed black unions. Later measures gave the labor minister authority to reserve specific classes of jobs for whites only in order to "safeguard against interracial competition."

If we assume that capitalism and apartheid are in accord with each other, these and many other measures to confer privileges on whites are puzzling. South Africa's businesses were owned by whites, so why were racially discriminatory laws necessary?

Clearly, white businesspeople and government officials, while sharing the ideology of white supremacy, did hire blacks in jobs that whites wanted. They did so because blacks were willing to work for lower wages—as much as 75 to 80 percent lower—which meant higher profits. Moreover, in some jobs, blacks were more productive than whites. Government officials saw hiring blacks as a way to meet labor shortages.

White workers, many of whom were no more skilled than black workers, opposed market allocation of resources because it would not pay them higher, "civilized" wages. They were quick to recognize that markets do not respect race. White workers therefore sought privilege through the political arena, urging the government to write laws that would undermine the black competitive advantage.

South Africa's racist agenda and attack on market forces included laws similar to measures widely supported in the United States. White supremacists advocated a minimum wage for blacks and argued that blacks should be covered by the same industrial labor laws as whites. In 1925 the white Mine Workers Union argued: "It is now a question of cheap labor versus dear labor and we consider we will have to ask the commission to use the word color in the absence of the minimum wage, but when that [minimum wage] is introduced we believe that most of the difficulties in regard to the color question will automatically drop out."

Such supporters of minimum wages for blacks and equal-pay-for-equal-work laws have not been motivated by humanitarian concerns. Indeed, wage regulation is one of the most effective tools in the racist's arsenal, because it makes cooperation with racist goals cheaper. By preventing blacks from underbidding whites, wage floors reduce the profitability, and hence the attractiveness, of hiring blacks.

Wage regulation, often known as "rate for the job," therefore served a purpose similar to that of job reservation, which was not nearly as successful as white workers had hoped. Racist unions often complained of violation, evasion, and contravention of job reservation laws by businesses. The unions griped that "there has been a cold-blooded sellout of white workers" and declared that "job reservation is a dead duck, therefore the only protection is a policy of paying the rate for the job."

Even government officials charged with apartheid enforcement would cheat by changing the names of "white" jobs so blacks could be hired; for example, shunters became marshallers and ticket collectors became ticket takers. Officials of the government-owned railways have been known to hire teams of black workers and sneak them in, under the cover of night, to illegally perform "white" work in the railroad yards. In response to objections to such practices in the early 1970s, the minister of transport said, "You want white railway workers. Find me them!"

During the 1980s, long before job reservation and most of the racially restrictive employment laws were officially repealed, they were being repealed by stealth through market forces. Such has been the fate of the Group Areas Act, still on the books, which restricts where people may live and work by race. In the metropolitan areas of Cape Town, Durban, and Johannesburg, which are by law white areas, many neighborhoods are integrated, often with whites in the minority. This is a result of market forces—shortages of housing in nonwhite areas and surpluses in white areas.

As the apartheid regime crumbles, there is a real danger that South Africa will exchange one oppressive system for another. The collapse of socialism in the Soviet Bloc gives hope that this danger can be avoided. Rather than fight capitalism, South Africa's people must strengthen their beleaguered market forces and declare war on centralized government power.

RIGHT BOOKS

If you were a white South African businessman, one with entrepreneurial proclivities and without racist blinders, you might very well despise apartheid. You'd realize how surely the system picks your pocket. Because that nation's black majority is unable to function actively as either a profit-aiding consumer market or as a cost-reducing labor market, whites receive diminished return on investment, and spend more to acquire goods and services; that's the cost of protecting white "privilege." The mechanisms of this protectionism are at the heart of apartheid, and they define, as Walter E. Williams summarizes in the title of his new book, South Africa's War against Capitalism (Praeger, 160 pp., $37.95).

This "war" is a part of South African history. Both J.C. Smuts and J. B. M. Herzog, two of South Africa's leading statesmen in the first half of this century, saw apartheid as the bulwark in a struggle against the "tyranny" of capitalism. More recent South African leaders have learned to soften anti-capitalist rhetoric, and to emphasize the "struggle" against the Communist leanings of the African National Congress. Professor Williams traces the economic history of apartheid, concluding that it "has been an attack on free markets and the rights of individuals, and a glorification of centralized government power."

But does it work? Yes and no. About 50 per cent of South African industries fudge apartheid restrictions in order to operate more efficiently, and such responses to market forces as have managed to flourish are in large measure responsible for the advances made by blacks, coloreds, and Asians. The market will probably be the death of apartheid, which is why disinvestment has been such a debacle for blacks and, in some ways, a boon to Afrikaners. American proponents of sanctions and disinvestment (Jesse and Teddy) ignore the very positive effects foreign companies have had in diminishing the reality of apartheid.

Some examples demonstrate how wrong-headed liberal good intentions (which, remember, pave the road to hell) have been: The twenty-year-old UN embargo on arms sales has succeeded in creating a booming arms industry in South Africa, thus strengthening its police powers. And the pullout of American and European corporations has meant that white South Africans have been able to acquire enterprises at deeply discounted prices, and have then been able to run the companies without regard for the free-market principles which were the hallmarks of the former American and European managers.

In the book's best chapter, "Apartheid: Rhetoric versus Reality," Williams observes that the "protection of white workers from open market competition with blacks was a costly proposition. . . . [W]age differentials . . . gave business considerable inducement to find ways to substitute black for white labor." The economic protection of whites produced—and it is ever thus in any "planned" system—unintended consequences. Most paradoxically, it created, sub rosa and de facto, the opposite of its intent: demand and opportunity for black labor. The market's momentum is unstoppable, and yet apartheid laws endure. Many whites refuse to do "kaffirwerk" at the very time when blacks, for market-oriented reasons, are making inroads into previously restricted areas of labor and enterprise. (Will white South Africans become redundant when, finally all work is kaffirwerk?) "Governments can legislate market restrictions," Williams writes, "but—try as they may—governments cannot legislate market forces completely out of existence." No, they cannot. American liberals might have helped end apartheid had they recognized the transforming power of markets, even when the markets aren't wholly free.

SOUTH AFRICA

This issue carries a special report on The Republic of South Africa (SA) by old friend Fred Macaskill, founder member of the Free Market Foundation of SA. . . . "The main issue in SA is power, not human rights. Sanctions haven't precipitated events, but uncontrollable govt expenditures. Only rich nations have resources to pay for socialism. Once rich, SA is now a pauper state due to socialist health, education, housing & transport, plus high defence costs. Analogies abound btwn E Europe & SA. Ultimately, economics & socialist waste forced both to change. However, 2 major differences exist btwn E Euro & SA: (1) SA applied socialism mainly to only 1 part of the pop—Blacks. (2) E Euro is abandoning socialism, while SA is increasing it.

The Players: The Nationalist Party (NP) plays shrewd politics & retained power over 40 yrs by disabling the opposition thru adoption of their policies. The NP's main opposition is the Conservative Party which holds to original NP policies. There are numerous black tribal & political groups. African National Congress (ANC) isn't the only or largest. The Zulus are the largest tribe under Chief Buthelezi, who has resisted apartheid nonviolently. While ANC urged sanctions, he objected, on grounds Blacks suffered most & weren't helped. Not surprisingly, there's conflict btwn ANC & Inkatha, Buthelezi's tribal/political group. The 10 tribal homelands in SA, & the black African Frontline states, are economically dependent on SA.

Conflict: In SA there's huge potential for conflict due to numerous differences btwn people—color, race, religion, culture, education, language, wealth, values, etc. But, conflict can be avoided if no force is used, if differences aren't imposed, but respected.

The problem: People are forced to live apart, accept a given education standard & prevented from trading freely. In SA conflict is caused by forced disassociation: in the U.S. by forced association. Further, Blacks have no vote & no political power within the system

Apartheid—facts & fallacies: Apartheid was practiced in SA by preventing Blacks from living in white areas, moving from rural areas to cities, holding certain jobs, having common transport & amenities & having mixed marriages. Most such laws have been scrapped or ignored. The govt applied socialism to apartheid, heavily subsidizing housing, health, education & transport for Blacks. The result left SA Blacks better off than Black anywhere in Africa. Govt socialism bled Whites economically. Tax levels are among world's highest & main beneficiaries are Blacks. Apartheid staved off communism which engulfed the rest of Africa, but with the int'l collapse of communism, it's time to abandon apartheid. The danger is black leaders may not understand the reasons & SA could belatedly still go communist. It's the SA govt's responsibility to prevent this calamity, but are they up to the task?

Nationalization is ANC's declared policy. Asset sales boost economies & give govts needed cash. But, if govt must privatize to get cash there's obviously no cash in the kitty. ANC talk of nationalization means confiscation which would violate individual rights as much as any apartheid laws. ANC merely wants power to increase SA govt socialism.

Redistribution of wealth is another term for nationalization. ANC doesn't realize apartheid's already redistributed wealth: Whites were taxed heavily for black amenities. Capitalism creates wealth & distributes to the most productive. Rich & poor both become richer. Socialism destroys wealth & redistributes to the least productive. Rich become poorer & poor starve. If Blacks want Whites' wealth, they should copy Whites' methods of creating it.

Sanctions are a hideous trap & fraught with danger for int'l community. Any govt imposing sanctions immorally restricts trade freedom. Thru sanctions, govts deprive their citizens of privileges they're seeking for others. Companies invest for profits & if capital or profits are threatened, they disinvest. This isn't sanctions, it's prudent business. The reality is most companies didn't withdraw from SA due to sanctions, but poor investment potential. Many nations were 2-faced, demanding sanctions while conducting business as usual with SA.

Communism: SA's weakness was apartheid. Int'l communism detected this & founded, funded, trained, & supplied ANC to undermine the SA govt. We must seriously question ANC concern for individual liberty & consider apartheid a tool to gain power. Altho communism is failing globally, including black Africa, it survives in the ANC, whose powerbase is built by recruitment & brutal intimidation. Murdering opponents by necklacing (burning people to death with a tyre round the body) created such an int'l outcry the ANC abandoned it for a while, but it's recently resumed. ANC was primarily funded by E Europe, but with communism's collapse, funding has dropped dramatically.

Negotiations: Peaceful negotiations are preferable to terrorism, sanctions & other hostilities. But, as govt agrees apartheid is wrong, believes in free mkts & accepts universal franchise, what remains to negotiate? It must be assumed the ANC's negotiating agenda will limit individual freedoms, & ANC calls to "negotiate" are a smokescreen. The solution: free the country & economy, enfranchise all, entrench individual liberty in a constitution & bill of rights, invite Blacks into existing political parties & fight a vigorous election. Chances are excellent the existing govt would be returned. The issue isn't Whites vs Blacks, but haves vs have-nots. Negotiating White vs Black, capitalism vs communism, minority vs majority, is a no-win approach. Inviting Blacks to participate fully in the system is likely to produce free & peaceful results. Rather than negotiate which ideals to sacrifice to the enemy, ally with friends to strengthen ideals & outvote the enemy. Blacks & Whites share many common ideals & there's no need to sacrifice anything to those exerting power thru intimidation.

ANC strategy: ANC is trying to set a torch to SA because they don't want equality or democracy, they want power. By creating anarchy they hope to negotiate in a climate of chaos. ANC's legacy is traditional communism where destruction of anything preventing total dominance is justified. However, the ANC was staggered by the sudden, drastic change in SA govt policy & collapse of E Euro communism.

Polarization: SA was right to fight communism, but many couldn't support the govt due to apartheid & econ policies. And we can't support the ANC for its terrorism & communism. It's right to be anti-apartheid, but wrong to be pro-ANC simply because it's anti-apartheid. An ANC regime would bring untold oppression to SA, far worse than former SA apartheid regimes. The dilemma can be resolved by taking the good from both sides, rejecting the bad on both sides, & refusing to take sides.

Revolution: There are 2 types of revolution. The 1st brings only leadership change (a revolt or coup); the 2nd, a total system change. SA doesn't need the 1st type, a new version of the old regime with different color skin, yet there are dire indications this could happen. The danger is SA's revolution will escalate beyond control of govt & other instigators.

Great expectations: ANC followers have been told they'll own Whites' possessions after revolution. There's only 1 way they can keep such promises—thru communism. If communism didn't exist they'd have to invent it to justify wealth redistribution. If ANC wants what Whites have, it's attainable: adopt a work ethic & practice birth control.

Power is what it's all about. The indiv is irrelevant & "human rights" & manipulation of the masses are leveraged in the power play. Part of the SA solution involves politicians relinquishing demands for power.

The future: Mandela grew up studying communism & ANC comrades spent decades in communist training camps. To ignore ANC intentions is to ignore reality. Under an ANC regime, nationalization of big biz, wealth redistribution, forced equality, a planned economy, drastic lowering of education & health standards, mass exodus of skilled labor, a productivity drop, bankruptcy of SA, starvation & hardship can be predicted. Widespread tribal conflict would open the way for brutal ANC intervention. Afrikaners would reverse roles & become Africa's new freedom fighters desperately seeking a homeland. Int'l consequences would surpass the severity of the 1973 oil crisis, & commodity mkts would yo-yo. With many Afrikaners in defence & police, a military coup is possible.

"What if?" all parties concerned took action to avert disaster. Like a runaway train, there are unstoppable forces in SA. Nothing can halt it, but with little effort, diversion from total destruction onto a track of controlled change would save SA. If politicians sought peaceful solutions instead of power, it could be done. But, they must act quickly before events overtake them. The following advice is tendered:

DeKlerk: You're in charge & most depends on U. A strong econ is vital to SA's future. Sanctions aren't the issue, investor confidence is & the econ will live or die based on it. To restore investor confidence, strengthen the econ & restore solvency to SA U should: implement a broad-based program to free the econ; discard all econ discrimination; privatize state-owned biz & most state functions, including education & health, remove trade restraints & exchange & import controls; abandon state monopoly on currency issue, end the Reserve Bank's pivotal role, remove state currency regulation; respect individual property ownership rights; decimate the bureaucracy; slash govt spending & stay in budget. These steps require great courage, but are less drastic than those already taken. Ignore advice of interventionist economists & academics who've long plagued SA & landed it in its current mess. Make total commitment to democracy & free mkts. Politically there's nothing to negotiate if you've created a truly democratic SA. If the ANC intends to destroy law & order, neutralize communism by ensuring the utmost individual freedom. Communism only thrives under largely centralized power. Enfranchise all adults, create a "system" to protect the individual, invite all races into your party & hold an election. The system ensuring individual liberty must be more important than all political parties or groups. It should consist of a subsystem of "checks & balances", a constitution & bill of rights. Checks & balances must include: an administration primarily for protection of individual rights; a legislature to make laws within constitutional limits & only on issues affecting all 4 provinces; an independent judiciary with power to overrule unconstitutional laws; entrenchment of Common Law; decentralization of govt functions to the lowest level capable of handling them; & independence of provinces. magisterial districts, & cities to conduct their own affairs. Set up independent body to create a constitution & bill of rights, consult world constitutional experts, local independent expertise (eg the Free Mkt Foundation) & politicans. A half-hearted approach won't do & quick, decisive action is required. Mr. deKlerk can't do all this alone & interested parties should give full support & participation.

The ANC: U need critical self-examination, then courage to change as dramatically as the SA govt. Instead of changing, you're becoming more entrenched in a failed int'l philosophy. U must recognize: 1) Wealth doesn't exist for redistribution. If U want wealth, create it. If U confiscate it (nationalize it) you'll destroy it. 2) You've suffered under a SA govt guilty of excessive intervention & socialism. To redress the situation U don't need more of the same, U need to eliminate it. Govts worldwide recognize this & are rapidly moving to democracy & freer economies. 3) Disassociate entirely from the communist party & PAC. Communism is dead & discredited worldwide. 4) Stop imposing values on others, you're committing the same mistake as past SA govts. 5) Stop making unrealistic promises to the masses. A communist SA would impoverish everyone. If U promise wealth, then preach capitalism & a work ethic, not terrorism & destruction. 6) A peaceful SA must prosper & investor confidence is essential. Investors won't invest in uncertainty. Your call for sanctions places U on the lunatic fringe. Whether U take this advice or not depends on whether your prime concern is your people or personal power.

Mr. Mandela: You're currently enjoying tremendous prestige due to historical circumstances & could enter history books as a great leader. But, if U continue supporting current ANC ideals you'll go down in history as the person responsible for destruction of a nation.

Extreme right: The force of change is bigger than U & resistance will cause greater problems. The advice to Mr de Klerk is what U seek. Blacks don't want domination by Whites & vice versa. The solution to Blacks' problems is the solution to your fears: govt power decentralization to the lowest level where indiv's have max power.

Homelands & Frontline States: The homelands' fear is the same as Whites': the smaller tribe being overcome by the ANC power mongers. Advice is to incorporate only if U don't give up what U have & ensure individuals have max personal freedom. It's in the best econ interests of Frontline States, to see a peaceful, prosperous SA. Besides adopting democracy & free mkt policies at home, pressure the ANC to do likewise.

Int'l community: Take no sides, but vigorously support "right" & condemn "wrong". Communism's collapse doesn't mean capitalism's triumph. Western govts' efforts to impose more controls on U. Silence translates to accept.

Investment advice: Though SA has boom potential there's currently no indication it'll be realised. The govt had made dramatic political changes, but the announced national budget isn't a free mkt budget, it's a socialist budget. Social spending in housing, health & education dramatically increased to 40% of budget. This reveals no comprehension of issues. Deregulation & less spending are needed in these areas. Blacks too, think they want more socialism. They want more controls, but want to be the controllers. Refrain from SA investment until it's clear SA will find a capitalist solution.

Impact: The global impact of SA events will be profound. SA's mineral resources play a strategic role in world economics & severe disruption of future mkts is possible. Solutions require exploring depths of individual liberty rarely found anywhere. Success would benefit all, failure would adversely affect the world economy for decades to come".

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as I indicated yesterday and earlier today, it is my intention to seek consent to proceed to the supplemental appropriations bill which was reported yesterday by the Senate Appropriations Committee. As we all know, under the rules of the Senate, any Senator may object until 2 days have elapsed following receipt of the report.

Since the report was available this morning, we would not, if consent is not granted, be able to proceed to that legislation until Friday morning.

In view of the fact that the principal aspect of this bill, and what I think is the driving force behind the bill, is the provision for assistance to Panama and Nicaragua, which the President has for some weeks been strongly urging Congress to act upon, it has been my hope that we could gain consent and proceed to this matter with a view toward completing action on it tomorrow.

That would not meet the President's originally requested timetable but would obviously be better than delaying it still further.

I have been discussing this matter with the distinguished Republican leader and, accordingly, Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consideration of Calendar No. 521, H.R. 4404, the supplemental appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair recognizes the Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Reserving the right to object, and I shall object, but I first want to state the reason or reasons.

I think, first of all, there is a feeling on this side that there was not any consultation on the bill itself. They were told at 4 o'clock to meet at 5 o'clock and that was the first notice they had had of anything in the supplemental. So I think there are some on this side who feel they at least should have had an opportunity to take a look at the report. These are members of the committee, not others.

Second, we do have one request, and we have now dispatched a copy of the report and copy of the bill to that Senator to give him an opportunity to take a look at it. He is not disposed to hold up the bill.

But then there is some controversial language in the bill that again was discovered in the bill. It was not offered as an amendment. It was just discovered in the bill, dealing with abortion, which is very controversial. It was passed last year. The veto was sustained when the President vetoed it. The President indicated he would veto the bill. He would like us to proceed to conference. But I have two Members on this side who have not yet made that determination. In other words, they feel that language is holding up a very important bill.

There are literally dozens and dozens of items in the supplemental in addition to aid to Nicaragua and aid to Panama. Someone indicated we have $2 billion worth of rescissions to get $600 million; $2 billion from the defense budget.

In any event, I will be working with the two colleagues who have indicated they would not consent at this time, and I hope the majority leader and I might confer later on, maybe in an hour. Maybe at that time we will be able to proceed to the legislation.

Having said that, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SPECTER. Will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPECTER. I share the majority leader's state of concern that there be a conclusion on the aid to Nicaragua, considering the fact that President-elect Chamorro is being inaugurated today. Perhaps she is now President Chamorro.

On aid to Panama, I have been asked why we had not moved on these measures before. I understood the majority leader's concern not to move until we finished the Clean Air Act, which we have been very actively engaged in since January 23.

I was at the Appropriations Committee markup yesterday. We did mark up the bill. It was a complex matter with a great many items to be considered, because we had not had much time to review it.

I direct a question to the distinguished majority leader that I think many people are wondering about, and that is: What precluded our taking up this issue immediately or shortly after the disposition of the Clean Air Act?

Mr. MITCHELL. Obviously, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, the Senator is aware that I could not bring a measure to the floor until it was reported by the Appropriations Committee, particularly a supplemental appropriations bill.

The action by the Appropriations Committee occurred yesterday, and I am now seeking to bring the measure to the floor the following day. I am pleased to discuss it further.

There were some additional complications arising out of other matters, particularly with respect to getting final approval of the child care conference, which were resolved yesterday. That is a matter on which I have had discussions with the distinguished Republican leader, with the President, and many others over a period of time.

I am glad to get into such detail as the Senator desires in that regard. We are now trying to move this bill. I stated on several occasions we have not met the President's requested timetable. And while I regret that, I do not see that serves as any basis for further delay. That is, I hope we can proceed as soon as we can.

I stated openly, and acknowledge and repeat now, that any Senator is within his or her rights to object to consideration of this measure until Friday, under the Rules of the Senate. That is an appropriate mechanism which has been used frequently by Senators on both sides to make certain they have a chance to study the bill and the report.

It does pose a difficult problem for us, because not only does this delay final action on this bill, but it creates a situation in which the Senate has no other activity pending before it, a matter which I hope to discuss with the distinguished Republican leader shortly.

Mr. SPECTER. If the distinguished majority leader will yield for just a moment, I quite agree there is no point going back over the long history as to where we have been.

I do believe the Appropriations Committee was in a position to have acted earlier and the matter could have been brought up earlier, but all of that was yesterday. I will join the distinguished majority leader in urging my colleagues to move as promptly as possible.

I had occasion to be in Nicaragua and Panama over the recess. I believe there is an urgent need that the U.S. Government respond with the kind of support which we have committed. The Appropriations Committee yesterday voted the full $300 million for the new government, and the Sandinistas are waiting in the wings to point out that the United States is not fulfilling its commitments; it weakens President-elect Chamorro's government. It is something we ought to act on as promptly as possible.

Panama is a similar situation. We had a spirited debate yesterday in the Appropriations Committee, but we did pass by either 15 to 14 or 16 to 13 a $420 million figure for Panama.

What is going on in Panama today is really heroic. In just a very brief time, we have a President and Vice President of that country who have been victimized by brutality. President Endara was smacked across the head with a lead pipe, almost murdered. Vice President Ford was plucked out of the car with a metal instrument which grabbed him by the shoulder and pulled his tendons out, and he had 22 stitches across his head and 9 stitches across his eye.

Those men, and the gallant other men and women of Panama, are trying to keep that country together. So it would be my hope, whatever differences exist in this body, that we can put them aside procedurally to at least tackle those two items because those nations are waiting and the reputation of this Government is on the line.

When I have been asked why the Senate has not responded to the House bill and I start to go through the various matters which have been alluded to, the listener does not understand it, and after a while I do not understand it either. So I just hope we could sweep the underbrush aside, wherever we have it, and move forward as promptly as possible to complete action on this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if I might say one thing, it may not be possible, but if we can get an agreement on this side to proceed almost immediately, if the committee amendment on page 57, lines 5 through 10, can be withdrawn—that is the controversial abortion language I referred to, something the President certainly did not request; it does impede progress as far as getting money to Panama and Nicaragua, if we withdraw that part, then it could be offered on the floor where we would have a chance to debate it. I do not think we have any objection to that. If the votes are there, it can be put back in the bill. That is a possibility.

Mr. MITCHELL. I appreciate the suggestion, and, of course, will discuss it with the chairman.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for morning business until the hour of 3:30 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). Without objection, there will be a period for morning business for 1 hour, to extend until 3:30, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The Senator from New Hampshire.

JUDICIAL TAXATION

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, last Wednesday the Supreme Court rendered a preposterous decision which repudiates a core premise of our system of constitutional democracy. The rallying cry of the American revolution was, "Taxation without representation is tyranny," but in its 5-to-4 opinion in the Missouri versus Jenkins case, the Supreme Court turned back the clock on American democracy. It held that unelected Federal judges can order new taxes and tax increases.

Mr. President, this is the ultimate excess so far at least, of judicial activism. Some 200 years ago the great Chief Justice John Marshall warned us, "the power to tax involves the power to destroy." That is why in our Constitution the framers were careful in the first article to ensure that the power to tax rests squarely, exclusively, solely, unequivocally in the elected legislature.

Only the elected legislature has the power to enact taxes or to raise taxes. Only those who, unlike judges, lifetenured Federal judges, have to stand for reelection periodically have the power to raise taxes. That is why the Supreme Court's approval of judicial taxation is so alarming. It is a decision that demands congressional response.

In the Jenkins case, an unelected Federal judge usurped the taxing power in order to fund lavish new facilities for a magnet school. That judge claimed that the construction of an elaborate model United Nations, indoor swimming pool, plush carpets, and the like were necessary to achieve better racial balance in the public schools. This illustrates the basic flaw in the reasoning of those who defend judicial taxation on the grounds that there can be no limits of any kind on judicial power to fashion remedies for constitutional violations.

It enables a judge to assume unfettered power to impose taxes and to undercut State budgetary policy merely by finding a single constitutional violation in a single case.

Justice Kennedy stated it well in his stinging dissent from the Court's approval of judicial taxation in which he was joined by three other Justices. He said, accurately, the ruling is "an expansion of judicial power beyond all precedent." He further stressed that "today's casual embrace of taxation imposed by the unelected, life-tenured Federal judiciary disregards fundamental precepts for the democratic control of public institutions."

Justice Kennedy also explained that the doctrine of judicial taxation approved in the Jenkins case can be applied in a wide variety of other cases involving prisons, hospitals, or other public institutions. For example, Federal courts are now free to order tax increases to fund expanded prison facilities in a large number of States that are under Federal court orders concerning crowded prisons.

In my own State of New Hampshire, we do not have a State income tax because the people have not seen fit to adopt one, but under the Jenkins doctrine, the people be damned; an unelected, lifetime tenured Federal judge can order the enactment of such a tax, against the will of the people, against the will of their elected representatives, whose views will count for nothing if such a judge is of such a mind. A Federal judge could order the State of New Hampshire to adopt a State income tax if he considers it necessary to fund some sweeping constitutional remedy.

Fortunately, Mr. President, Congress is not powerless in the face of this naked usurpation of our powers. We need not stand by idly while the Federal courts usurp the taxing power which, under the Constitution, is ours exclusively.

At the start of this Congress, I introduced S. 34, the Judicial Taxation Prohibition Act. This bill would exercise congressional power under article III of the Constitution by simply providing that the lower Federal courts do not have jurisdiction to order new taxes or tax increases. This is a court-limiting bill, Mr. President. It is the use of that power which the Congress clearly has but a power which the Congress should use only in the rarest circumstances, and this is one such circumstance, a clear-cut case, a flagrant case of judicial usurpation of congressional prerogative, a clear-cut case of judicial excess and arrogance, a dangerous case, may I say. If my time has expired, I ask unanimous consent that I might have another 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. In this case Mr. President, this limitation on the jurisdiction of the Federal courts is appropriate, reasonable, clearly constitutional, and utterly necessary if we are to be true to our oath to defend the Constitution.

Congress has in other cases limited the remedial jurisdiction of the Federal courts, such as under the Norris-LaGuardia Act, and the Supreme Court unambiguously has acknowledged that the Congress has the constitutional power to do this. It is only a question of whether the Congress wants to acquiesce in taxation by judicial fiat and the imposition of taxes by life-tenured judges or it wishes to take constitutional steps to remedy that usurpation.

The American people surely do not want taxation by judges. Tax burdens are large enough even when they are imposed by elected legislatures. Congress owes the people, it owes posterity, it owes our forebearers, it owes the Constitution prompt action in this matter. We have the power to prevent this new form of taxation without representation, for that is precisely what it is, taxation without representation, and we should exercise that authority promptly.

I urge all of my colleagues, therefore, to join the 21 Senators now cosponsoring S. 34 and urge the Judiciary Committee to schedule a hearing forthwith in the matter.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. SYMMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS].

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I compliment the Senator from New Hampshire. I should like to associate myself with his remarks and ask that, if I am not one of those 21 Senators, to please add me to that list. I stood on this floor yesterday and sponsored legislation with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] on this issue. It sounds as though Senator HUMPHREY has been ahead on this for some time now. I compliment him for it.

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I mentioned Lithuania yesterday, but I want to bring it up again today.

First, however, I ask unanimous consent that an essay by William Safire, from the New York Times, on April 23, 1990, "World to Vilnius: Suffer," be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, it appears to me that Americans through silence must not allow what is happening in the Baltics to continue. There are many ways, I believe, we could bring about a worldwide focus of attention on the injustice that is being done to the good people of Lithuania, and probably will soon be done to Estonia and Latvia.

Mr. President, there is the United Nations. If it is to be of any value, why not bring up this subject at the United Nations and focus attention on it? Let us have a debate on it. There is the World Court. The Senator from New York and I discussed that yesterday. In fact, he has introduced legislation which would ask for an advisory opinion of the World Court on the question of Lithuania.

Senator MOYNIHAN made the point on the floor yesterday that Hitler sold Lithuania to Stalin and then Stalin took Lithuania at gunpoint. It probably is not something that would stand up even in the World Court, but certainly it seems it would be appropriate for the United States to press for such recognition and to press for debate.

It seems to me, without aggravating or heightening any tensions between us and the Soviet Union, certainly we could at least recognize and exchange Ambassadors immediately with Lithuania and give those people the recognition they deserve.

Mr. President, there are many other things that could be done, and I will leave that to others, but some have been mentioned today, I think by the distinguished Senator from Colorado: Technology transfers, economic credits, extension of credits, and other things. But for us to do nothing I think will not bode well for us in the future, because, if we here in the United States are unable to even muster enough courage to speak up for freedom, then who in the world, I ask my colleagues, is going to do it? Are we simply so terrorized and frightened by the fact that we have allowed the forces of unilateral disarmament to so weaken us that we are standing captive to the targeting of thousands of nuclear warheads the Soviets have aimed at the United States and we have no defense against? Is that our problem?

No one is saying that. I ask that as a rhetorical question. If that is not our problem, what is it that makes the United States so fearful to stand up for these people who have been forced at gunpoint into an empire which they do not want, and now in their hour of need when they want to get out, with the slightest bit of recognition from us, where are all of our allies in Europe? Is this just another Munich that is taking place before our very eyes? A simple capitulation on principle of our foreign policy?

I urge my colleagues and the administration to rethink the position that this great Nation of ours has with respect to these people in Lithuania and give them the respect and treatment that they so deserve.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

[From the New York Times, Apr. 23, 1990]

WORLD TO VILNIUS: SUFFER

(By William Safire)

WASHINGTON.—When an individual becomes a dissident, he or she is seen by the outside world as a hero: a Sakharov or Mandela stirs the conscience of the world. But when a captive nation becomes a dissident, its resistance to oppression becomes an inconvenience to mankind; it is accused of being an impediment to the Big Picture, a threat to worshipers of the idol of Stability.

That is why European industrialists who insisted that the Kremlin would never use its natural-gas pipeline as a weapon are now so silent at the cutoff to Lithuania. (No mask can be worn to protect civilians against the cutoff of natural gas.)

That is why polls say American public opinion treats the reach for independence by the dissident nation to be an annoyance, prefering 2 to 1 that our President continue his policy of paying lip service to the Lithuanian assertion of longstanding independence—while supporting Gorbachev and protecting the summit meeting.

We have been sold a bill of goods. We are told that we have a great stake in the personal success of Mr. Gorbachev; that his success depends on his absolute control of the Kremlin; and that he would lose control to some neo-Stalinist faction if his freeing of Central European nations extended to the three Baltic republics which were grabbed a few years earlier.

The opposite is true. Our interest in Mr. Gorbachev is limited to his ability to withdraw troops from illegally seized nations and to speed the transition to political and economic freedom; his motive to make these reforms is rooted in the fear of the failed system's impending collapse; and by not putting a price on his reversion to command control, we remove a central impetus for the growth of democracy.

Does pressing Mr. Gorbachev to acknowledge the independence of the Baltic states really jeopardize, as White House backgrounders argue, our greater objective of troop withdrawal and missile reduction?

A minority thinks not. We believe that the West's toleration of his decision to make economic war on a conquered nation that now dares to assert its freedom is not merely morally wrong, but geopolitically unsound. It breaks the democratic momentum. Our failure to denounce the threat of "presidential rule"—the euphemism for dictatorship—bolsters the imperious inclinations of the Soviet strongman and undermines sensibly radical reformers.

But Mr. Bush, following isolationist public opinion in the U.S., and under the cloak of "consultation" with European leaders eager to abandon the idea of collective security, is temporizing. The great symbolic dish of the Bush White House kitchen has become the waffle.

In light of this tepid support, what should besieged Lithuanians do?

Negotiating in a vacuum is a non-starter. Offering concessions when the other side answers only with a blockade is taken as weakness rather than reasonableness. The cap of independence has been tossed over the wall; the declaration cannot be undeclared without abject surrender.

Counting on the West for help at the start is another mistake. Our nervous doves (worried about nuclear shakiness of a disintegrating Soviet Union) combine with our ultra-pragmatists (worried about a future charge of "Who lost Gorbachev?") to say: America has other fish to fry.

Armed revolt is not an option: as one Balt told me, "there are no hills here—we cannot do an Afghanistan."

What's left? Suffering and lamentation; sustained resistance and dramatically expressed resentment; refusal to be starved into submission.

Public suffering can be a powerful force, as individual dissidents have demonstrated. Freedom never comes easily, and rarely does it come from outside.

To prick the conscience of the world, Lithuanians will have to do more than line up cars at gas stations. They will have to parade their jobless, show the ravages of Gorbachev's blockade on their children, passively torment their oppressors and become the grim example of the failure of glasnost.

Moscow's no-gas attack is effective, as is occupiers' brutality, the takeover of printing plants and the imposition of a quisling prosecutor.

But relentless resistance in the cause of long-denied independence begets the shame of bystanders; growing shame changes public opinion; and rising outrage could force politicians to offer recognition, a sealift, serious countervailing economic pressure.

Mr. Gorbachev will set the Baltic nations free only if he must. The Balts, by their courage and willingness to suffer, can shame the world into making sure he must.

Mr. DIXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I am glad to hear my friend from Idaho express his views about the Lithuanian matter.

I came here this afternoon largely because I am concerned there may be a perception in the country that all of us are entirely satisfied with the manner in which the administration is handling this matter to date.

I would like to start by reading parts of an editorial from the Washington Post today, which I think expresses to some extent my view. It is an editorial I am sure my distinguished friend in the Chair has read, entitled "The Lithuanian Case."

It says:

President Bush is proceeding very gingerly in his support of Lithuania and its right to choose its own future. Understatement can be useful in diplomacy, but beyond a certain point the message becomes inaudible. Mr. Bush was careful to say yesterday that he has reached no decision yet on his next steps. He is clearly trying to separate his support for Soviet internal reforms and his encouragement of Soviet arms reductions from any condemnation of the Soviets in the Lithuanian case.

He went on to explain that he's anxious not to do anything that "compels the Soviet Union to take action that would set back the whole case of freedom around the world." That's where he gets into trouble. "Compels" is an odd word to have used, implying as it does that the Soviets would have no choice, implying even that they would be justified in their action. Surely what the president meant was that the Soviets might be tempted to act or to use stern action by him as a justification. It's important not to get caught in the trap of tolerating the Soviet squeeze on Lithuania out of fear that protests might induce the Soviets to do worse. And it is also important not to go on and on about the limitations we feel on our ability to act and how anything we do might have a terrible impact and so forth. It's one thing to accept reality and recognize these limitations on what we might do and the complicated nature of our interests in Eastern Europe. But it's another to wax endlessly on how circumscribed we are. A little more reticence on this point would help.

I ask unanimous consent that the balance of the column be reproduced in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The administration is considering economic retaliation against the Soviets for their embargo of their oil and gas to Lithuania. But for the present, Mr. Bush says, he is continuing to try to encourage negotiations between the Soviets and the Lithuanians. Negotiations—if they are true negotiations—are desirable, and he is right to press and press hard on this point.

Lithuania sets a towering precedent for the Soviets in dealing with all of their restive minorities and outlying republics. That's the dilemma that faces President Gorbachev: he knows that whatever happens in Lithuania, he's got to be prepared to apply the same rule to all the others who are now talking about independence—not only the other Balts but the Georgians and the Ukrainians and the rest. Forcible repression means a march back to Stalinism and farewell to any hopes for economic reform. But independence for Lithuania leads in the direction of dissolution of the Soviet Union.

The immediate issue is the degree of coercion that the Soviets are applying to the process. By bringing the entire republic of Lithuania to a halt, the Soviets are creating a degree of crisis that will generate something other than a cool atmosphere for long talks. The danger in the United States' muted response so far is that it is susceptible to being misinterpreted as acquiescence, encouraging the Soviets to go farther.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, to close, I quote directly, "The danger in the United States' muted response so far is that it is susceptible to being misinterpreted as acquiescence, encouraging the Soviets to go farther."

I will just go beyond that and say this: I agree that infinite caution is required here, but I think we have now advanced to the state where our caution does us a great deal of damage in the eyes of the world. Lithuania, after all, was gobbled up by the Soviet Union 50 years ago. It is a part of the Soviet Union against its will. Mr. President, in as much as the United States has always cherished freedom, we owe Lithuania more than we are doing now. I suspect that others will begin to express this view shortly.

Still, there is something we should do if the Soviet Union is going to begin to put economic strangulation into effect against Lithuania. We have to make some kind of response. I find it absolutely ludicrous for us to carry on trade talks with the Soviet Union to advance that country to a most-favored-nation status while they are carrying on in this manner against Lithuania.

You know, I would go along with the majority of those in this country who believe Mr. Gorbachev is certainly preferable to many others as the leader of the Soviet Union. But to suddenly exalt him and place him in the position where all good things flow from Mr. Gorbachev is utterly ridiculous.

The changes we see today in Eastern Europe, in Poland, and in a lot of other places—are springing more from the breasts of the Lech Walesas and the people like him, than from the desire of Mr. Gorbachev. He is behind the curve, not in front of it. I think we would do well as a Nation to remember this simple fact.

We owe more to Lithuania than we are doing for her now. If I have correctly perceived in the last couple of days a sort of a national sense that we should be quiet now, then I guess this Senator from Illinois is here to say, I am tired of being quiet.

On the night we considered the Helms resolution, I was inclined to vote for it. Others on the floor came to me and persuaded me to do otherwise on the grounds that we should move slowly, that we should give the administration the benefit of the doubt, that we should be reluctant to immediately grant recognition. There were a lot of good arguments. In the end, I did not vote for that resolution and supported and cosponsored instead the resolution unanimously adopted on the next morning, as the Chair will remember.

I have no regret for that.

May I have an additional 2 minutes of time by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIXON. I was satisfied, Mr. President, to do that. In regular interviews from that time until this moment I have been reasonably supportive of the administration. As one in leadership on this side of the aisle, I have said repeatedly, politics should end at the water's edge. I do believe that. I think my record here on the floor over the years stands as proof of that belief.

But now we are being overly cautious. We are not responding adequately to the problem there. The people in Lithuania, the 200,000 free Lithuanians in the State of Illinois, Americans generally, and freedom-loving people around the world have a right to demand of us more than total indecision, but an incisive response that we do not see now. I think, Mr. President, this is a critical point. I do not think there is anyone in this body who wants to dash out and do the irresponsible acts that could bring us to some kind of difficulty in the world, but I think all of us here believe we should be taking some responsible action.

The Senator from Idaho touched upon some. I see the Senator from New Hampshire on his feet, I see the Senator from New York stayed on his his feet, there may be others, and there may be a lot of ideas about what we can do. But the point is, the administration should be giving some profound thought to the things we can do to send a powerful message in support of a fine, small nation that has the right to be free, and deserves a better and a more effective policy by the United States to support that right.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO].

LITHUANIA

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I have been accused of being outspoken on the issue of Lithuania. Some said Senator D'AMATO went to Lithuania for publicity. That is true, at the invitation of President Landsbergis, of Lithuania, who, after we discussed that the Soviets indicated they would not issue a visa said: "I will issue a visa. I will send the Foreign Minister to meet you in Warsaw. But we think it is important that we show the people of Lithuania those who love and cherish freedom have not forgotten us that we are not alone in our struggle."

Then to read his words today where he has likened the response of the West and the United States to the tragedies that befell Europe and the world prior to the outbreak of World War II, where he compared Czechoslovakia to the modern day Lithuania, moved me to speak out once again.

Mr. President, I think Gorbymania is now a national disease. What has happened is that we have allowed ourselves to be so clouded and blinded by Gorby, this wonderful person who has brought us perestroika and glasnost, who is the hope of freedom, that we are powerless to act. It is argued by those who would stand by and do nothing that lurking in the wings are powerful forces that would plunge us into the cold war. Who controls the KGB? Who is it that rivals Mr. Gorbachev? Even those who hold him in the greatest esteem would acknowledge that he controls the KGB, and the army, lock, stock, and barrel, so we have one or two of the so-called hardliners who may hold Gorbachev's power at risk.

Mr. President, why is it that we have had the Soviets turning to the West, making concessions to the people who are demanding freedom? It is because communications today have shown them that their system is bankrupt, and the people throughout the world do not live for the state but have a basic right of freedom. They yearn and crave for it, and they stretch for it. The Communist system has demonstrated its total inability to feed its people and to meet their needs.

I would suggest it was no act of benevolence or charity that lead to Mr. Gorbachev's actions with Poland. Let me suggest to you that one of the great speeches given to the joint session of the Congress was given by Lech Walesa, and the words that he gave to Congress as we sat enraptured by him are as applicable today as they were when he gave that speech on November 15, 1989.

Here is Lech Walesa speaking to the last session of the Congress, speaking of Poland's effort to be free, he said:

In those days, at the beginning, many warnings, admonitions, and even condemnations were reaching from many parts of the world. "What are those Poles up to?" we heard. "They are mad, they are jeopardizing world peace and European stability. They ought to stay quiet and not get on anybody's nerves."

Mr. President, I would suggest that is the same thing that is being said today. He went on further to say:

We gathered from those voices that the other nations have the right to live in comfort and well-being, they have the right to democracy and freedom, and it is only the Poles who should give up these rights so as not to disturb the peace of others.

I have to tell you when I hear and see the editorial writers and the commentators, to one extent or another, they are saying the same thing: "Keep quiet. Do not rock the boat. Do something, but don't do anything."

The most incredible article I ever read—a piece of garbage by Al Neuharth, USA Today's founder—was entitled, "Gorbyache: Those He Fed Now Bite Him." I would suggest that Al Neuharth look at the history books, and tell me when the Soviets fed the people of Lithuania. Those he fed now bite him and then he has a quote, a famous quote, from Edmund Burke: "They will turn and bite the hand that feeds them. * * *"

The article is as follows:

GORBYACHE: THOSE HE FED NOW BITE HIM

(By Al Neuharth)

*"They will turn and bite the hand that feeds them. * * "—British statesman Edmund Burke, 1800.

I revisited Moscow last week for the first time in a year and a half.

Then, glasnost (openness) and perestroika (reform) were new. Most Soviets still were skeptical whether Mikhail Gorbachev really meant they could speak their minds.

Now, most believe he's sincere. And many have marched in the streets to give him hell as a result of it.

As I jogged through Red Square, past the Kremlin and by Lenin's tomb during the ceremonial and colorful 7 a.m. changing of the guard last Wednesday, I wondered:

Is Lenin laughing now?

Or crying?

For it was he who wrote in Pravda in 1920, "Why should freedom of speech and freedom of the press be allowed? . . . Ideas are much more fatal than guns."

His successors followed Lenin's line. Guns kept ideas in the closet, until Gorbachev took over in 1985. Since Gorby opened that closet, frustrations long pent up have poured out.

The USA holds sundry similar examples of the suppressed or oppressed overreacting after the shackles come off. Free at last, the temptation is to exercise all that freedom—fully, quickly and sometimes unwisely. Often, it means biting the hand that freed or fed you.

Lithuania is the latest and most ludicrous example. Mostly misunderstood in the USA, misconstrued by many in the media.

There is little more logic to Lithuania being permitted to unilaterally and unlawfully declare its independence from the USSR than there would be for Texas to secede from the USA. Both were grabbed during a war. But both owe much to their modern-day mother country.

Gorby has a right to be livid about Lithuania. The way you might feel about a runaway child, tempted to beat him within an inch of his life.

I hope he will continue to just scold the brat, take away a few privileges, maybe even some necessities, but not beat him up. And forgive.

I know how Gorby feels. In recent years, some people I favored or fostered over a quarter century have turned and bitten my hand. But those bites don't hurt as much if you learn to shake them off, smile and reconcile.

That's my recommended cure for Gorbyache.

"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."—The Bible, Luke 23:34.

Some parts of this article bear reflection.

He said there is little more logic to Lithuania being permitted to unilaterally and unlawfully declare its independence from the U.S.S.R. than Texas being allowed to secede from the U.S.A. I wonder what history school he went to? Where did he learn to read and write? Did he not learn about the annexation? Did he not read it, or did he not care, or do the facts not matter? Lithuania was asking illegaly for its independence?

What a perversion of the facts. He says it would be analogous for Texas—this ought to really get them—to secede from the U.S.A. Both were grabbed during a war. But both owe much to their modern-day mother country.

Mr. President, I think that is the kind of logic we see today. He goes on further and gives hype to this Gorbymania. Are we becoming so blinded by our hope for peace? I want peace. I want us to negotiate verifiable treaties as I know the President does. I want to see us compete in the area of economic co-operation, but I do not believe we have the right to sacrifice somebody's freedom.

I do not believe we have the right to say Lithuania today—and Lord knows who tomorrow. I do not believe we have the right to create the myth that he is not using force and aggression. Economic force and aggression in this case can be as powerful and brutal a tool as any tanks coming. This is mowing the people down, and the Soviets are masters of that. They did it to the Ukrainians when 7 million people starved during the so-called Stalin famine.

The Neuharth article goes on and it says, "Gorby has a right to be livid about Lithuania."

I guess the Lithuanian people do not have a right to freedom, a freedom that was taken away by force in 1940. Neuharth apparently feels that Gorbachev has the right to feel about Lithuania the way you might feel toward a runaway child, tempted to beat him within an inch of his life.

What great logic. Incredible. I think the article is most incredible. I cannot believe it. He ends this entire article with a quote from the Bible, Luke 23:34: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Mr. Neuharth, at least you have the right, regardless of how illogical, regardless of how perverted and distorted the facts are that you present, to say that. Lithuanian people should have the same right to call for their freedom. I do not believe that this Nation, a nation that prides itself on its history, a history of immigrants who came to this country from all the various backgrounds from the days of the Pilgrims, to our more recent forefathers who came to escape repression, whether it be religious, whether it be to seek economic opportunity, can ignore the imperatives of history. That is the greatness of this country. We cannot turn our backs nor should we.

Let me conclude, Mr. President, by saying that I am deeply, deeply concerned about the lack of action being taken by this administration. Unfortunately, yesterday's refusal by our President to impose sanctions makes it seem that our call for freedom is nothing more than rhetoric. I say to my President, who I support—and with all due respect—that the struggle for freedom in Lithuania deserves our wholehearted support.

If we have to tell the Soviets there will be no summit because we are not going to trumpet you, Mr. Gorbachev, as a knight in shining armor, then so be it. We cannot again decide who shall have freedom. I think we have to let the Soviets know that we will not improve our economic ties with them until they negotiate with a free and independent Lithuania. I do not understand how saying that is a provocative statement, how saying that could endanger world peace.

Mr. President, until we have the courage to stand and act in this manner, I am afraid that we are a nation that builds its policy on the basis of one man. That is not a sensible way to build our foreign policy.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

THE NEED FOR ACTION ON LITHUANIA

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am struck by the coincidence—and it is a coincidence, for none of this was orchestrated—that within the last half hour or so the Senator from Idaho, the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from New York, and now the Senator from New Hampshire have risen to speak about the inaction on the part of the Bush administration to effectively deal with the crisis in Lithuania.

So the spell of silence has been broken, Mr. President. That spell of silence to which the President has alluded in recent days has been broken. I predict that, notwithstanding Soviet efforts to suppress the cruel news, as reports come out of Lithuania, of men, women, and children suffering because of this cruel Soviet boycott, more and more Senators and Members of the House are going to come to the floor and roundly criticize the administration for its unprincipled policy with regard to this situation.

Mr. President, throughout the last half-century, under 10 administrations, the United States has maintained a principled and determined policy of refusing to recognize the Soviet annexation of Lithuania. We have refused to recognize the annexation for the simple reason that the annexation was the result of a plot involving Hitler and Stalin. We have refused to recognize the annexation because it is and was and forever will be unlawful.

Yesterday, against that history of 10 administrations, the Bush administration dishonored the principled conduct of this country toward Lithuania and the Baltic States. By refusing to respond in any meaningful way to the Soviet bullying of that country, this administration has cruelly let down the Lithuanian people whom it had encouraged as recently as last week to expect moral support from the United States in the form of sanction against their tormentors. Last week, the White House said that it would respond to an oil embargo with sanctions. Yesterday, the President announced he has decided no action is called for at this point. Thus, in 1 week, Lithuanian expectations were raised only to be cruelly dashed a few days later. Who can therefore, blame President Landsbergis for the bitter disappointment which he has expressed?

Mr. President, this Senator, I suppose like so many other Senators, has remained silent over the last several weeks, wishing to give the benefit of the doubt to the President in this difficult matter. But my discomfort has grown week by week. It is no longer a discomfort; it is embarrassment and shame. Are we prepared to let the Soviets destroy the independence movement in Lithuania as long as the process is accomplished slowly? So it would seem, based on White House inaction.

Are we prepared to acquiesce in the Soviet subjugation of the newly elected Government of Lithuania as long as that subjugation is done by embargoes instead of tanks? Apparently so, based on White House inaction.

Are we prepared to accommodate the bludgeoning of the Lithuanian people, including children, as long as the club used is oil embargoes and other embargoes of essential commodities instead of military instruments? So it would seem, based on White House inaction.

Well, Mr. President, we have given the President the benefit of the doubt. We have been patient. We have been silent. But the time for silence is passed. Our response to the Soviet abuse of the people of Lithuania is as unprincipled and as infective as our response to the abuse of the people of China by the Peking Government.

We are asked to be patient. We have been patient. We have been patient on China and nothing good has happened. And we have been patient on Lithuania and nothing good has happened. The time for silence is passed. We are not children. We understand the broad issues at stake in the relations between the United States and the Soviet Union. Everyone understands the importance of continued progress in reforming the Soviet system. Certainly the United States should encourage such reforms. Without any doubt, the United States benefits from such reforms. But the time has come to ask the question, at whose cost do we benefit? It is time to ask the question, at what price do we benefit? It is time to ask the question, at what sacrifice of our principles do we benefit?

Are we prepared to abandon Lithuania in its hour of desperation? Are we prepared to sacrifice the principle that people are entitled to be free? Are we prepared to sacrifice the principle that a nation illegally annexed is a nation that has never lawfully lost its independence? Are we prepared to say that the end justifies the means? Are we prepared to say that Lithuania is after all a small country and therefore our principles do not apply? That is the message. The message is yes. The inaction on the part of the White House sends the answer to those questions in the affirmative.

Mr. President, the Lithuanians are reaching out to us, desperately reaching out to us for moral support. They do not expect an invasion. They do not expect a Berlin airlift. But they would like some shred of moral support. And what have they got? Dashed hopes. Not a shred of meaningful support has been forthcoming. And, therefore, Mr. President, it is not only a time for the end of silence, it is a time for sanctions. It is a time for a principled response to Soviet bullying.

The hard-nosed, selfish pragmatism that has characterized our policy for the last several weeks is unbecoming to this Nation. More and more, it makes us look cynical. More and more, I believe the American people will find their stomachs turning in disgust and shame as reports of human suffering filter out of Lithuania despite Soviet suppression of the news. And that suffering will come. It is only weeks away.

We have treated Lithuania like a nuisance. We have suggested that their yearning for independence is an inconvenience. We have suggested that they be more patient. We have suggested that they postpone their freedom.

Well, Mr. President, it is awfully easy to suggest postponing someone else's freedom; is it not? I wonder what we would have thought if the Government of France, during our revolution, said, "Get lost, kid, you bother me. I have got bigger fish to fry. Put it off for a few years; then maybe we can attend to it." If that had been the case, we might well still be a colony of the British Empire.

To suggest the Lithuanians postpone the reassertion of their lawful independence is so cynical and self-serving on our part that, frankly, it turns my stomach.

It is time for sanctions, Mr. President. Our colleague from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] earlier today, in his always masterful fashion, cataloged in great detail the sanctions that are available to us, from small to very large. Therefore, it is not necessary for me to repeat them.

There is no call for belligerence toward the Soviets. But there is certainly a need for a principled response from this administration that matches the commitment expressed by the preceding administrations. It is time to draw a line. It is time to say enough. It is time to start a process of sanctions, modest at first, sterner if needed later.

We have sat still while the Soviets have tied a noose around the neck of Lithuania. We have sat still while Soviet tanks and armored personnel carriers rumbled menacingly through the streets of Vilnius. We have sat still while Soviet soldiers occupied key city buildings. We have sat still while Soviet soldiers dragged away Lithuanian youth resisting an unlawful draft. We have sat still while armed Soviet soldiers seized Lithuania's printing plant, brutally beating those Lithuanians who stood in their way. We have sat still and we have sat still. And now, Mr. President, it is time to stand up. It is time to stand up for principle and it is time to stand up for Lithuania. Enough watching and waiting. It is time for action. It is time for concrete deeds. It is time for sanctions.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

FLAG DESECRATION AND A 14-YEAR-OLD'S VIEW

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to bring the following essay to the attention of my colleagues. This work, written by 14-year-old Kelsey Watkins from my home State of Utah, analyzes the debate on the flag desecration issue. At this time, especially considering recent developments, I thought it would be most appropriate to share this with the Senate. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Kelsey Watkins' essay on flag desecration be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the essay was ordered to be printed in the RECORD; as follows:

Is it or isn't it constitutional to burn the U.S. flag? This is a very controversial question. Recently, the U.S. Supreme Court made the decision that according to the first amendment, Americans have freedom of speech, and according to them, burning the American flag is a freedom of one's expression. This is the beginning of the argument that is still being discussed today.

Many Americans were upset at the new verdict. Doesn't the United States have enough pride in its country to not allow such a disgrace? The U.S. flag is a symbol of freedom, it represents our country. When Betsy Ross created the first American flag, did she or anyone else intend it to be used for burning because we have "freedom of expression?" Did our founding fathers really give us this absurd freedom?

Many citizens of the United States believe that the burning of the American flag is not an expression of free speech. One citizen replied, "The idea that American citizens can burn our country's symbol is imbecilic. The Supreme Court decision that it's an expression of free speech is ridiculous. The verdict is simply an exaggeration of that amendment."

Some Vietnam veterans also had an opinion. Sergeant Major disagrees, "I don't believe it, I just don't believe it! You can go out here and say what you want and I'll back you on it. I don't have to agree with you. But don't touch anything tangible that belongs to the United States, as far as I'm concerned. I fought four wars to protect that right. If that guy [Gregory Lee Johnson] comes down here, I'll probably wind up in jail, 'cause I'm going into combat again."

Another sergeant gropes to express what the flag means to him, "It's very hard to explain. It's like electricity: You can see the results but you can't see the electricity. It's a non-tangible item which is a thought; it's within your heart. I don't know what else I can say. I was brought up that way." Address such a question to the mothers whose sons and daughters make up the more than 58,000 names on the wall who were given the flag that draped the casket of their child. Ask them what the flag means. That's the only thing they got back."

A lasting remark made by Sergeant Major was, "We'll fight to the death to protect your right to say what you want to, but don't desecrate that national symbol."

The U.S. flag to many people is like a religion. Religion is something you live and die for. "The Star-Spangled Banner" is based on the flag. Every verse in it is about the flag. Francis Scott Key was sitting there locked up on a ship, looking out the portholes at the battle that was going on, and the only thing he looked for was a flag; he finally found it, and felt safe.

The veterans at the memorial fought for our flag. Some of the only motivation they had was at night to look up and see the flag still waving. A navy man, Thomas Campbell adds, "There are many wounds that run a lot deeper than people think."

Senator BOB KERREY, a Democrat from Nebraska, agrees with the decision. "There are many patriotic Americans who believe that the toughest but best way to show respect for the flag—to show why we are so different from those in Beijing who massacre protesters—is to protect even the freedom of those who would desecrate this symbol of our freedom."

The Supreme Court held a 5–4 ruling in the Texas case that desecration of the flag was protected under the Constitution's first amendment guarantee of free speech insofar as the act of destroying the flag amounted to communicating a political point of view. Who knows how much longer this ruling will last. It is an unfortunate development in constitutional law that symbolic gestures and physical manifestations have been given that legal credibility and equivalent protections of the written or spoken word.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 1,866th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

I would also ask unanimous consent that a Washington Post and a New York Times article giving certain details about Robert Polhill's captivity be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 25, 1990]

FREED HOSTAGE DESCRIBED AS "VERY HUNGRY"

(By Marc Fisher)

WIESBADEN, WEST GERMANY, April 24.—Freed hostage Robert Polhill lost 25 pounds and much of his muscle mass during his 39 months of confinement in Lebanon, but stayed sharp by maintaining his sense of humor and his anger at his captors, an Air Force doctor said today.

Polhill continued to eat ravenously on his second day away from the Shiite hostage takers who had fed him irregularly and poorly. He is eating four meals a day and has made special requests for spare ribs, as well as for a pair of decent shoes.

"For a man who is 55, he looks a good deal older," said Col. Kenneth Koskinen, the Air Force surgeon who has been treating Polhill. "The man is just malnourished and very hungry. He's essentially emptying our kitchen."

Koskinen said Polhill "has significant muscle wasting," a result of having been kept from most exercise for such a long time, but is in good spirits. "He was very angry and is still angry. He said it was very difficult to channel that anger."

Despite the uncertainty of his situation, his complete isolation from the outside world and persistently uncomfortable conditions, Polhill never thought he would be killed, U.S. officials here said.

In the past three years, Polhill and his fellow hostages were given reading matter only rarely (he once got a copy of the British magazine the Economist). They had nothing with which to divert themselves other than each other's company and playing cards supplied by their captors.

Today, Polhill spent several hours with State Department debriefers, who were eager to find out about his fellow hostages and about the conditions in which he was kept. He also spent private time with his wife and two sons, who arrived this morning from the United States.

Although Polhill seems clear and level-headed now—surprisingly so, doctors say—it is still far too early to know if he will suffer from the post-stress syndrome of depression and fatigue that has affected many former hostages. Many effects of a long period of confinement take "several years" to emerge, Koskinen said.

The former accountant, who was a business professor at Beirut University College when he and three other instructors were kidnapped in January 1987 by pro-Palestinian terrorists posing as campus police, will heal physically quite quickly, doctors say. "In three months, you probably won't recognize him," Koskinen said.

Polhill, who came out of captivity knowing nothing about events of the past three years, has peppered the hospital staff with questions. He wanted to know who won the World Series and Super Bowl over the last few years. He had to be told that the Berlin Wall had fallen. And it was unclear today whether he knew whom he was going to be speaking with when he was told Sunday that he would have a phone conversation with the president of the United States.

Polhill is said to be deeply concerned about the future of his fellow hostages, especially Alann Steen and Jesse Turner, the Beirut University College instructors still being held, with whom he shared a room for most of his captivity.

In his initial conversations with U.S. officials, Polhill has said that although he and his fellow captives were moved frequently from one location to another, they were always kept together in windowless rooms under constant guard. They never knew whether it was day or night.

U.S. officials here said that Polhill, Steen and Turner were almost certainly kept in various places in Beirut, possibly in a building with other hostages. But officials could not say which other hostages were involved, nor even if they were Americans.

Neither Polhill nor officials here have come up with any explanation of why his captors, the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, chose Polhill to set free at this time.

U.S. officials here said that although Polhill has cooperated with State Department debriefers, he has measured his willingness to talk against his fear that giving away details could harm his friends in captivity.

"He is very aware that if he says something negative, it could have a negative impact" on Steen and Turner, Koskinen said.

That is also one reason why Polhill has not spoken to reporters here. Polhill, who is still speaking in the low, thin voice that his captors required, plans to stay in Wiesbaden for several more days.

[From the New York Times, Apr. 25, 1990]

HOSTAGE WAS HELD IN A BUILDING WITH OTHER CAPTIVES, U.S. SAYS

WIESBADEN, WEST GERMANY, April 24.—Robert Polhill spent most of his captivity in a room with two fellow hostages and probably in the same building that held other Western captives in Lebanon, United States officials said today.

Some details of Mr. Polhill's captivity emerged as a team of American investigators began questioning him today about what he knows of other captives in Lebanon and the Shiite Muslim militants who hold them.

The 55-year-old business professor was reunited with his two sons today for the first time in more than three years.

Mr. Polhill, a New Yorker, has been staying at the American Air Force Hospital in Wiesbaden with his wife, Feryal. His sons, Stephen, 26, and Brian, 23, arrived this morning from the United States.

HOSTAGES MOVED REGULARLY

American officials, who asked not to be identified, said Mr. Polhill, was held in the same room with the American educators Jesse Turner, 42, of Boise, Idaho, and Alann Steen, 51, a Boston native. All three were seized on Jan. 24, 1987, from the American University in Beirut campus, where they had taught.

"There's a possibility he was held in the same building with other hostages," an American officials said. "We're fairly certain of that."

The official said he did not know which of the 17 Westerners still in captivity might have also been held in the building. Seven Americans are among those held.

"We know from various sources where the hostages have been held," the official said, explaining that they were moved regularly.

And a London newspaper, The Independent, reported that several dozen Shiite prisoners held in southern Lebanon by an Israeli-backed militia would be released in the next few days as part of a deal that resulted in Mr. Polhill's release. Militia officials said Monday that its leader would decide today whether to free some of the group's 300 prisoners to mark the end of the Islamic Ramadan fast.

Mr. Polhill will spend several more days at Wiesbaden before returning to the United States, the hospital's medical director, Col. Kenneth R. Koskinen, said.

In Lebanon, a pro-Syrian militia leader said today that he was working for the "speedy release" of two kidnapped Swiss Red Cross workers.

The leader, Mustafa Saad, who heads the leftist Sunni Muslim Popular Liberation Army that controls the southern port of Sidon, told reporters. "We're in contact with several parties concerned to ensure the speedy release of the Swiss captives."

The two Swiss, Emmanuel Christen, 33, and Elio Erriquez, 24, were kidnapped by unidentified gunmen on Oct. 6. The police and other security sources blamed the Palestinian terrorist Abu Nidal, whose group has denied the accusation.

SUBSTANCE ABUSE DURING PREGNANCY ACT

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced legislation, the Substance Abuse During Pregnancy Act of 1990, S. 2505. I learned this morning that the bill inadvertently was not printed in the RECORD.

Therefore, I rise today to ask unanimous consent that the Substance Abuse During Pregnancy Act of 1990 be printed in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2505

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Substance Abuse During Pregnancy Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act:

(1) SECRETARY.—The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(2) SUBSTANCE ABUSE.—The term 'substance abuse' means the use of controlled substances, as defined in schedules I and II of section 202 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 812), the possession or distribution of which is unlawful under such Act, or excessive or injurious ingestion of legal substances, including alcohol.

(3) SUBSTANCE-ABUSED INFANT.—The term 'substance-abused infant' means an infant who is born addicted or otherwise injured or impaired by the substance abuse of its mother.

SEC. 3. TREATMENT.

Section 509F of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa-13) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 509F. GRANTS FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

"(1) EDUCATION AND SKILL-BUILDING SERVICES.—The term 'education and skill-building services' means services for pregnant and post partum women who have completed substance abuse treatment, to prepare the women to care for and support their children in an environment free of drug and alcohol abuse.

"(2) OUTREACH ACTIVITIES.—The term 'outreach activities' means services that identify substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women for prenatal health and substance abuse treatment, encourage the women to seek prenatal health services and substance abuse treatment early in their pregnancy, and educate the women about the risks of substance abuse during pregnancy.

"(3) POST-TREATMENT SERVICES.—The term 'post-treatment services' means services that reduce the risk of recurrence of drug and alcohol use by pregnant and post partum women who have successfully completed substance abuse treatment programs.

"(4) SUBSTANCE ABUSE.—The term 'substance abuse' means the use of controlled substances, as defined in schedules I and II of section 202 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 812), the possession or distribution of which is unlawful under such Act, or excessive or injurious ingestion of legal substances, including alcohol.

"(5) SUBSTANCE-ABUSED INFANT.—The term 'substance-abused infant' means an infant who is born addicted or otherwise injured or impaired by the substance abuse of its mother.

"(6) SUPPORT SERVICES.—The term 'support services' means child care, transportation, and other services that enable substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women and their infants to participate in treatment programs.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, shall make grants to eligible entities to provide inpatient, outpatient, and residential substance abuse treatment programs for substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women and their infants.

"(c) USE OF FUNDS.—An entity may use grants under subsection (b) to provide, arrange for the provision of, or refer individuals to—

"(A) services for substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women, including—

"(i) substance abuse treatment services;

"(ii) support services;

"(iii) education and skill-building services;

"(iv) prenatal and post partum health care services;

"(v) outreach activities; and

"(vi) post-treatment services; and

"(B) services for substance-abused infants and siblings of substance-abused infants that reduce or eliminate the impact of substance abuse on children, including intervention, treatment, or rehabilitation services.

"(d) GRANT AWARDS.—

"(1) CONSIDERATIONS.—In making grants under subsection (b), the Secretary—

"(A) shall ensure that the grants are reasonably distributed among projects that provide inpatient, outpatient, and residential treatment;

"(B) shall ensure that at least 40 percent of amounts available during any given fiscal year will be made available for residential treatment programs in which at least 60 percent of substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women receiving services are in treatment by order of a court of law or other appropriate public agency; and

"(C) may distribute grants to projects in which the children of substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women remain with their mothers during treatment.

"(2) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit the Secretary, in the awarding of grants under subsection (b), to discriminate against applicants that propose or provide inpatient, residential, or outpatient rehabilitation services under applicable requirements of State law, including applicants that provide services to substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women that receive treatment by order of a court of law or other appropriate public agency, so long as all such applications shall include measures that encourage substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women to seek prenatal care and rehabilitation.

"(e) APPLICATION.—In order for an entity to be eligible for a grant under subsection (b), the entity shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such agreements, assurances, and information, as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this section.

"(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $200,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1995.".

SEC. 4. TRAINING.

Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 509G (42 U.S.C. 290aa-14) as section 509H; and

(2) by inserting after section 509F (as added by section 3 of this Act) the following new section:

"SEC. 509G. TRAINING OF HEALTH CARE PERSONNEL.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

"(1) SUBSTANCE ABUSE.—The term 'substance abuse' means the use of controlled substances, as defined in schedules I and II of section 202 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 812), the possession or distribution of which is unlawful under such Act, or excessive or injurious ingestion of legal substances, including alcohol.

"(2) SUBSTANCE-ABUSED INFANT.—The term 'substance-abused infant' means an infant who is born addicted or otherwise injured or impaired by the substance abuse of its mother.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall make grants to eligible institutions to enable the institutions to train health care personnel to identify substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women and substance-abused infants.

"(c) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under subsection (b), an eligible institution shall submit an application to the Secretary—

"(1) that contains a plan for training individuals to recognize the signs and symptoms of alcohol and drug abuse by pregnant women;

"(2) that contains a plan for training individuals to recognize in newborn infants the signs and symptoms of fetal alcohol syndrome, physical drug dependency, or other congenital conditions caused by prenatal drug and alcohol exposure;

"(3) that contains a plan for development of appropriate curricula and materials for the training described in paragraphs (1) and (2);

"(4) at such time and in such manner as the Secretary determines necessary to carry out this section; and

"(5) that contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines necessary to carry out this section.

"(d) ELIGIBLE INSTITUTIONS.—Institutions eligible to receive a grant under this section shall include schools of health professions, allied health professions, nursing, social work, and public health, and other institutions determined to be appropriate by the Secretary.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1991 and such sums as may be necessary for subsequent fiscal years.".

SEC. 5. FOSTER CARE.

Title II of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978 is amended by inserting after section 203 (42 U.S.C. 5113) the following new section:

"SEC. 203A. GRANTS FOR FOSTER CARE PLACEMENT OF SUBSTANCE-ABUSED INFANTS.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

"(1) SUBSTANCE ABUSE.—The term 'substance abuse' means the use of controlled substances, as defined in schedules I and II of section 202 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 812), the possession or distribution of which is unlawful under such Act, or excessive or injurious ingestion of legal substances, including alcohol.

"(2) SUBSTANCE-ABUSED INFANT.—The term 'substance-abused infant' means an infant who is born addicted or otherwise injured or impaired by the substance abuse of its mother.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall make grants to eligible entities to increase incentives for foster parents to care for substance-abused infants.

"(c) USE OF FUNDS.—An entity may use grants under subsection (b) to—

"(1) conduct outreach activities to recruit foster care parents for substance-abused infants;

"(2) provide financial assistance for costs associated with the care of a substance-abused infant, including medical, educational, and other support service costs;

"(3) offer financial incentives to recruit foster care parents for substance-abused infants;

"(4) provide training to foster parents for the care of substance-abused infants, including training on the special health needs of the infants; and

"(5) conduct other activities that encourage foster care placement of substance-abused infants.

"(d) GRANT AWARDS.—In making grants under subsection (b), the Secretary shall give priority to those applicants that operate in a geographic area where substance abuse has placed substantial strains on social service and law enforcement agencies and has resulted in substantial increases in the need for incentives and services that cannot be provided without funds available under this section.

"(e) APPLICATION.—In order for an entity to be eligible to receive a grant under subsection (b), the entity shall submit an application to the Secretary—

"(1) at such time and in such manner, and containing such agreements, assurances, and information, as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this section; and

"(2) that contains an explanation of reasons why grant assistance is necessary to ensure foster care placements for substance-abused infants.

"(f) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to receive a grant under subsection (b) shall include State agencies, local agencies, community-based organizations that provide foster care placement services for substance-abused infants, health care providers (including hospitals) that provide temporary care to abandoned substance-abused infants, and other appropriate entities that provide temporary care for substance-abused infants.

"(g) GRANT LIMITATIONS.—Total financial incentives and assistance authorized for foster care parents under subsections (c)(2) and (c)(3) shall not exceed in any year the greater of—

"(1) $12,000 per substance-abused infant; or

"(2) the total health care, educational, and other necessary support service costs associated with the care of the substance-abused infant.".

SEC. 6. CHILD WELFARE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title I of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act is amended by inserting after section 107A (42 U.S.C 5106a-1) the following new section:

"SEC. 107B. GRANTS FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE INTERVENTION SERVICES.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

"(1) SUBSTANCE ABUSE.—The term 'substance abuse' means the use of controlled substances, as defined in schedules I and II of section 202 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 812), the possession or distribution of which is unlawful under such Act, or excessive or injurious ingestion of legal substances, including alcohol.

"(2) SUBSTANCE-ABUSED INFANT.—The term 'substance-abused infant' means an infant who is born addicted or otherwise injured or impaired by the substance abuse of its mother.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall make grants to eligible entities to enable the entities to identify, monitor, place, and track substance-abused infants.

"(c) USE OF FUNDS.—An eligible entity shall use grants under subsection (b) to improve the delivery of services to substance-abused infants. The entity may use grant funds to—

"(1) provide additional training for personnel responsible for protecting children from substance abuse, including training to recognize the signs and symptoms of alcohol and drug abuse by substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women;

"(2) provide expanded services to deal with family crises created by substance abuse;

"(3) monitor substance-abused infants and siblings of substance-abused infants; and

"(4) establish or improve coordination between the entity administering the grant, and—

"(A) child protection and welfare organizations;

"(B) hospitals and health care providers;

"(C) public health and mental health professionals;

"(D) child advocates;

"(E) public educational institutions and job training agencies;

"(F) community-based organizations that serve substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women and their infants;

"(G) public housing officials;

"(H) public safety and justice services;

"(I) persons who provide shelter to abused and homeless females and families;

"(J) parents and representatives of parent groups; and

"(K) drug and alcohol treatment providers.

"(d) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an entity shall submit an application to the Secretary—

"(1) at such time, in such manner, and containing such agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this section;

"(2) that contains an assurance that the entity operates in a geographic area where substance abuse has placed substantial strains on social service and law enforcement agencies and has resulted in substantial increases in the need for services that cannot be met without funds available under this section; and

"(3) that contains an assurance that services provided to substance-abused infants shall be coordinated and comprehensive.

"(e) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to receive a grant under subsection (b) shall include State and local agencies that are responsible for administering protective child services or child abuse intervention services, including agencies responsible for administering foster care, child welfare, child protective services, and child abuse intervention programs.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT TO TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of such Act (42 U.S.C. prec. 5101) is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 107A the following new item:

"Sec. 107B. Grants for substance abuse intervention services."

SEC. 7. STUDY OF IMPACTS OF SUBSTANCE ABUSE ON INFANTS.

(a) STUDY.—The Secretary shall arrange for a study to—

(1) provide an analysis of the historical development of the problem of substance-abused infants;

(2) determine the number of substance-abused infants born annually;

(3) project the number of substance-abused infants expected to be born through 2000;

(4) determine the impact of substance abuse during pregnancy on infant mortality;

(5) assess the annual costs associated with providing inpatient residential drug treatment to substance-abusing pregnant and post partum women and their infants, including prenatal and postnatal and medical services, drug abuse treatment and education services, crisis counseling services, support group services, parent training services, and child developmental services;

(6) assess annual costs associated with the care of substance-abused infants, including medical, educational, developmental, social, and fiscal costs;

(7) determine the portion of the costs identified in paragraph (6) that are assumed by Federal, State, and local governments; and

(8) project the costs associated with the care of substance-abused infants, as identified in paragraph (6), through 2000.

(b) ARRANGEMENTS.—

(1) APPLICATION.—The Secretary shall request the National Academy of Sciences and the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development to submit applications to conduct the study required by this section.

(2) ORGANIZATION.—If either the Academy or the Institute, but not both, submits an acceptable application, the Secretary shall enter into an appropriate arrangement with the organization that submits the acceptable application. If both the Academy and the Institute submit an acceptable application, the Secretary shall enter into an appropriate arrangement with both organizations. If neither the Academy nor the Institute submits an acceptable application, the Secretary shall request one or more appropriate nonprofit entities to submit an application to conduct the study and may enter into an appropriate arrangement with the entity which submits the best acceptable application.

(3) FUNDING.—The Secretary shall compensate the organization that conducts the study under this section for the actual expenses incurred by the organization in conducting the study.

(4) CONSULTATION.—The organization that conducts the study under this section shall consult with the Director of the National Institutes of Health.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to Congress a report containing the results of the study conducted under this section.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, to be available without fiscal year limitation.

SEC. 8. STUDY OF DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES AMONG SUBSTANCE-ABUSED CHILDREN.

(a) STUDY.—The Secretary, acting through the National Institutes of Health, shall conduct a study to identify children, including children receiving assistance under the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9831 et seq.), who were exposed to substance abuse during the pregnancy of their mothers. The program shall evaluate the developmental disabilities of the children.

(b) CONFIDENTIALITY.—The Secretary shall keep confidential the identity of the children evaluated in the study conducted under subsection (a).

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 5 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to Congress a report that contains—

(1) the findings of the Secretary with respect to the study;

(2) the recommendation of the Secretary for the most effective methods to ensure the proper development of the children and the costs associated with the implementation of the methods; and

(3) any other information that the Secretary determines appropriate.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, to be available without fiscal year limitation.

SEC. 9. STUDY OF TECHNIQUES TO DETECT SUBSTANCE ABUSE DURING PREGNANCY.

(a) STUDY.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the National Institutes of Health, shall conduct a study to—

(1) describe available testing and screening techniques for detecting substance abuse during pregnancy, and determine the costs associated with administering each technique;

(2) evaluate the effectiveness of urine toxicology screening to detect substance abuse during pregnancy;

(3) compare the effectiveness of alternative testing and screening techniques, including thin layer chromatography and fluorescent polarization immunoassaying technique, with the effectiveness of urine toxicology screening to detect substance abuse during pregnancy;

(4) identify and describe new testing and screening techniques to detect substance abuse during pregnancy, including a description of costs associated with the administration of such new testing and screening techniques; and

(5) provide recommendations as to the most effective testing and screening techniques to detect substance abuse during pregnancy.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to Congress a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, to be available without fiscal year limitation.

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE ARTS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the op-ed page of yesterday's New York Times contained a disquieting exchange of letters between Joseph Papp, producer of the New York Shakespeare Festival, and John E. Frohnmayer, Chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts.

I have spoken to the subject on this floor in the past, and do not wish to go on in length. Might I simply say that Mr. Papp's letter confirms my objection to legislative proscriptions in the funding of the arts.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the op-ed article from the Times be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Apr. 24, 1990]

I'M A PRODUCER, NOT A CENSOR

Since October, recipients of grants from the National Endowment for the Arts have been required by law to sign a pledge that the monies will not be used to produce works that contain "depictions of sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children or individuals engaged in sex acts and which, when taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political or scientific merit." On April 9, Joseph Papp, producer of the New York Shakespeare Festival, sent the following letter to John E. Frohnmayer, chairman of the Endowment.

DEAR MR. FROHNMAYER: The fracas over the obscenity issue and N.E.A. grants sprang into sharp focus upon my receiving your letter of approval in response to a New York Shakespeare Festival application for $50,000 toward the cost of our annual Festival Latino.

Your letter pressed me to note that acceptance of this grant was predicated on my observance of the restrictions contained in a recently passed piece of legislation affecting obscenity and N.E.A. grant giving.

I am warned herewith that if any of the works covered by the $50,000 grant to Festival Latino contained some aspect of the enumerated prohibitions (primarily of a sexual nature) the Festival may find itself in violation of its agreement with the N.E.A., if not the law as well. Such violation, though not specifically stated, would produce some punitive action, the least of which being a demand for the return of the grant and possibly being denied any further support from the N.E.A.

As head of a major theatrical institution, I have always cherished my freedom, defending it whenever it was challenged. My privileged right to make my own judgment in choosing this over that and that over this regardless of great varieties of societal pressure have been matters of principle, taste and artistic standards. To be asked, after meeting the tests of 35 years, to yield to circumscription and legislative prohibitions in the most vulnerable and inexplicable area of the arts, its content, is unthinkable, if not downright subversive.

Even if I did submit to the signing of what amounts to a loyalty oath, how am I to decide what others consider obscene? My personal views of what constitutes art and morality, may, and probably do, widely differ from those of the legislators who conceived the obscenity measure. And must I play the censor too, subject all plays and films from Latin America to microscopic scrutiny for some clue to sexual "aberration"? Who knows where sex may be lurking and in what disguise? I have no way of invoking community standards as some would have it. With what yardstick am I to measure the community standards of Rio de Janeiro?

With some dismay I have learned that a number of my colleagues will accept N.E.A. grants despite the restrictive clause in their agreements. The rationale is completely understandable: it is difficult to stand on principle when the need is so great. Further, it seems they are confident that reauthorization of N.E.A. funding will pass, and, in all likelihood, minus the restrictions.

I wish I could share this optimism. Perhaps time will prove this assessment to be correct. At the moment, I have serious doubts that reauthorization can make it through without some accommodation to the foes of N.E.A. I hope I'm wrong.

Right now, we need the $50,000 for the Latin Festival. To obtain this money, I am being asked to be party to a design which, in my opinion, is an abuse of the fundamental ethic in artistic endeavor. I have no desire to grandstand on this delicate issue. I certainly have not the slightest desire to push you into a corner. I do not want to break the law. I do not wish to relinquish the $50,000 grant. I do not wish to go through the motions of "signing" our agreement with the knowledge that I am bound, at one point or other, to violate, unwittingly, the prohibition I promise to observe.

Is this a dilemma, or isn't it?

We need the $50,000 for the Latin Festival, but something in my mind, my throat or my heart tells me not to go along.

What to do, Mr. Chairman? Your comments are eagerly awaited.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH PAPP.

On April 13, Mr. Frohnmayer sent the following reply:

DEAR MR. PAPP: I have your letter of April 9, 1990, and must admit that it causes me great concern. As you know, the law which you are asked to acknowledge was not one of our asking nor one which I thought necessary. Obscenity was illegal prior to that law, and of course is still illegal after it. Our reason for including it in the grant materials was to assure that all of our grantees were aware of this new legislation affecting fiscal year 1990.

With your record of 35 years of extraordinary service to the field and productions which have received artistic acclaim from all corners of the world, I cannot imagine that you would run afoul of this law. I also cannot give you legal advice, however, and suggest that you contact legal counsel to discuss your concerns.

I deeply regret that this language causes such concern. I hope you will be able to accept the grant; it is richly deserved.

Sincerely,

JOHN E. FROHNMAYER.

Mr. Papp has not decided whether he will accept the money.

SOVIET AGGRESSION AGAINST LITHUANIA

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I am disappointed by President Bush's decision to defer any sanctions against the Soviet Union.

I have watched with mounting outrage and frustration as the Soviet Union has put punitive pressure on Lithuania, embargoing energy and vital necessities.

In recent weeks Soviet tanks have rolled into Vilnius. Foreign journalists have been expelled. Soviet troops have occupied Communist Party buildings, violently arrested Lithuanian patriots who deserted the army, and forcibly closed a printing press, beating Lithuanians who resisted. Moscow has reinforced KGB border forces and increased Navy patrols off the Lithuanian coast. Now the Soviets have cut off 80 percent of Lithuania's natural gas supplies and 100 percent of crude oil supplies.

Now, I understand the political problems Gorbachev is facing, but there is still no justification for abusing the Lithuanians.

The Soviets have got to get a message from the free world: You cannot keep your empire by the force of your guns. No more Brezhnev doctrine. The peoples of Eastern Europe will not stand for it, and neither will the United States.

And what has Lithuania done to incur such punishment? It wants to be independent once again.

This desire is nothing new. Ever since Lithuania was swallowed up by the Soviet Union in 1940 through the secret and cynical Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact, Lithuania has fought for its independence.

It has resisted the suppression of its national character and traditions.

It has rejected the attempts to "Russify" its population.

It has proclaimed to the world that it is a proud and independent people—not just another province of the Soviet Empire.

Lithuania led the way to freedom in the Soviet bloc.

With the support of the Lithuanian-American community, the patriots of Lithuania, and the other Baltic States, kept the spirit of freedom alive during the dark years of Soviet hegemony.

The United States, to its credit, has always refused to accept the annexation of Lithuania by the Soviet Union. Now more than ever Lithuania needs our support.

We Americans have greeted the revolution in Eastern Europe with loud cheers. And we should. To fully support freedom in Europe, we must now stand shoulder-to-shoulder with Lithuania at this critical hour.

As a Polish-American, I have followed Poland's rebirth with great pride and emotion. I know what the Lithuanians are feeling today.

Both countries have struggled for centuries to assert their unique character and independence. Both countries have been at the mercy of a huge and aggressive neighbor. Both countries have felt abandoned by the rest of the world. Both countries have bred a fierce spirit of grit and, yes, stubbornness in their people.

We Americans have been blessed with peace, freedom and friendly neighbors. It's hard for us to imagine living under the thumb of a foreign power.

Mr. President, I ask you to take a moment today to put yourself in the place of our Lithuanian brothers and sisters. Consider the immense courage demonstrated by Lithuanian patriots over the years, individually and collectively. Pretend that a foreign power has banned the symbols and traditions we hold dear—the Constitution, the "Star Spangled Banner," our many religions, our heterogeneity, our freedom to say whatever we want.

Then ask yourself what price you would pay to restore our national character. And ask yourself whether the United States should sit on the sidelines or stand up for Lithuanian independence.

Some of my constituents have already answered that question. They are raising funds for relief supplies in case the Soviet economic embargo continues. They will rally on the steps of the U.S. Capitol on June 2 while President Bush is meeting with President Gorbachev. They celebrated a special mass last Sunday at St. Alphonsus Church. They are meeting in Lithuanian Hall in Baltimore to keep abreast of events and find ways to support the movement. They are proposing economic sanctions against the Soviet Union.

My constituents are right. The United States Government has an obligation to support the Lithuanian people. I will support sanctions against the Soviets until they respect Lithuania's right to self-determination, and I hope the President will reconsider yesterday's decision.

The President should also reevaluate the upcoming summit. Should America talk with Gorbachev when Gorbachev will not talk to Lithuania?

BISHOP SAMUEL L. GREEN, JR.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, tonight in Newport News, VA, the Jurisdictional Assembly of the Church of God in Christ is joining with religious and community leaders in the peninsula area to celebrate the career of one of Virginia's most distinguished leaders, Bishop Samuel L. Green, Jr.

Tonight's dinner is in appreciation of 30 years of inspirational leadership in service to God and the community. In addition to his duties as 1 of 12 prelates of the Church of God in Christ, a denomination of 3.5 million people around the world, he serves as pastor of 2 churches: St. John's Church of God in Christ in Newport News, and Holiness Tabernacle Church of God in Christ half a State away in Roanoke. He serves his flock in numerous other ways, from presiding over the National Association of Black National Religious Broadcasters to sitting on the steering committee of the North American Congress on the Holy Spirit and World Evangelization.

Bishop Green has used his talents to improve the lot of his community, too. A list of the institutions to which he has given his time and effort would be extensive. Let me just cite a few. He is a life member of the NAACP, a past board member of the sickle cell anemia organization and of the Newport News General Hospital. It was my honor when I served as Governor of Virginia to appoint him to the board of visitors of his alma mater, Norfolk State University. In that position, as in so many others, he serves with dignity, grace, and distinction.

This evening, Bishop Green's family—including his wife Vivian and his nine children—his parishioners, his friends, and his colleagues are honoring a lifetime of dedication. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating this distinguished Virginian and in wishing him many more years of service to his faith and to the world at large.

WE CAN FIGHT THE DRUG PROBLEM

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, we so often read and hear stories about the shocking consequences of drug abuse: crime, murders, babies born with drug addictions, homelessness, and far too many lives wasted. Yet we rarely hear about the success stories. Two such success stories were told about Rhode Island this week. North Providence High School and Cranston High School West were each selected as outstanding drug-free schools under the Secretary's Drug-Free Schools Recognition Program.

These awards were established as part of the Federal Drug Free Schools and Communities Act. I was the principal author of this legislation which was first enacted in 1986, and have been the principal author of amendments in 1988 and in 1990 that have insured that the Federal dollar for drug-free schools programs reaches into every school district.

The awards announced this week are cause for great celebration. North Providence and Cranston West were among only 51 schools selected nationwide for this recognition. This is great news for Rhode Island, for Rhode Island's children and for Rhode Island's parents. Two awards for our small State out of 51 awards nationwide is a tremendous accomplishment for Rhode Island. But it is more than celebratory news—it is indication that we have hope of making progress in fighting the drug problem.

I am convinced that the only real way of making inroads in our battle against drugs is that of preventing drug use before it starts. Cutting the supply is critical, but there will be no real victory until we can eradicate the demand. That is why our drug education programs are so important. Early education and prevention programs through our schools are the most powerful weapons we have in our grasp. It is important that these programs emphasize the negative ramifications of drug use. They must teach students about how drugs affect their bodies and ultimately their lives. But this kind of education will have no real toe hold by itself. It must be coupled with educational programs which emphasize the positive—through building self-esteem, or encouraging dedicated involvement in activities such as sports and clubs.

There is an ever-growing commitment on the part of schools, communities, and State and local governments to fight the drug battle on school grounds. Congress has placed this fight at the top of its national concerns. For example, the current Federal Drug Free Schools and Communities Act began in 1986 as a modest initiative. Today, that program is the fourth largest Federal elementary and secondary educational assistance program, providing more than $2.25 million in Federal assistance to Rhode Island's schools.

It is not too alarmist to recognize that all children are vulnerable to the terrible dangers of drug abuse and dependency. But North Providence and Cranston West have proved that this does not have to be the case. I am greatly encouraged by the progress reached by these schools. So while we are overwhelmed by the enormity of the problem, I would urge us all—parents, teachers, students, and all of us who have so large a stake in the fight against drugs—to take the time to celebrate the success that North Providence High School and Cranston High School West have made in this endeavor.

DOD RESEARCH POLICY

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on Friday, April 20, the Department of Defense reversed its decades-old policy of supporting high technology. By removing a strong director of the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency [DARPA] and curtailing DARPA's activities, the Bush administration has made a radical departure in national policy that will leave the country weaker.

During two World Wars and through eight postwar administrations, the defense agencies of this Nation have worked to ensure that the United States is second to none in defense-related technology. DOD has supported a broad range of technologies that have not only given America the most advanced weapons but also helped to create whole new industries such as aerospace and computers that have contributed to economic prosperity as well as military strength.

This established policy rested on two fundamental premises: that the U.S. military must have a technological edge in order to offset the superior numbers and the unpredictable contigencies our forces might face, and that the country must have strong and reliable domestic sources of that advanced technology.

This traditional policy has not been a partisan one. The last administration, like Democratic and Republican administrations before it, understood and supported the idea of a strong defense technology base. Particularly after the Toshiba affair showed the dangers of lagging behind foreign sources of important technology, the Reagan Defense Department moved to strengthen the technology base further. The previous administration particularly recognized that in today's world a nation cannot have strong defense technology without having strong technology in general. Many of the key innovations that the military needs now come from the commercial sector. The Reagan Defense Department did not assume responsibility for the entire U.S. civilian technology base, nor should it have. But in those selected technical areas where DOD has become very reliant on civilian technology, these officials did support fundamental engineering research. Largely through DARPA, and with strong congressional support, these officials created Sematech and boosted investment in critical dual-use technologies such as high-definition displays.

Until last Friday, DARPA continued this policy inherited from the Reagan administration. But last Friday, the Deputy Secretary of Defense fired Dr. Craig Fields as head of DARPA, apparently because of his continued support for research into dual-use technologies such as high-definition displays. The Bush administration has apparently decided it no longer wants to foster U.S. technological leadership, opting instead to buy its high-definition displays and other advanced technology from foreign sources. Recent history has taught us to be wary about dependence on foreign sources. But that lesson is now being ignored. Moreover, now our Government apparently will use taxpayer defense dollars to strengthen major economic competitors.

I strongly object to this fundamental change in American defense policy. I object to the retreat from our longstanding principle of maintaining strong U.S. technological leadership. I object to a policy shift which will leave this country weaker.

Unfortunately, however, the problem goes even deeper. Firing the head of DARPA is part of a Bush administration pattern. This crowd has slowly begun to show an interest in civilian technology needs, but their overall preference is still to do little or nothing even in the face of large, sustained efforts by the Japanese and Europeans to target the key technologies and industries of the future. Government-industry cooperation in Japan is beating the pants off of us, but many of President Bush's economic and military advisers ignore that success. They prefer their economic world of make-believe, believing, in the face of contrary evidence, that nations can remain technologically and industrially strong without any government involvement. DOD's own reports now show that the United States is losing ground in a wide range of fundamental technologies, but I see little White House concern for the effects that this loss will have for American companies, American jobs, American wealth, and American national security.

President Bush has now been in office for 15 months. His administration has had time to fill major posts, study major issues, and formulate policy. If the President and his senior economic and defense advisers indeed care at all about the long-term technological, military, and economic strength of the Nation, so far they not shown that concern. They certainly have not shown any commitment to reverse our decline, nor have they presented a concrete policy to improve the situation. Now, in fact, they have taken a major step backward with this decision at DARPA. The whole business is a sorry commentary on Government leadership.

Mr. President, through resolute vigilance and action the United States has won the cold war. But it is now losing the economic war, the global contest to determine which countries will control the technologies, industries, wealth, and military capabilities of the future. As early as the 19th century, Japanese leaders spoke of the "peacetime war," and they have waged it with impressive skill and diligence. Today, they are winning the economic contest, and we are losing. Our Government, though, pretends that we are not even in a race.

Mr. President, I do not want to bash Japan; I want to compete with Japan. I do want to bash Washington. The country is ready to roll up its sleeves and get to work, not surrender without a fight. Our business leaders, our scientists and engineers, and our military leaders are all willing to work hard to restore U.S. technological leadership and the pride and national strength that this leadership will bring. But without any show of interest or political leadership from the executive branch, this country will continue to decline. Unfortunately, the Bush White House is more concerned about opposing government than in competing with Japan and Europe.

Firing Craig Fields will please ideologues in the White House and certainly will bring some rejoicing in foreign capitals. But this step can bring only sadness to Americans who care about the future of their country.

LITHUANIA

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I have heard several of my colleagues in the last couple of days make comments concerning Lithuania, and maybe expressing some concern over the lack of action or strong enough action by our administration and by our Government.

I would like to encourage the President to be—I guess I would use the term—"more forceful" in his public announcements dealing with Lithuania. I would encourage him to make some sanctions, maybe limited sanctions, and maybe that would deal with suspension of trade talks with the Soviet Union. Maybe it would deal with temporarily denying exporting certain goods to the Soviet Union, particularly high technology items, certainly any items that might be used in the military complex. I would urge the administration to consider credit to Lithuania, credit for purchasing energy or other items that have been curtailed or embargoed by the Soviet Union to Lithuania.

Likewise, I would encourage the President to publicly encourage our friends and allies to help alleviate the situation, the shortages that will occur in Lithuania. Maybe that is encouraging our friends in Germany; maybe it is encouraging our friends in Norway, Sweden, and others to help supply some of the resources which will be curtailed to the Lithuanian people.

I think it is vitally important that we stand for freedom, and that we acknowledge the valiant and courageous attempt by the Lithuanian people as they strive for independence.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, we are still working, attempting to obtain approval to proceed to the supplemental appropriations bill today. I expect that we will be in a position to know finally whether we will be able to go to it today or not. As I indicated earlier, that requires consent. I hope we will be able to get to it. I would like to act on it as promptly as possible. We should know shortly.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I ask that there be a period for morning business until the hour of 4:15 p.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, inquiry of the Chair. We are in morning business for statements, are we not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, very soon the Senate will be considering whether to impose the death penalty for a broad range of Federal crimes.

Some of my colleagues and I plan to oppose this legislation, and we thought it would be useful, prior to floor consideration, to point out some of the weaknesses of the arguments for those who support capital punishment.

Take, for example, the tired old argument that the death penalty is a deterrent. Look at the FBI's latest crime statistics. In 1987, the average murder rate per 100,000 people of the 37 States with the death penalty was 6.94.

Let me repeat that: Those 37 States with the death penalty have an average per 100,000 of 6.94 murders, while the average murder rate in the 13 States without the death penalty, per 100,000, was 5.1. That is 5.1 against 6.94, almost 7.

In 1988, the murder rate in States with capital punishment rose to 7.06, but in those States without the death penalty, it dropped to 4.72.

The facts are clear. The statistics are there, unchallengeable, offered by our own FBI, that capital punishment is not a deterrent. In fact, people living in States with the death penalty are more likely to be murdered, by the statistics of the FBI.

When my colleagues who are in favor of capital punishment trot out this old argument that the death penalty deters violent crime, I hope they will keep these statistics in mind, and I hope they will look at their own States to see whether or not they can speak with accuracy as to their proposal that the death penalty is a deterrent.

There are 37 States, and probably, according to at least the past record of the debate on this floor, most of the advocates come from those States, I hope they will then explain to the Senate why they are advocating the death penalty as a deterrent, when their own State statistics do not bear them out or provide them with the undergirding of accurate data.

Mr. President, we are going to have a series of these minutes on the question of the death penalty from time to time in anticipation of that meeting and major debate in this session. I am very happy to lead it off. We are very happy to have the support of the ACLU and other groups who have great legal expertise and who are providing a great amount of data to argue in opposition to the imposition of the death penalty.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to commend my good and dear friend from Oregon, Senator HATFIELD, on his comments.

I am one of the few Members of the U.S. Senate who has prosecuted murder cases, investigated murder cases, tried murder cases. In a couple of instances, I have even been the target of those who eventually were prosecuted.

The real deterrent to crime is the understanding that one will be caught and prosecuted. The death penalty is not a deterrent; it is the fact that criminals may get caught that is a deterrent.

My State of Vermont has the lowest murder rate per capita of any State in the Union, and it also does not have a death penalty, which goes to the thesis of the Senator from Oregon.

Too often we look for a simplistic way out of these issues. Too often we ask ourselves, "When are we going to stop crime?" Nobody is in favor of crime. We are all opposed to crime. We are all trying to stop the drug traffic. We are all opposed to it. But we look for quick, easy answers and solutions. If there were a quick, easy solution, we would not have a problem with drugs, murder, or crime, because we would have used the quick, easy solution. There is none.

There is good law enforcement. There are well-trained police officers and adequate courts and correctional facilities. And there is also good education, from the time someone first goes into grade school all the way up. There are the efforts to hold families together and to have a decent family life with the proper respect and responsibility and the proper attitudes of parents and children, and vice versa. There is the community infrastructure itself that encourages a moral upbringing.

There are a lot of other things necessary to fight crime. There are efforts to eradicate the driving poverty that will bring some to say, "Let us go in to the sale of drugs, and then we can have that car we could never own otherwise, or those clothes, or dozens of pairs of high-priced sneakers."

Mr. President, these are all issues that have to be addressed in myriad ways, from law enforcement to education, to corrections, to prosecution, to the family, to providing jobs, to health care, to a whole host of other things.

But it has been often said, and I forget who first said it, "For every problem there is a solution that is easy, simple and usually wrong," or something to that effect. The death penalty is an easy, simple and wrong solution to crime. That is why I could not hear the Senator from Oregon speak about the death penalty without commenting, although, I have found in my 16 years here that, when the Senator from Oregon speaks, I usually listen.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator.

THE DIRE EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader was just on the floor, saying that he was going to once again seek unanimous consent, as I understand it, to go to the dire emergency supplemental. I hope that that consent is given to him. I understand that our friends on the Republican side now object to going forward with the supplemental. I think that is a mistake. We have worked hard to get this supplemental up. Yesterday—it was really sort of an extraordinary hour—the Appropriations Committee met under the distinguished leadership of Senator BYRD at 5 o'clock. I think by 7 o'clock we had gone through all of that.

I can address myself to only one part. I am the chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee. The President of the United States has said that he wanted foreign aid for Nicaragua in time for today's inaugural of Mrs. Chamorro, and he wants foreign aid for Panama for next week's visit of President Endara. There is money for foreign aid for Panama. There is money for foreign aid for Nicaragua in that bill.

Some may agree or disagree with the amounts, maybe there will be amendments to change those amounts, but those are issues that we will wait and see. But the fact is we all know that once that supplemental bill passes, there will be money in some amount for Nicaragua, there will be money in some amount for Panama.
